No film fires

in any Fox Theatres

Mr. Fox, one of the founders of, as well as one of the leaders in the motion picture industry, has long been noted for his penetrating foresight. When the Sentry Safety Control was brought to his attention, he quickly decided to utilize now what some day everyone will have. His decision was made as soon as he was convinced that the device provided 100% safety from film fires for his patrons and employes.

William Fox has agreed to install SENTRY SAFETY CONTROL [the positive fire-preventer] in each of the FOX CIRCUIT THEATRES; also in all his laboratories and studios.

Such an endorsement of SENTRY SAFETY CONTROL by such a man tells its own story.

ANITA LOOS and JOHN EMERSON who made so much money out of me, they've retired.

I think it is perfectly wonderful that I'm to meet all you nice exhibitor gentlemen. Since Miss Anita Loos told people about me in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" it seems that I am famous. I mean the book sold over a million copies and the play by Miss Loos and Mr. Emerson was such a big success, and now Paramount has put me in the moving pictures—a girl cannot really be blamed for feeling people just naturally like her. Everybody says "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" on the screen is sure to make a lot of money for you gentlemen. Of course art is everything, but money is nice too.

The Presentation Problem

Harold Franklin's Views and Theatre Classification

By William A. Johnston

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN writes us: "I took much pleasure in reading your editorial, 'Highlights of 1927' and was much interested in your summary.

"I do not entirely agree with you that 'presentations' are as serious a problem as some in the industry are inclined to feel. There are theatres where 'presentations' are absolutely essential. I refer particularly to the large capacity, weekly change theatres that must give their public a varied entertainment of stabilized quality and you and I know that every motion picture and every feature is not always of sufficient even quality to maintain large grosses, and there is very little doubt the 'presentation', properly handled, goes a long way toward maintaining an even gross.

"There are theatres where 'presentations' are entirely unnecessary. I refer, particularly, to the long run type of theatre, where pictures of distinction are especially chosen and which, because of their small capacities, can operate profitably on the draw of the pictures alone. However, it will be conceded that the true progress of the motion picture began with the so-called de luxe theatre, which was nothing more than a 'presentation' house. When the Strand Theatre, New York, under the direction of S. L. Rothafel, opened its doors, a new meaning was given to motion picture entertainment. The important part of that entertainment was the 'presentation' features.

"Where small theatres are concerned, in limited communities, 'presentations' do not belong, because it is impossible for such communities to support entertainment of sufficient high quality to mean anything at the box office. Therefore, when the subject of 'presentations' is discussed, its justification depends on the type of theatre involved".

In common with everybody else in the industry, we have great respect for Mr. Franklin's views, because he is at the top of his profession as a theatre expert.

What he is really urging, as we see it, is the classification of theatres—a point we have often stressed. Something has been done along that line in detached instances, but the major problem is still unsolved.

Of course, Mr. Franklin, in citing the example of Roxy at the Strand, is making the same point we do: the 'presentations' there were essentially backgrounds and atmosphere for the picture, which was the chief attraction. So long as the presentation keeps its proper place, it strengthens the program.

And, as he says, some form of presentation is necessary in the big houses. That era began in 1913 at the Strand. Unfortunately, however, houses which have no business putting on presentations follow the example of the big theatres. They did it when the Strand policy was inaugurated and they are doing it today.

The test, the vital thing—and we are sure Mr. Franklin would agree—is that the picture should not be subordinated. Everything on the program should be supplemental. If this is done, all is well, But we regret to say that many theatres have run away with themselves and are, as we have hitherto maintained, overfeeding the public and injuring the industry as a whole.

"The Noose"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 31—"The Noose" will strengthen the position of Richard Barthelmess as a star. It is a stern, uncompromising sort of picture, but it will make the patrons of the theatres talk. A mother-love theme is the high-light, and it is big.

Henry Hobart produced "The Noose" for First National, with John Francis Dillon as director. In the cast, beside Barthelmess, are Alice Joyce, Montague Love and Lina Basquette.

From the standpoint of humanness, "The Noose" takes a place with the best films produced during the past year. Adapted from a stage play by Willard Mack, the story relates the tragedy of a youth forced into a gangster's life by a man he recognizes as his father.

The boy's "father" becomes involved in a gang war. He shoots the head of a rival bootlegger group. The police are on his trail. His friends think the game is up for him, but he has a "card up his sleeve."

This "card," it turns out, is the knowledge he possesses that the mother of the boy, with whom he had lived, is now the wife of the governor of the state. He tells the boy that he will have to connive with him to use knowledge so that he may go free, and, in a frenzy at this dastardly scheme, the youth shoots and kills him.

There follows a murder trial in which the boy is convicted. Much sympathy is aroused for him, however, and the matter of securing a pardon is taken before the governor. That official, though devoted to duty, expresses a willingness to act, provided the boy will tell him the reason he committed the crime. The youth refuses, reiterating only that the man whom he shot was "no good."

All this time the wife of the governor takes an amazing and sympathetic interest in the case, although she is unaware that the boy is her own son.

The impression is given that he had been executed, until the following morning, when it is made known that, just before the hanging, a mysterious telephone call was received that the governor had stayed the execution because "the boy's mother was coming to see him."

It would be difficult to describe the poignancy of the scenes between Barthelmess and Miss Joyce, wherein the former declines to disclose his identity. They are as fine as any scenes recently produced. After his sentence is finally stayed by the governor, the mother kisses her son, even then remaining oblivious as to who he is, except for the strange, uncanny and intuitive feeling that she has. This scene and the final one, which shows Barthelmess departing and gazing longingly back at her over his shoulder, cause this film to be great.

The capital punishment angle may cause some argument, and there are spots in the working out of the melodramatic plot that do not ring quite true, but as a production "The Noose" will not suffer very much on this account. It is a picture that is due for a great reaction from the mass of theatregoers.

Fire Destroys Smalley's Johnstown House

Smalley's theatre in Johnstown, N. Y., operated by William Smalley, of Cooperstown, owner of a chain of a dozen or more motion picture theatres, in New York state, was burned to the ground on the afternoon of January 2, with the resultant loss of over $200,000. The fire was one of the most spectacular in many months in the Mohawk Valley. Firemen from both Johnstown and Gloversville fought the blaze for three hours or more with zero temperature prevailing. The blaze is thought to have originated from a defective pipe in the boiler room. It was discovered about one-half hour before the matinee. The fire was then working its way through the floor and the crackling was noticed by the janitor and the house electrician, the only two persons who were in the theatre at the time.

The theatre was built in 1889 and was being operated by Mr. Smalley under a twenty-year lease. There was over 11,000 feet of film stored in the booth and this added impetus to the flames as they swept upward and through the building. Adjoining structures were also damaged.

Walter Camp, Jr., Member Art Cinema Corp. Board

Walter Camp, Jr., son of Walter Camp, the father of football, has been elected a member of the Board of directors of the Art Cinema Corporation, the film financing organization of which Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, is the head. Since 1924 Mr. Camp has been president of Inspiration Pictures, Inc., a post which he will continue to fill. Mr. Camp has acquired a considerable interest in Art Cinema Corporation, making him one of the largest stockholders, Mr. Schenck said.

Camp's producing organization, Inspiration Pictures, has been granted a three-year contract by United Artists. Six Inspiration pictures are to be released in the three-year period by United Artists.

Work Started by First National on Buildings

Work on the new buildings at First National's West Coast Studios, to augment the plant of the organization, was started this week with foundation building. The new structures will include additional executive offices, more dressing rooms and wardrobe buildings and also provision for housing a special photographic and miniature department.

The First National Studios were erected less than two years ago at a cost of two-and-a-half million dollars. The new buildings will cost about half a million dollars.

H. S. Hancock Business Head of Kinograms

Baynes, president of the newsreel corporation. The new position does not interfere with Mr. Hancock's work as Kinograms editor, in which post he continues.

Inside Slants on the Industry

PICTURES AND PEOPLE

The Mirrors of Filmdom

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has launched an attack against American film actors who seek to bar foreign players from Hollywood studios.

He states that it is vital that foreigners should realize that this movement is not countenanced by successful players or producers. The dangers of misunderstanding are so great that if those responsible do not desist, Mr. Goldwyn announces he will appeal to his fellow producers to start a counter-publicity drive which will make their position unmistakable.

The producer declares that it is ridiculous that invaluable foreign friendships should be menaced by the unauthorized and unrepresentative outbursts of less than one per cent of the American industry; further, that only incompetents fear foreign competition.

Successful players, according to Mr. Goldwyn, welcome it, knowing that American producers have combed the world for the best artists, in order that American films may be acceptable everywhere. Mr. Goldwyn also says that foreign revenue and foreign friends would disappear if the American industry descended into the provincialism this group demands.

IN conjunction with the international situation, an interview with Arthur Loew obtained by the United Press in Paris recently, is of great interest.

"If Europe can ever produce in quantity films like some she has turned out in the past year, American films will go begging," the U. P. quotes Mr. Loew as saying, "but I shall welcome the day when we get real competition from Europe.

"If I could get enough good films abroad to round out a program of carefully picked American films, I would shut down my own studios, since there is much greater risk in the production of films than there is in the exhibiting of them.

"America must make herself understand that Europe is out to take the film supremacy away from her, and will undoubtedly find a big market in America some day."

WE are considerably interested in an interview with Irving Thalberg, written by Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Thalberg expressed the opinion that there are too many "knockers" in the industry and that both exhibitor and producer are taking too apologetic an attitude. Mr. Thalberg's views follow in part:

"THERE are very few critics or other writers on the subject of motion pictures who are really 'for' pictures in the sense that writers are for baseball, or any other of the popular institutions of this country. What the films need today more than they ever did, is a spirit of loyalty to the film art.

"We are making more good pictures today than ever before and they are more accurate and authentic than they have ever been. We are going further afield than we have ever gone in our quest for types. We do not choose simply those personalities that are known but those that fit the interpretation we desire.

"In making a picture we secure the best technical advice that we can obtain. The accumulation of experts has been exceedingly beneficial to the character of pictures and there is no question about their improvement but the difficulties surrounding the making of the epoch-making film have multiplied during the past few years due to these very improvements.

"Today we are facing an attitude of skepticism regarding pictures on this account. The industry has a preponderance of knockers. Many of these reject the more serious efforts of the picture producer on the ground that they are not quite satisfactory for some reason or other or that they do not meet with the individual approval of the knocker.

"This attitude is very dangerous for the future. It has a tendency to discourage the producer from serious effort and lead him to resort to that type of hokum which he knows from experience is sure-fire, which doesn't cost as much and which brings, as a rule, good returns at the box-office.

"I believe that the producer and exhibitor today is exhibiting too apologetic an attitude," Mr. Thalberg continued. "This has been typical of the motion picture industry ever since the beginning and as a result we have been patronized by famous writers and authorities who have deluded some of us into the idea that we are in an inferior line of endeavor.

"I believe there has been some tendency to permit ourselves to be deluded into a sort of psychological depression. The time has come to look the facts squarely in the eye, put the dangerous knocker in the background where he belongs and realize that production is entering on a new epoch—on a higher level of excellence than any that have gone before."

"KNOCKING" for the mere sake of being sensational or posing as a great authority is, of course, indefensible. Constructive criticism, however, is useful and necessary, and constructive criticism does not mean always saying pleasant things.

We believe, with Mr. Thalberg, that pictures are on a higher level of excellence than ever before. So far as any "psychological depression" is concerned, we should not be greatly surprised to find that, if it exists, it may be attributed, first, to underplaying the picture in the public mind by overplaying "presentation"; and, second, failing to advertise pictures properly within the industry.

These two factors seem to us far more likely to create depression among the workers of the films than anything the smart-Aleck critics on the outside or the inside may say.

WE again call the industry's attention to the fact that the overplaying of "presentations" is attracting adverse comment in the daily press.

The latest instance is found in a signed article, prominently displayed, in the St. Louis Times. The writer argues for the separation of the different forms of entertainment into their own provinces and remarks:

"There is one dragon that must be killed, and that is excessive vaudeville. This refers only to the staging of low and medium class vaudeville and not to the atmospheric prologue artistically presented to enhance the film.

"The picture is becoming not so much the feature as the stage show. The photoplay suffers the cutting of interesting scenes and often the hasty projecting of the reels in order to display stage attractions frequently more than half the bill.

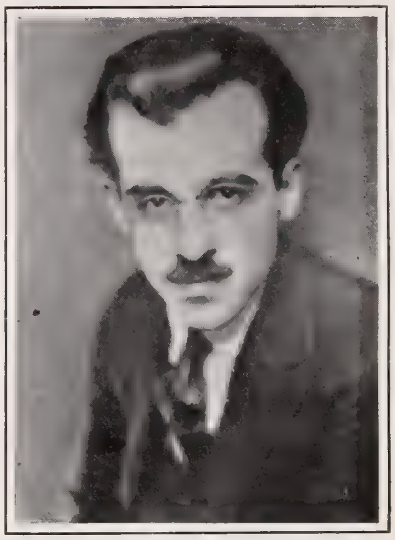
"A goodly percentage of patrons, who are surfeited with the song and dance noise, remain away from the pictures until attracted by a super-spectacle. The 'reel' feature is being overshadowed. The vaudeville should not impinge upon the pictures, and the pictures should remain independent of extraneous entertainment."

Lupino Lane entertains E. W. Hammons, Educational president. The garb of the irrepressible Lupino harkens back to the days of the Caesars. Lane has something new in his forthcoming comedy—gladiatorial combat and the like in the Roman arena

Charles Farrell and Walter Pidgeon, Fox Film players, try their luck in contrasting conveyances. Farrell's latest role is in "The Street Angel," and Pidgeon's is in "Woman Wise," both recently finished at the Fox studios

Jack Holt, who can make those "he-man" roles seem real, has been signed by Columbia to star in five pictures. "The Tigress" and "The Warning" are his latest

Here's how they shoot a close-up of legionnaires sweltering under the powerful Sahara sun. On the "truck" can be seen Edward Sloman (in the pith helmet), who directs the scene while the "truck" is pulltd along the runaway. The picture is Universal's "The Foreign Legion"



Erno Rapee, baton-wielder over the Roxy Symphony Orchestra, celebrates this month his tenth year as a musical director in Broadway movie houses

Director Jack Conway carefully primps up Bill Haines, M-G-M's "smart Aleck of the screen," for a drunk sequence in the new Haines vehicle, "The Smart Set," an original story about polo by Byron Morgan

Fred Niblo, with all seriousness and intensity, demonstrates the proper method of doing a certain scene in United Artists' "The Passionate Adventure." Listening to him are Noah Beery, Vilma Banky, Harry Schultz and Lon Poff

A FEW paragraphs above, we spoke of advertising and its effect on morale. Just as important is its effect on sales.

There's a thought—and a big one—in the statements by two authorities that advertising expenditures will show an increase in 1928. We are speaking of national advertisers in the general field.

This increase, according to C. K. Woodbridge, president of the International Advertising Association, is a safe prediction, "because advertising, essentially a factor used in selling nowadays, rides side by side with all other factors that are used to promote business enterprise. As business grows, so will advertising."

William A. Hart, president of the Association of National Advertisers, declares that expansion in advertising "is in line with the thought of those who have studied the effects of well planned and well directed advertising, and who have noted the important part it has played in recent years in increasing markedly the sales of products concerned."

A NOVEL Christmas effect, devised by Harry Ruben, supervisor of projection for Publix Theatres, was shown at the Paramount Theatre. Through the use of a fourth projector, mounted on a revolving pedestal, the figure of Santa Claus was made to appear, apparently out of space, on the right side of the theatre and then cross the screen to the left, where it disappeared. The stunt made a decided hit with holiday audiences.

CHAPLIN'S announcement that he is going to screen his idea of Napoleon Bonaparte, without appearing in the star part himself, means that Charlie is returning to the role of director of a serious photoplay. We say returning, because it will be recalled that he essayed the serious in "A Woman of Paris." It will be an interesting experiment in art. Yes, art. For the very good reason that Mr. Chaplin is one of the few artists this industry ever produced.

While we are on the subject of pictures: turn to Edwin Schallert's advance review on "The Noose" elsewhere in this issue. Evidently, First National has a corking fine picture here.

A COMMONSENSE view of contingents was expressed the other day in Le Temps, powerful French newspaper, by a writer who declared:

"The question of the 'contingent' continues to arouse arguments in motion picture circles. The problem has now entered into a new phase. Mr. Herriot desires to end the controversy by means of an official intervention of the government. He formed a commission at the Ministry of Public Instruction and Beaux Arts, and this commission, the members of which know what they are doing, immediately named a sub-commission to study the question. The first reports have been handed in and already objections have been made.

"The principle of protection of the French producing industry brings into conflict opposing interests. It is only on election posters that the 'disinterested patriotism' of merchants plays an important role in the equilibrium of their budget. Too human they are! Our Legislators cannot ignore this and it is their duty to take it into account.

"We have seen what the contingent experience did in Germany. Now Great Britain wants to try the same system. The President of the Board of Trade induced the House of Commons to pass a law which requires every British film distributor to reserve 7 per cent of his releases for British films. This percentage will be increased to 10 per cent the next year, and will reach 20 per cent in ten years. On the other hand exhibitors must reserve 5 per cent of the screen time of their shows for home productions. This figure will also increase progressively until it reaches 20 per cent in ten years. This law, passed by an enormous majority in the House of Commons, will undoubtedly be passed by the House of Lords. But even now, producers and exhibitors are protesting violently.

"Everywhere we see the problem posed in the same way. To produce and release a 'home production' is represented as a punishment, a penalization and a sacrifice. American films only can be used to make up profitable programs, not intellectual, but quite sufficient for the masses. There lies the whole problem and all the laws of the world cannot change it. German films in Germany, British films in Great Britain, French films in France are heavy burdens to the distributors and exhibitors. How can they be lightened? Public officials believe that they can force them to be accepted, as was done with the assignats, (Note: paper money, forced on the people during the Revolutionary Days), in spite of the protests of our merchants. Evidently, it is an opinion and we shall soon see its practical value. Its most important advantage may be that it will attract financiers and capitalists to an industry the products of which will be mathematically marketed.

"Up to the present time our directors have only been able to obtain capital by appealing to protectors or audacious silent partners who have decided to take a 'plunge' with their money. If French films are forced on exhibitors it will be easier to obtain money for production from banks. And we shall reach, in this way, the real solution of the problem, which is the methodical amelioration of our national production. Whenever a French film is really a chef-d'oeuvre, rest assured that it will not be difficult to market it, and as a result it will be a profitable work.

"Above all, that is what our producers should have in view. If the contingent brings about, indirectly, this result, let us hail it with enthusiasm. But if the security which our producers expect from it leads them to fall asleep on account of their success, mathematically certain, this law will have delivered the death blow to an industry already in agony. You can't write the history of an art with decrees and customs regulations. If our 'protectionists' don't understand it and curl up lazily behind a defensive wall which they have built up, they will never wake up."

Loew's to Withdraw from Dallas and Publix to Take Over Melba

THAT Loew's will withdraw from the Dallas field is seen in the announcement that the Melba in that city is to be operated under a new policy with its reopening on January 15th probably as a Publix house. The customary notice of two weeks on closing was posted for employees last week.

If the Melba becomes a Publix house it is likely it will have a large symphony orchestra and atmospheric prologues of feature pictures instead of serving as a combination picture and vaudeville house, under which policy it brought heavy losses to Loew's. It is also said that under the new regime Vitaphone will be installed. There is no downtown house in Dallas at present equipped with Vitaphone.

Despite heavy losses which were followed by a fire, Loew rebuilt the theatre and reopened it last September, but the losses under the combination policy are said to have been continued, with prospects that they would have become heavier in the future.

Smith Repeats Message

N. Y. Governor Again Tells Legislature He Is Much Opposed to Picture Censorship

IN his annual message to the New York State Legislature, delivered on Wednesday noon, January 4, at Albany, Governor Alfred E. Smith once more declared himself in emphatic terms as against the censorship of motion pictures. In view of the fact that Governor Smith may become the Democratic party's candidate for the presidency a few months hence, his annual message to the Legislature this year may be regarded as of national importance. The message was the eighth, and as he said in his opening "the last one" which he will present to the Legislature. The message was a long one, possibly reaching 35,000 words, and constituted both a review of the past several years while Governor Smith has been at the helm of New York state and also many suggestions and recommendations as to the future.

"In the hectic days following the close of the war, under the false impression that we were protecting the ideals of our government," said Governor Smith, "some were trodden under foot. In the mad rage for what was thought necessary for our protection we attempted to throttle freedom of speech. The sanctity of the field of education was invaded by requiring private schools to be licensed by the state in order that we might censor the doctrines taught by them. A censorship over moving pictures was set up and permitted an agency of the state to condemn before the fact. We were on the high road to the ruthless trampling down of the rights of minorities, forgetting that we had upon our statute books abundant laws for the punishment of those who either by act or by speech threatened the upheaval of the orderly processes of government.

"But the good, sound, well grounded common sense of the rank and file of our people demanded the repeal of these statutes in 1923 and they were removed with my hearty executive approval just as the state was entering upon the greatest era of prosperity in its history.

"One, however, still remains and that is the state censorship of moving pictures. While I am satisfied that it should be removed from the statute books, I am equally satisfied that the state should proceed with all the force and vigor it can bring to its command to the prosecution of anybody who offends against public decency or pollutes the youth by the exhibition of improper or indecent moving pictures."

Motion picture censorship came into existence in New York state during midsummer, 1921, following the enactment of a measure into a law earlier in the year. There have been repeated efforts made by those opposed to censorship to wipe the statute from the books, but these attempts have been thwarted generally by the Republican majorities in one or both houses of the Legislature. Governor Smith has repeatedly urged the repeal of censorship and has assured its opponents that he would be only too glad to sign any bill that could muster sufficient strength to pass both houses and reach his hands. During the last year or two, however, there has not been as much interest in any attempt toward repealing censorship as there was back in 1922 and 1923.

John Eberson to Plan Theatre at Marion, O.

John Eberson, prominent Chicago theatre architect, has been selected to develop the plans for the new Palace Theatre, to be built at Marion, Ohio, by the Young Amusement Co., V. U. Young, president, Gary, Indiana, in which project Ed. E. Bender and Sol Bernstein, Canton, Ohio, are also interested. The building is to house five stores and seven apartments in addition to the theatre.

Harrisburg Box-Office Wrecked by Eager Fans

Every pane of glass in the box office booth in the center of the lobby of the Victoria Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., was shattered and the booth almost swept away by a crowd struggling to get into the theatre for a midnight New Year's show, held at 12.01 o'clock, Monday morning, January 2. The show was held at the early hour to avoid conflict with the Pennsylvania blue laws of 1794, which prohibits amusements on Sunday.

The crowd began to assemble in front of the theatre at 10.30 o'clock Sunday night. The temperature was 11 above zero and the throng clamored to get in out of the cold. The management opened the doors to the inner lobby but not the doors from the lobby to the theatre auditorium. Those on the edge of the crowd, however, thought the doors were open all the way and pushed to get in. It was then the box office was wrecked.

Manager Lee Levy, of the Victoria, said the crowd, which had lined up for a block in both directions, was the largest that ever tried to obtain admittance at the theatre. The feature of the program was Adolph Menjou in "Serenade."

Eight-Year Suit Ends in Favor of Stockholders

Stockholders of the Miles Theatre Co., formerly operators of the New Garrick theatre in Minneapolis, were awarded a total of $351,542 as their share of the theatre's profits between 1915 and 1924 in a decision handed down this week by Federal Judge William A. Cant. The decision brought to an end a suit which has been fought in federal court for eight years. Involving a total of nearly $575,000, which the plaintiffs claimed was theirs as interest and dividend on their stock, the funds of the company will be distributed among nearly 150 stockholders. The defendants, the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, are to retain $210,070 as their share under the decree.

Judge Cant held that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the profits lost when they sold their stock to the defendants several years ago; that they retain the money given them for their stock; that they shall receive back the stock they sold, and that more than 10,000 shares of stock must be canceled.

M. L. Finkelstein, an official of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, stated that an appeal will probably be made to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Validity of Australian Film Tax in Doubt

Whether the New South Wales Act imposing a tax on films brought into that state is valid or not has not yet been answered by the High Court, states a report to the Department of Commerce from Assistant Trade Commissioner Chas. F. Baldwin, Sydney.

On November 25, by a majority, it ruled that it was impossible in the present state of the pleadings to make any conclusive order, and it gave the parties leave to amend the pleadings that the case should be argued afresh.

The majority consisted of the acting chief justice (Mr. Justice Isaacs), Mr. Justice Gavan Duffy, Mr. Justice Rich and Mr. Justice Powers, the minority comprising Mr. Justice Higgins and Mr. Justice Starke.

In reply to counsel representing the film distributing companies, who asked if it would be necessary to apply for a stay of proceedings, Mr. Justice Isaacs said that the injunction still stood preventing the Commissioner proceeding on the film tax assessments.

Radio Corp. and General Electric Acquire Interest in FBO

Westinghouse Also Included in Deal, Which Makes Sound Devices Available to Industry; Official Announcement Follows Long Negotiations

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Joseph P. Kennedy, President of FBO Pictures Corporation, that the Radio Corporation of America and its associated companies, the General Electric Company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, have acquired a substantial interest in FBO Pictures Corporation. Negotiations were concluded by Mr. Kennedy and David Sarnoff, Vice President of the Radio Corporation. Two representatives of the Radio Corporation of America and General Electric will become directors of FBO.

This announcement is of importance to the motion picture industry because the affiliation opens to motion pictures, for the first time, the tremendous resources and potentialities of radio. It will give the motion picture industry the use of all present patents and prospective developments of sound reproduction and synchronization, radio broadcasting and television of the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company.

Joseph P. Kennedy

It will bring to the motion picture business the services of the powerful engineering organizations of three great electrical companies, directing their energies and the resources of their laboratories toward the perfection of every phase of apparatus and equipment and to the exploration of new fields of electrical research in conjunction with motion picture production and exhibition.

It is announced that the devices and developments controlled by the Radio Corporation of America do not become exclusive to FBO Pictures Corporation, but that they will be available to the entire motion picture industry.

This is the first time that any great industrial organization so closely related to the motion picture business, has ever become a directly interested associate of any motion picture company. It is one of the first times in the history of all business that two organizations representing distinct industries, have associated themselves to further the common interests of both industries.

The first important development of the combination will be the presentation of a new method of sound reproduction and synchronization perfected by the General Electric Company. The General Electric method and apparatus are said to be distinctly different in principle to all other efforts in the direction of "talking movies." The equipment is so simple that it can be marketed at a price and operated at a cost which puts it within the reach of the smallest picture theatres, it is stated.

As the Radio Corporation and its associated companies concluded their experiments and found their method had reached perfection, they decided upon a direct affiliation with an established motion picture company as the most practical way of putting their plans into general operation, and selected FBO Pictures as their associate.

Negotiations have been in progress for several months between Joseph P. Kennedy, President of FBO Pictures Corporation, and David Sarnoff, vice-president of the Radio Corporation of America, which consummated this week in a deal by which the Radio Corporation acquires an important stock interest in FBO Pictures, and two representatives of the Radio Corporation and General Electric Company become directors of the Corporation.

In making the announcement, Mr. Kennedy said: "I have been vitally interested in the development of sound reproduction in conjunction with motion pictures ever since the first experiments along that line, and have watched, with eager interest, every phase of the progress that has been made toward that end.

"Long ago, I was convinced that the so-called 'talking movie' was only the first small step.

"The devices developed by the General Electric Company and the methods perfected by their engineers open the door to a development which is actually staggering in its possibilities.

"The fact that the Radio Corporation of America and its associated companies have interested themselves directly with a motion picture company is, in itself, a matter of importance."

Censor Changes May Occur in Ontario

A STRONG possibility that the motion picture censorship situation in the Province of Ontario may undergo changes during 1928 is hinted at in the reduction in the salaries of the Ontario censors which is being considered by the Ontario Government. There is a suggestion in government circles at Toronto that the actual examination of moving pictures will undergo a change inasmuch as all subjects will not be submitted to the censors. There will be no examination by the censor board, it is said, of news reels, travel pictures, educational, sport and other types of films. It is further intimated that the government may place the censor board on a part-time basis.

It is understood that the Civil Service Commissioner has recommended to the Ontario authorities that the salary of the censor board chairman and other members of the board be reduced. An interesting fact is that no successor to the late chairman of the Ontario Censor Board has been named since the death of the chairman one year ago.

"U" Forms Partnership in Kansas City

A NEW deal in Kansas City, effective immediately, is one between Universal Theatres and Midland Theatre and Realty Company, through which the latter acquires a 50 per cent interest in 24 Missouri and Kansas theatres. The deal follows the previously announced report that M. B. Shanberg, manager of Midland, which built Loew's Midland in Kansas City, had joined as head of the Sears-Harding circuit.

Under the terms of the transaction with Universal, Midland acquires a one-half interest in the following theatres: Isis, Linwood, Apollo, Gladstone and Gillham at Kansas City; Sedalia, Strand and Liberty at Sedalia; Main Street at Lexington; De Graw, Fourth Street, New Grand and Baby Grand at Moberly; Lyric at Boomville and Lyric at Marshall. The Kansas theatres involved in the deal are: Royal and Crystal at Atchison; Peoples' and Main Street at Chanute; El Dorado and Palace at Eldorado.

These houses will be operated from Kansas City in conjunction with the existing circuit with houses in Hutchinson, Sterling, Pttsburgh, Salina and Lyons, all of Kansas.

United Artists Acquires Interest in P. C. T. Subsidiary

BY arrangement with Lord Beaverbrook and his associates, United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. will take over approximately a 25 per cent interest in The New Standard Film Company, Ltd., a British company being organized to take over a block of shares representing control of Provincial Cinematograph Theatres, Ltd. Preliminary arrangements for the deal were made by Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists Theatres Circuit, Inc. on his trip to London in October.

P. C. T. is the leading motion picture theatre circuit in the British Isles. It operates a chain of 110 theatres in the larger cities of the United Kingdom and a large part of the circuit extends throughout the suburbs of London. United Artists pictures have hitherto been shown regularly in the theatres of the circuit. First National recently completed negotiations for an interest and distributing arrangement with P. C. T.

Exemption Bill Delayed

Increased Deduction from Admission Taxes Waits Upon March 15th Reports

A DELAY of several months is faced by the increased exemption from admission taxes provided in the pending revenue bill, as administration leaders await the filing of the March 15 income tax reports to learn more definitely the effect upon the Treasury's revenues of the extravagant cuts made by the House of Representatives when it passed the bill December 15.

That such a delay is desirable was admitted last week by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in responding to an inquiry from Senator Reed Smoot of Utah, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, as to what course should be pursued to comply with the requirements of the law providing for a yearly balancing of the budget. The budget, it was stressed, may be seriously affected by adoption of the House rates, in conjunction with heavy appropriations for flood control and other new legislation.

No difficulties stand in the way of postponing enactment of the tax bill until after March 15, Secretary Mellon declared. "It is apparent," he asserted, "that unless the Senate modifies the tax reduction provided for in the House bill, and unless the two Houses ultimately agree to limit tax reduction to the figure recommended by the Budget message, estimated receipts will not be adequate to meet estimated expenditures as submitted in the Budget.

"On the assumption that a tax reduction bill will become law at the present session of Congress," Mr. Mellon pointed out, "delay will occasion no loss to the taxpayers, or inconvenience either to them or to the Government from an administrative standpoint. In so far as excise taxes are concerned, it is just as easy to make their reduction or repeal effective on April 15th as it is on March 15th."

It is in this class of taxes that the increased admission-tax exemption is carried.

With respect to the other taxes—corporation and individual—it will be possible to make them retroactive, as has been done before, and, while the first instalment may be paid at the present rate, any overpayment could be taken care of in the remaining instalments, and, in the case of those who pay their tax in full in March refunds of the excess can be made.

From the standpoint of the taxpayers, the Secretary continued, it is better for them to wait until after March 15, when more reliable estimates of probable revenues can be made than are now possible, than to face the risk of getting no tax reduction at all this year or the even worse situation of a bill which provides a reduction in excess of that which revenues permit.

Tiffany-Stahl Gets Group Insurance

IN order to take care of those employees who were first with Tiffany, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of Tiffany-Stahl Productions, has secured group insurance for the entire Tiffany-Stahl organization. As Mr. Hoffman stated, "a chain is as strong as its weakest link and in the growth of Tiffany-Stahl I am not forgetting the basic foundation of that growth," the employees with the company a certain length of time were given their policies as Christmas presents.

Cleveland Exhibitor Unit Weighs Contract Change

The Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association has appointed a committee of four to suggest necessary changes in the uniform contract. They are J. J. Harwood, president of the organization; Henry H. Lustig, M. B. Horwitz, and Martin P. Brown. Harwood and Lustig were delegates from northern Ohio to the Federal Trade Conference last fall.

Three Dyersburg Houses Bought by Crescent

The deal for the purchase of three theatres in Dyersburg, Tennessee, and four in nearby West Tennessee towns from the Dyersburg Theatre Corporation by the Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, Tenn., has been concluded.

Tony Sudekum, president; Harry Sudekum, treasurer; General Manager Dean, and J. P. Masters, district manager, returned to Nashville the latter part of last week after contracts had been signed and negotiations fully completed.

The Crescent Amusement Company already operates one theatre in the city, the Palace. One of the purchased motion picture houses will be closed. The other will be operated and the road show house, the Frances, also will be operated. The Crescent Company also will continue operation of the other picture houses purchased at Ridgely, Tiptonville, Obion and Halls.

Non-Inflammable Film Co. Acquires Factory

It is officially reported that the Non-Inflammable Film Company, Ltd., has acquired from the British War Office a large factory at Lancaster, England, formerly belonging to the Ministry of Munitions, states a report to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Homer S. Fox, London. The company in question was registered recently for the announced purpose of manufacturing considerable quantities of non-inflammable film with the cellulose acetate base, as well as the production later of a number of other articles such as splinterless glass, etc., also with an acetate base. The company already has a plant understood to be in operation on a comparatively small scale at Rickmansworth, near London.

The total area of the property now being purchased from the War Office is stated to be about 34 acres, the works having been originally laid out on a large scale with over 500,000 square feet in the main building.

Theatre Notable Again Supreme Court Justice

Irving I. Goldsmith, of Saratoga Springs, New York, who is also owner of the Palace Theatre in that town besides being an important political figure in the section, has been re-appointed by Governor Smith to fill for a term of one year the post left vacant because of the death of Justice E. M. Angell.

The new justice of the Fourth District was also manager of the Palace Theatre before going into politics. This is his second appointment as justice of the Supreme Court as he was appointed last January for the first time. It is believed that he is the only man in the industry from New York State who is a Supreme Court Justice.

Judge Dismisses Suit Against U. A.

Upon consent of both parties, United States District Judge Smith Hickenlooper, Cincinnati, has dismissed without prejudice and without record at the cost of the plaintiff, the suit of the New Lyceum Amusement Company, Cincinnati, against the United Artists' Corporation, New York. In the action, the New Lyceum Amusement Co., Jules Frankel, president, operating Gifts Theatre and several other houses in Cincinnati and contiguous territory, charged that the defendant had failed to carry out contracts to provide the plaintiff with certain first-run films and sought damages totaling $208,000 with accrued interest and costs.

M. P. T. O. Will Help Training Camps

The work of developing and extending the Citizens Military Training Camp will be helped along by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, whose secretary and treasurer, M. J. O'Toole, also a major in the Officers Reserve Corps, attended a conference of chiefs of the Citizens Military Training Camp movement held in the Adjutant General's office in the War Department Building, Thursday, January 5.

Through Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America much screen publicity was given this division of the government's activities during the past year. Some theatres presented special programs, supplemented by four-minute talks by army officers and public officials. One of the principal moves this year will be to obtain a larger appropriation for the camps.

Germany Censored 63 Films in November

There were 63 feature films censored in Germany during November, 1927, of which 25 were German made and 38 foreign (25 from America), as compared with 19 domestic and 18 foreign in October, and 21 domestic and 20 foreign in September, 1927.

The total length of all films censored during November (features, educationals and news-reels) was 244,758 meters, as against 180,084 meters in October, and 174,864 meters in September, 1927. Of the total length of 244,758 meters, 55 per cent were features and 45 per cent educationals and news-reels. The German share of the total number of feature films censored during November, 1927, was 40 per cent, as against 51 per cent during October, and 51 per cent during September, 1927.

Using Films to Instruct Foreign-Born

In order to help foreign-born residents, in Washington, D. C., obtain citizenship papers, visual instruction classes are conducted by the public service and education department of the Stanley-Crandall Theatre Company, of that city.

Pictures which are shown are selected in order to show the foreigners distinctive characteristics of the United States and many sub-titles are run to familiarize students with English. The largest class which has ever attended is taking advantage of the showing of the films each Wednesday afternoon this year, it is said.

Michalove Joins Pathe; Eschmann Resigns

DAN MICHALOVE, identified with the country's theatres for a number of years, and until recently associated with Universal Theatres as general manager, and previous to that having been the Universal distributing and exhibiting head in the South, has been made southern division manager for Pathe. E. A. Eschmann has resigned as head of the Eastern division. The changes go into effect at once.

No successor to Eschmann has been mentioned.

Attack on Biechele Will Enliven Chicago Contract Meeting

THE contract committee named by the Trade Practice Conference in New York last October, is scheduled to meet in Chicago on January 31st to draft changes in the uniform contract. The coming meeting promises to be a lively one with the injection of a bit of interest because of the attack recently launched at R. R. Biechele, president of the Missouri and Kansas exhibitor unit. Biechele telegraphed to Will H. Hays pledging the continued support of his organization to Hays. This precipitated the attack on Biechele, which threatens to make a livelier session of the Chicago gathering.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, meantime, has sent a protest to Will Hays against the plan to hold the committee outside of New York. A special committee has been appointed by the T. O. C. C. to draft recommendations to the contract committee.

T. O. C. C. Launches Drive for Brookhart Bill

Passes Resolutions Endorsing Measure and Urges All Independents to Support It

THE Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York held a meeting at the Hotel Astor, December 29th, at which resolutions were adopted for the support of a bill to be introduced in Congress by Senator Smith W. Brookhart, of Iowa, concerning the general subject of blind booking, block booking and the fair allocation of motion pictures to exhibitors.

The meeting pointed out that the aims of the proposed bill were those of the independent exhibitors of the country as expressed through resolutions adopted by them at the Trade Practice Conference held in October. Not only did the Chamber of Commerce vote for the measure, but they urged the support of independent exhibitors and exhibitor organizations all over the country. They named their own committee to serve in the campaign for the adoption of the bill and pledged every influence to have the representatives of the State of New York in Congress support it.

As a part of the plan of campaign for the measure the following theatre owners will be asked to serve on the committee to plan methods to secure the adoption of the bill: J. Arthur Hirsch, chairman; Sol Raives, Charles L. O'Reilly, Wm. Brandt, Hyman Rachmil, Samuel I. Berman, Lee A. Ochs, Louis F. Blumenthal, Harry Suchman, Lee Brecher, Rudolph Sanders and A. H. Schwarts.

In addition to the names already suggested for this committee the idea is to have non-member independent theatre owners of the Metropolitan district select additional representatives for the committee who are willing to get behind the measure and lend every influence toward its passage.

A copy of the resolution of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce on the Brookhart bill has been forwarded to Senator Brookhart, and a copy has also been sent to every delegate of the unaffiliated group of the Federal Trade Conference.

When the Albany Film Board of Trade meets on January 9, there will be a discussion of the Brookhart bill, recently introduced at Washington, D. C., and which, among other things, would not permit film exchanges selling pictures not yet made. Albany's film exchanges will go on record as opposing the bill, although among the exhibitors of the city there appears to be a friendly feeling toward the measure.

Bandits Rob Kansas City Theatre for Second Time

Bandits do come back occasionally. At least they did at the Main Street Theatre, Kansas City, last Monday night, and it cost the management $10,000, which represented the receipts of Saturday, Sunday and Monday. Two bandits recently kidnaped Taylor Myers, manager of the theatre, and took him to the theatre in an effort to force him to open the safe. Myers told the bandits there was a time-clock on the safe and that it would sound an alarm if opened. "That's tough," responded one of the bandits, "but we'll come back again." Monday night the bandits entered the business office while the show was in progress, and while a houseful of patrons were getting a thrill out of a motion picture the bandits walked through the long lobby and out into the street with the loot.

Offers Home-Made Movies to Edmonton Patrons

A home-made moving picture stunt obtained big business for the Capitol Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, under the direction of Manager Walter P. Wilson. A cash prize of $25 was offered for the best scenario and Manager Wilson had the choice of 160 stories and, in addition, an "Our Gang" comedy was made with local children impersonating the well-known juvenile characters. The two pictures were shot on the stage at performances and around the city during one week and were then screened the following week, 4,000 feet of film being used.

The stunt was worked in co-operation with the Edmonton Bulletin, this newspaper devoting considerable space to the feature.

Harold Lloyd Plans Two Releases for 1928—First to be "Speedy"

PRIOR to his departure for Hollywood, an announcement was made by William R. Fraser, general manager for the Harold Lloyd Corp., that Harold Lloyd would make two pictures in 1928. The first picture, 'Speedy,' which is now being previewed on the Coast, will be ready for release by Easter, and the second, it is expected, will be released in October. Mr. Fraser's announcement follows four weeks of conferences with Paramount executives in New York on distribution plans.

"Harold Lloyd establishes a precedent in his production policies this season," said Fraser, "in that he will take but a two weeks' vacation before starting work on his next comedy, which he intends to have ready for release in October. Heretofore Lloyd has rested several months between pictures though carrying on research work for future vehicles, but this year he has arranged his schedule so that the necessary preliminary work for the picture to follow 'Speedy' was carried on while the star was engaged in filming his current production."

32 "U" Features in Work

Seven Productions in Cutting Room, Seven Before Camera and Balance Being Prepared

UNIVERSAL has thirty-two features in various stages of production at the company's studios at Universal City. Some of these are already in the cutting room, others are at present actually in production and still others are being prepared for shooting at an early date.

The seven pictures now in the actual camera stage are: ''Freedom of the Press,'' by Peter B. Kyne; ''The Man Who Laughs,'' by Victor Hugo; ''Fallen Angels,'' by Arthur Somers Roche; ''Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?'', by Gladys Lehman and Leigh Jacobson; ''We Americans,'' by Max Siegel; ''Home, James,'' by Gladys Johnson, and ''Hoofbeats of Vengeance.''

Seven features are also in the cutting room. They are: ''A Trick of Hearts,'' Hoot Gibson's latest; ''Meet the Prince,'' with Glenn Tryon; ''The Foreign Legion,'' a Norman Kerry picture; ''Finders Keepers,'' a Laura La Plante comedy; ''Hot Heels,'' a Glenn Tryon comedy; ''Thoroughbreds,'' with Marian Nixon and Richard Walling, and ''Honeymoon Flats,'' wih George Lewis and Dorothy Gulliver.

The following productions are being prepared for early camera work:

''Be Yourself,'' Reginald Denny's next picture, to be directed by William A. Seiter; ''The Sin Ye Do,'' which Ernest Laemmle will direct; ''Phyllis of the Follies,'' another Ernest Laemmle picture; ''The Worm Turns,'' which Fred Newmeyer will direct; ''Give and Take,'' from the Aaron Hoffman stage success, with George Sidney and Jean Hersholt; ''Three Rainy Nights,'' a new La Plante production, to be directed by Wesley Ruggles; ''The Michigan Kid,'' the Rex Beach story.

In addition to the foregoing, the following productions are being put into script form for early studio work:

''The Braggart,'' by Benjamin S. Kutler, with Jean Hersholt as star; ''The Last Warning,'' by Thomas Fallon; ''The Charlatan,'' by Leonard Praskins and Ernest Pascal, with Conrad Veidt as star, supervision of Carl Laemmle, Jr.; ''Cupid at Vassar,'' by Owen Davis, with Laura La Plante as star;''Cream of the Earth,'' by Percy Marks, with Charles Rogers and Marian Nixon as principals; ''The Broadway Romance,'' by Nell Martin, with Norman Kerry starred; ''Show Boat,'' Edna Ferber's novel; ''The Olympic Champion,'' by Fred W. Rath, with George Lewis as the star.

"Underworld" Director Wins Award

THE Paramount Theatre Medal of Honor and a check for $10,000 was awarded Wednesday, January 4th, to Josef Von Sternberg, director of "Underworld," judged the outstanding picture shown at the Paramount Theatre during the past year. The selecting committee comprised Mr. Lasky, S. R. Kent and Sam Katz.

The second prize of $5,000 was awarded to Clarence Badger for the direction of "It," and the third prize of $2,500 was awarded Mauritz Stiller for "Hotel Imperial."

The Paramount Theatre Medal of Honor competition for 1927 was first announced by Mr. Lasky in November, 1926.

Managers, Institute Has Some Innovations

The Motion Picture Theatre Managers' Institute in New York City has several ideas that are being adopted for training men and women in managing theatres. These ideas, it is claimed, are new.

Among them will be visual education. In addition to the screen picture as one of the mediums the Institute will use slides, illustrations, drawings and sketches, the graphic method of teaching to be resorted to whenever possible. The classrooms are said to be especially designed for training men for the theatre. The classroom is a miniature theatre, equipped with the latest mechanism. The stage, where the student learns of stage presentations, is arranged with two proscenium openings, one facing the main classroom and the other the laboratory. Through this arrangement those studying stagecraft will be able to use the stage without interfering with those others studying management in the main classroom.

The stage is arranged for the study and practice of stage settings, technics and curtain combinations. The electrical connections are so arranged, it is said, that any number of lighting effects can be achieved. In the school's laboratory will be found cutting machines, tools, and work benches where the student can manufacture lobby displays and the like.

Five Firms Incorporate in New York State

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York State during the last week of the year, and receiving charters from the department of state at Albany, included the following: National Studios, Inc., capitalization not specified, Dolly V. Samose, Gertrude M. Ballinger and Leona Zilber, New York City; King Theatre Corporation, capitalization not stated, Raymond A. Williams, Arthur C. Minahan, Stanley G. Falk, Buffali; Powers Cinephone Equipment Corporation, capitalization not specified, Michael Edelstein, Francis C. Ott, M. E. Milles, New York City; Malcolm Laboratories, Corporation, capitalization not stated, Joseph R. Malcolm, Alexander and Abraham Marks, New York City; Film Bureau, Inc., capitalization not specified, Elizabeth Perkins, Sophie Smith, Enid Yandell, New York City.

Youth in Casts of First National Productions

Youthful screen performers are playing the featured roles in a number of new productions now in work at the Burbank studio of First National.

Donald Reed is playing the masculine lead in ''The Mad Hour.'' Larry Kent is leading man in ''The Heart of a Follies Girl,'' and is also acting a role in ''The Mad Hour.'' Gary Cooper has been borrowed from Paramount for the principal male role in ''Lilac Time.''

Molly O'Day is playing the girl role in ''The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come.'' Sally O'Neil, sister of Miss O'Day, has the featured feminine role in ''The Mad Hour.'' Alice White will play the leading feminine role in ''The Headliner,'' soon to go into work.

Monte Blue Signs Again With Warner Bros.

Monte Blue, whose contract with Warner Bros. has just expired, has again signed with that company. He has been with the Warners for five years. The new contract is for a protracted period.

Blue made four pictures for the Warners this season. The actor will not resume working on the Warner lot until the studio opens in the latter part of February. The only other picture that he will make that will not be released under the Warner Bros. trademark will be ''Robert Flaherty's Southern Skies,'' for which he has been loaned to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The Alhambra in Sacramento

One of the most unusual theatres in the world is this striking playhouse—a gorgeous Moorish-Spanish castle, dedicated to the motion picture. Its exterior provides a landmark of beauty. No signs are to be found upon its exterior. The Alhambra has a seating capacity of 2,400.

ROCKBESTOS

–the asbestos covered wire

And too there is nothing finer than Rockbestos insulation. Flame will not affect it.

The outside covering is beautifully finished and it will not flake off.

A high tribute to this super Motion Picture Cable is the fact that the leading makes of projectors, arc and spot lights and high intensity lamps are all equipped with ROCKBESTOS MOTION PICTURE CABLE. It may cost more but replacements are fewer, therefore it is economical in the long run.

When projectionists ask for ROCKBESTOS they get the best.

Send for a copy of our new Motion Picture Cable Bulletin. It has information of value to you.

SCHINES LAUNCH NEW DE LUXE THEATRE AT LIMA, OHIO

Playhouse Designed by Local Architect Devoted to Pictures and Road Shows

ONE of the more important and most recent moves in the expansion program of the Schine Enterprises was climaxed with the opening on November 17, of Schine's Ohio theatre at Lima, Ohio. This de luxe playhouse takes rank with the finer examples of theatre buildings in that state.

It was designed by Peter M. Hulsken, a local architect, and was built by local contractors.

The building proper covers an area of 92 by 220 feet, and is of absolute fireproof construction. One of the biggest engineering achievements was the construction of the balcony.

Entering the lobby, which is 28 by 34 feet, one will find this lobby carried out in a color scheme of black and gold. The walls are of black and gold marble with bronze grilles and poster cabinets. The floor is tile. The ceiling is vaulted and finished in gold. The suggestion of the lobby is of a picture gallery.

On each side of the lobby is a store room. From the lobby one enters into a spacious foyer. From the foyer, marble stairways lead to the mezzanine floor. On the right side of the foyer behind the stairways are the ladies' rest rooms and cosmetic room. To the left are the men's smoking rooms. Off the foyer is the manager's office.

The foyer leads direct to the aisles of the auditorium. The auditorium proper is 80 by 115 feet. The auditorium is carried out in Italian Renaissance style and the color scheme is in gold. On each side of the proscenium arch are the boxes for specialties. The main auditorium is provided with six exits and the safety of the public has been considered in the planning of ample aisles, exits and stairways.

The architect was faced with a problem of creating a design which would tend to give the effect of spaciousness and, in adopting the Italian Renaissance period, permitted the use of large area of plain wall surface. The rather unique treatment of the side walls of the proscenium arch with column grouping and the painted tapestry of the panels between the columns further enhances this very interesting feature.

The mezzanine lounge reached from the foyer by marble stairways is another new feature. This mezzanine foyer runs the full width of the building. The arrangement is the same as on the foyer of the first floor. This foyer gives a circulation of about 500 people and will make a pleasant lounge for people who are waiting for seats.

The spirit of this mezzanine is in the form of an immense lounging room.

All the railings of the stairways and wells are wrought iron finished in gold. The walls of the foyer are paneled and the resting nooks are divided from the main foyer by colonnades. The balcony is entered from the mezzanine floor by inclines. The first two rows of the balcony are planned for loggias, divided by brass rails from the other part of the balcony.

The projection room, which is on the top of the balcony outside of the building, is one of the most commodious projection rooms in the state. Its size is 12 by 30 feet and is provided with toilet facilities and outside windows for proper ventilation.

Above the balcony is the great dome of the theatre. This dome is carried out in a cloud effect so that when the lights are turned on the effect will be like looking at the sky.

The stage is 30 by 80 feet and is provided and equipped with the most modern counter balanced stage rigging and electric switch board equipment. The switch board is a masterpiece in electrical engineering and is of the latest design.

A NEIGHBORHOOD THEATRE IN THE ORIENTAL STYLE

THE neighborhood theatre has graduated from the old familiar nickelodeon and is claiming treatment on a par with the most elaborate establishments designed for propagating the arts of the silver screen.

In the Ridgewood section of the Borough of Queens, at the corner of Fresh Pond Road and Grove Street, there has been erected a new art temple with seats for two thousand patrons, which is unique in the architectural treatment applied by the theatre architect, Thomas W. Lamb. This colorful playhouse is called the Oasis.

The leit-motive of the interior is of Indian influence accentuated by Persion refinements of the ancient "Taj Mahal" creation.

Matching the Indian palaces is the Grand Foyer, where one finds an atmosphere which, while far from being conventional, is at once pleasing and intriguing. The Indian decorative arts abound in interesting details faithfully reproduced by American sculptors and painters.

The entrance to the theatre orchestra and balcony is from the Grand Foyer.

Sculptured wall panels arranged in niches flanked by pilasters are graced with silk drapes which hang in leisurely fashion.

The large lounge room and public comfort rooms are located under the foyer. Embodying all known conveniences, richly decorated and furnished in lavish style, The Ladies' Rest Room and Men's Smoking quarters are deserving of special notice.

THE FILM CAPITAL'S NEW PICTURE THEATRE

United Artists Cinema in Los Angeles Strikes the Advanced Note Stressed in Modern Theatre Architecture

THE new United Artists Theatre, Los Angeles, operated by West Coast Theatres, Inc., is the final word in theatre construction. Located on South Broadway, in the heart of the business district of Los Angeles, this magnificent structure incorporates all of the best features of the most recently built theatres plus some additional new ones.

The theatre utilizes slightly less than one-half of the total space in the new building which is to be known as the California Petroleum Corporation Building. Much of the office space in the building has been leased to the oil corporation.

The style of architecture is Spanish Gothic. The style is an attempt to border on the Spanish in harmony with much of the architecture of Southern California.

The general interior arrangement differs radically from other Los Angeles houses in that a great deal of attention has been given to both entrance lobby and foyer, to be called the "foyer promenoir" and which can accommodate more than 1500 persons, without crowding. Lobby and foyer are approximately 40 feet high.

The lobby is done in black, gold, red and buff marble, with large gold mirrors set in frames of antique design of antique gold. The balcony is panoramic, and in its rear is a promenade, with a passageway leading into the foyer. Here are little offset balconies, from which one may look into the general foyer.

The mezzanine is back and under the balcony, like a receding under jaw. Here are 200 seats.

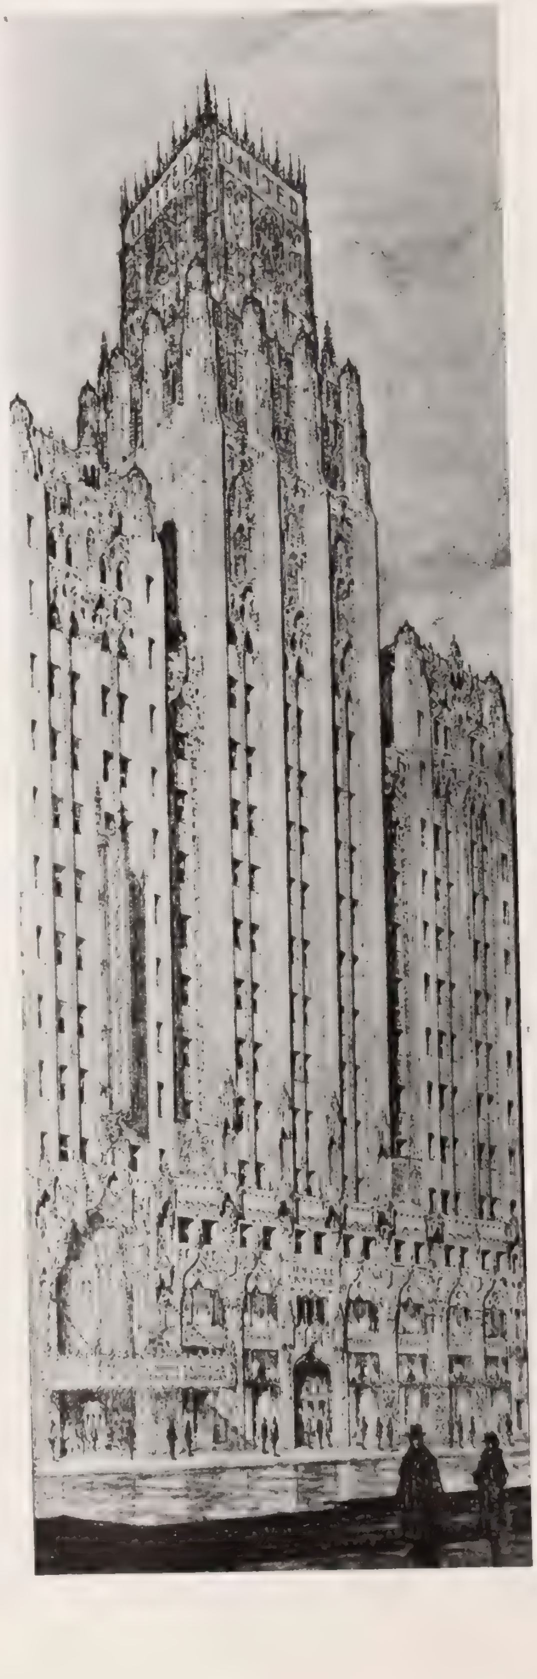
There are two promenades—one for each level.

The stage is large—about 30 feet deep and 50 feet across the proscenium front.

The scenery is supported from a steel gridiron, high up under the stage roof, and is operated by a counter-weighted system of ropes. The proscenium girder is 66 inches deep and 50 feet long and weighs 60 tons.

There are four aisles. The theatre proper is 100 feet wide and 150 feet deep. An electric lift raises the orchestra pit to the stage level and there is a separate organ console lift, which raises to the same level.

The main support of the balcony is a double web-plate girder which spans the entire auditorium, approximately 100 feet, and which carries seven cantilevers and the mezzanine, below. The girder is said to be the largest individual structural member ever fabricated and erected in one piece in the west. It is three feet wide, seven feet high, 100 feet long and weighs 103 tons.



Artist's sketch of the exterior of the building which houses the United Artists Theatre in Los Angeles. The theatre utilizes nearly one-half of the space in this large structure.

Every seat in the big auditorium is alike. The chairs have been especially designed for this theatre and have deep cushions and air-inflated backs, a new feature in theatre construction.

A refrigeration plant has been installed at a cost of $100,000 of the latest washed-air type, with dehumidifiers automatically controlled to maintain a proper temperature.

The theatre was built not only for the present theatre-going needs, but has taken into account the expected growth of Los Angeles and the certain development of the theatre. Its general style and equipment are expected to be a standard for many years to come.

Special accommodations have been made underneath the great foyer for women patrons. There is a large combination lounge and smoking room, washroom and a cosmetic room. This room has been fitted with elaborate dressing tables. The color scheme of the room is one of greens and taupes.

For men there are rooms underneath the main foyer, also. The run in the foyer was manufactured in Europe especially for the new theatre.

The colors were determined here before the order was given that these colors might harmonize with the color scheme of the entire theatre. The run is in the center of the foyer and is about 25 by 50 feet.

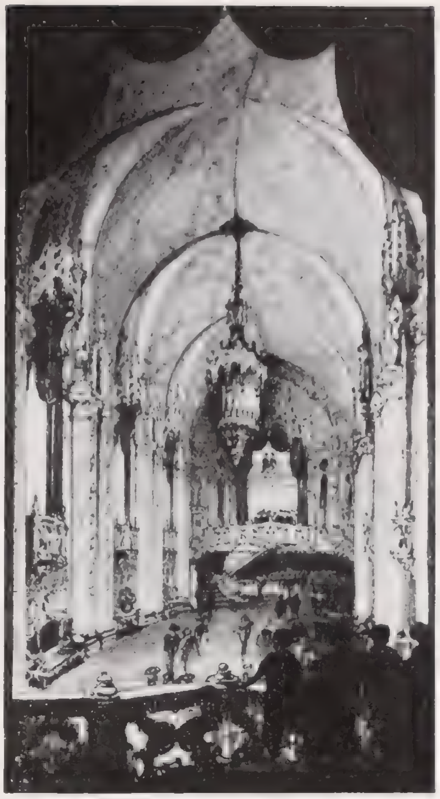
The new Los Angeles theatre is regarded somewhat as a parent theatre to a group that will arise in at least 12 cities. Four others now are in process of construction, and all will feature premier United Artist pictures. Other cities which will have United Artists theatres, it is expected, are: New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Baltimore, Seattle, Portland, Kansas City, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Boston, and Pittsburgh.

An elaborate lighting system has been installed. It is in five colors: red, blue, amber, white and green. Thus, with a ten preset switchboard, practically any combination may be obtained. By means of a recently devised indirect lighting system, the entire color effect upon the ceiling will be visible during the projection of the picture.

The dome, in the center of the ceiling, is covered with silver-backed, rough-faced mirrored discs — about 3,000 of them—and, in addition about 2,000 glass pendants. From the mosaic dome, an enormous sunburst spreads in all directions. In the auditorium proper there are no lamps or chandeliers.

The side walls are in travertine, with three large perforated fans on each side.

Plans for the new house were drawn by C. Howard Crane of Detroit, who has designed more than 300 theatres. Associated with him were Walker & Esme, Los Angeles architects. The building is owned by the Ninth and Broadway Building Company, operated by Joseph M. Schenck and I. C. Freud. United Artists Theatre Corporation has a lease on the theatre and a portion of the office space but the theatre itself will be operated by West Coast Theatres, Inc., under the direction of Harold B. Franklin. Bruce Fowler has been selected to manage the theatre.



Sketch showing the inner lobby as viewed from the mezzanine.

This luxurious theatre is the first to reach completion of three enormous cinema projects designed within recent times by S. Howard Crane. The architect has specialized in theatres for some time, and to his credit are many picture houses that stand as noteworthy examples of their kind.

Among his works are several small theatres of the modern type which are fast replacing the old time houses which catered to the community patronage. Among the latter type which Mr. Crane has designed are the Clinton and Eastern in Columbus, Ohio. These theatres were built by the James company, now operated by J. Real Neth, long associated with William James and the latter's successor when he announced his retirement a short time ago.

Two of the largest picture theatres to be built in this country, and which are now nearing completion, are the Fox theatres in St. Louis and Detroit.

Like the United Artists theatre in Los Angeles, these palatial auditoriums will be contained in combination office, store and theatre buildings. The Detroit theatre will bring that city a pretentious playhouse of huge capacity. The decorative scheme is to give the mamoth lobby the appearance of a giant Hindoo temple. It is to be half a block long and six stories high with its walls radiating Oriental colors. Exotic bands of ornaments are to circle the ox-blood red marble columns which span the lobby on both sides. The frieze above the columns is broken up by niches and shrines.

Proscenium and sidewall treatment elaborates on the Spanish style of decoration carried out in the entirely renewed theatre.

Complete Remodeling Modernizes Old Theatre in Billings

CONCRETE evidence of the manner in which a well-worn motion picture house may be turned into a veritable new theatre of exceptional beauty was offered recently in Billings, Montana, at the New Babcock Theatre. This house, owned and operated by the Theatre Operating Company of Billings, Max Fregger and Eugene O'Keefe, was recently remodeled at a cost of close to $100,000, and now stands as the foremost first run theatre in Montana, seating nearly 1,500 persons and playing the leading film attractions.

The new theatre is a veritable gallery of Spanish art, radiating warm tones of red and greens, with pastel shades worked into harmonious polychrome wall colorings. Special lighting fixtures adapted from old candle torcheres of Spanish castles and huge lanterns in the foyer and auditorium carry out this scheme with decided gusto. Elaborate draperies throughout the house conform to the Spanish scheme. A cardinal red silk plush drape is hung in the lounge room, and heavy gold silk over-drapes with blue velour portieres hang in the foyer. In front of each organ grill at the side of the house is a heavy silk fringe thrown over a Spanish scarf.

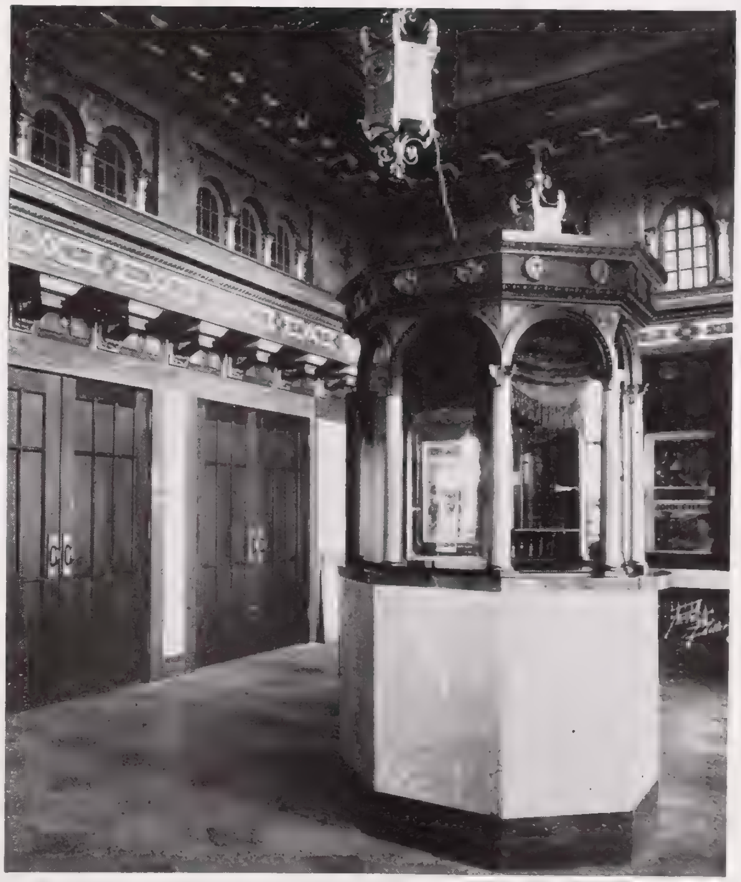
All the ceilings and walls in the new house are done in texture plaster of three and four tones, glazed over with gold. The proscenium arch is set in triple arches, back of which is the organ. The theatre lobby is finished in marble and has outer and inner sets of mahogany doors. Three lantern-type decorative fixtures of colonial Spanish design hang from the ceiling, and the general ornamentation of the lobby bears a Spanish influence.

Technical equipment of the latest type has replaced every bit of obsolete mechanism in the theatre. The acoustics have been greatly improved, Projection room equipment, stage equipment, lighting, counterweight systems, etc., are all of the latest type. Spring cushioned chairs, with upholstered backs, are on the main floor, and finely upholstered chairs have been used as loge seats in the mezzanine. All used as loge seats in the mezzanine.

Remodeling of the house called for practically as much interior work as the building of a new theatre.



The ticket booth and lobby decorations strike the keynote of the atatmosphere so effectively represented in the newly renovated theatre.

THREE DE LUXE HOUSES RECENTLY ADDED TO SAXE CHAIN

New Milwaukee Theatres Are the Oriental, Garfield and Uptown

THREE deluxe pre-release houses have recently been added to the Saxe chain in Milwaukee, making a total of forty-five theatres in the Wisconsin circuit.

The Oriental, picturesque, colorful and exotic, opened during the summer months, has proven the mecca of east side theatre goers. Throughout, the Oriental is symbolic of the far east. Its entrance, lobby, stair case, balcony, auditorium, colonnades, mural paintings, lighting effects, stage — all carry out the oriental motif. Its equipment is of the finest, its appointments luxurious. It has a capacity of 2,500 and is the only theatre of its size in that section of the city. The lounges and lobby are fitted with especially designed furniture and furnishings to harmonize pleasingly with the interior of the theatre.

There is 145 foot throw from booth to screen. The stage is equipped with counter weight stage rigging of the latest type. A modern type switchboard controls the lights. The theatre is heated by three boilers with automatic heat regulator. An ice machine of large capacity is part of the $175,000 ventilating system.

A feature unique in the Saxe neighborhood theatres is the nursery room, de-

The Garfield auditorium. Its rich color scheme makes it one of the most striking and beautiful theatres in Milwaukee lightfully fitted with toys and contrivances for children.

Another addition to the Saxe chain recently opened in Milwaukee is the Uptown, an eighteen hundred seat house on the north west side. It follows the Italian Renaissance decorative treatment. The tiled floor lobby is enhanced by a fountain at the center. The walls of the auditorium of the theatre are divided by pillared recesses in which mural scenes are softly lighted. The ceiling is mosaic in bizarre pattern.

The 45th and last of the Saxe chain, the Garfield, is a 2,000-seat house of Louis XV theme, semi-atmospheric in type. It boasts the largest lobby in the northwest this side of Chicago. The lobby is luxuriously fitted with harmonizing furnishings.

Here, too, the equipment is of the latest type throughout.

The stage is extremely large, 24 ft. deep with 45 ft. proscenium opening. The rigging is countreweight type, control from the floor, with 27 lines. Hub electric switch with lock system controls the lights.

THE MADISON ADDS TO LIST OF FINE COMMUNITY HOUSES

AN OUTSTANDING addition to the ever-increasing number of beautiful playhouses must be noted in the opening of B. S. Moss' Madison Theatre in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn.

The exterior view of the Madison conveys the pure and classic feeling of Grecian design. Passing under its impressive marquee, one enters through the vestibule with its walls of varied colored marbles.

From the lobby, the visitor comes to the grand foyer. A high vaulted ceiling and bronze and marble motif for walls may be observed.

In the mezzanine story are located the lounge, ladies' retiring room, men's smoking room, telephone room, and ushers' room.

The auditorium as seen from the stage permits appreciation of this theater's attractive design and modern layout. A panelled walnut wainscot is carried around the side and rear walls and the wall space above is divided into panels covered with brocade in a beautiful shade of old rose.

Some Vital Points About Management Explained in H. B. Franklin's Book

Practical Manual Provided in Work by Leading Theatre Executive

IN ADDITION to its interest as a reflection of the viewpoint of a leading theatre executive regarding various phases of management, Harold B. Franklin's book "Motion Picture Theatre Management," supplies a long felt want for a guide for the manager who daily faces new problems in the performance of his duties as a leader, administrator and executive, concerned with affairs which range from the mundane details of bookkeeping to the highly creative field of program arrangement and exploitation ideas.

A casual reading of this volume published by the George H. Doran Company suffices to impress one with the authenticity of its statement and the accuracy of its treatment. Beyond that is to be found a wealth of material of such practical application as detailed plans for the organization and maintenance of Lost and Found departments, fire drills, service features, plant and housekeeping, budgets, insurance, etc., while the collected experience of many years of intimate association with such problems as the building and equipment of theatres, selection and training of personnel, the relation of the theatre to the community, advertising and exploitation, is presented here with an economy of statement that makes the book a ready reference manual of distinct value to the showman.

Some of the highlights of the detailed discussion of various phases of theatre management will serve to indicate the practical nature of the work and as well may reduce to concrete terms not hitherto applied in just this form many rules of good showmanship practice.

For example in the chapter on The Function of Personnel, there is this concise declaration of the relation of the management to the theatre and the public: " . . . The first thing the management must do is to obey the ancient injunction: Know thyself. What is the policy of my theatre? To what audience am I appealing? What do they like? What might they tend to like? What are the resources of the industry ready to supply the demand? What new resources must I create? If I aim at a metropolitan attendance, I must create a reputation for exquisite, precise service. If I seek a neighborhood attendance, I must establish a warm and friendly reception for them. If my patrons are poorer folk from the humbler walks of life, I must not oppress or repel them with a solicitude they are likely to mistake for a condescension."

As a means of getting down to cases or back to fundamental principles, the above offers a self-questionnaire which many a manager, taking up new duties or pondering the problems which arise about him in the midst of the old job, may, with great profit to a solution of his difficulties, devote some hours of his time before he rushes into new policies or elaborates established ones.

At the outset of the chapter Management and the Public, Mr. Franklin offers this analysis of the duties of the manager: "The manager of a theatre has certain specific duties: to plan, to make decisions, to select capable assistants, to make his theatre a public institution. In many ways he is the arbiter of the public taste. That is, although he takes guidance from the tendencies of patrons toward amusement, he must be the super-salesman in the respect that he induces people to respond to the future market, which he knows in advance. He must win interest for coming programs, and spread the feeling that his theatre is zealously studying the public wish in order to provide more than the usual entertainment."

FURTHER on, in extension of the consideration of "Good Will," and the responsibilities of the manager in working for that ideal, Mr. Franklin writes: "Every element of the organization is an extension of his policy and himself, not for self-glorification, but for success. Accordingly, certain common sense procedures are inescapable. In the first place, the individual employee must be instructed in detail, not merely in the routine of his task, but equally in that manner of performing it which shall accord with the highest standards of the house. Specific instructions leave no doubt and minimize the danger of giving offense. They should therefore be administered to new employees not by one means but by every means possible; word of mouth, written or printed rules, example and drill."

Regarding the efficiency of organization, which while reflecting the leadership of the manager does not impose upon him details which take too great a toll of his time, the author points out that "It can readily be seen that routine, on any scale, would consume all of the manager's time, and detract from his executive function. It is therefore necessary, in large theatres, to deputize certain supervisory functions to heads of departments. An unforeseen occurrence may require executive attention; but a repetition is handled by a subordinate. That is, important decisions are still made by the head; but routine is carried on by employees engaged for the purpose. Thus routine becomes a standard method of doing certain work, a calculated and habitual procedure tending to produce efficiency."

As a means of bringing to practice the instruction and the training of department heads and personnel and, still more important, assuring its continued practice, there is but one sure check for the manager, and that is personal inspection at frequent intervals. Regarding this phase of the manager's duties, Mr. Franklin says: "Now, inspection has many ends, but three of them are preeminent. In the first place, it is one of the many instruments whereby the management serves the public. That the public is unaware of what goes on behind the scenes is beside the point. Patrons who attend a performance derive subtle pleasure from prompt service; prompt service means that every one and everything are in place on time; and this readiness of the organization to handle every detail is possible only when accurate survey has made sure that every detail is as it should be. In the second place, periodic inspection is management's most important check on organization. Seeing is sometimes more than believing; it is knowing. An employer has the right to know whether or not his plans are being put to effective realization. He cannot check up on the relation of standards to performance without examining the latter upon the basis of the former."

EQUALLY fruitful of practical aids to the manager are the chapters of Mr. Franklin's book which deal with specific departments or theatre technics. In a chapter on lighting, for example, are such observations as the following: "The proper use of tint helps to put patrons into moods sympathetic with the action on the stage or screen . . . the color and lighting of a room help to create its atmosphere . . . slight tints of rose (flesh color) and yellow (canary) in lighting add something to the complexion, and therefore are desirable for ladies' rest rooms, lounge rooms, etc. Amber is used extensively in auditorium lighting . . . . Bright light can be used to stimulate applause and frequently is thrown on at the climax of the overture. Likewise, brilliancy is often used to help put over comedy scenes. Comedy cannot register when an auditorium is in a quiet mood suggested by soft vagueness. It needs sharp lines."

The finer touches of showmanship expressing themselves in small details receive the attention of the writer and a quantity of ideas and suggestions are provided in the text of the book. For example there is the consideration of the

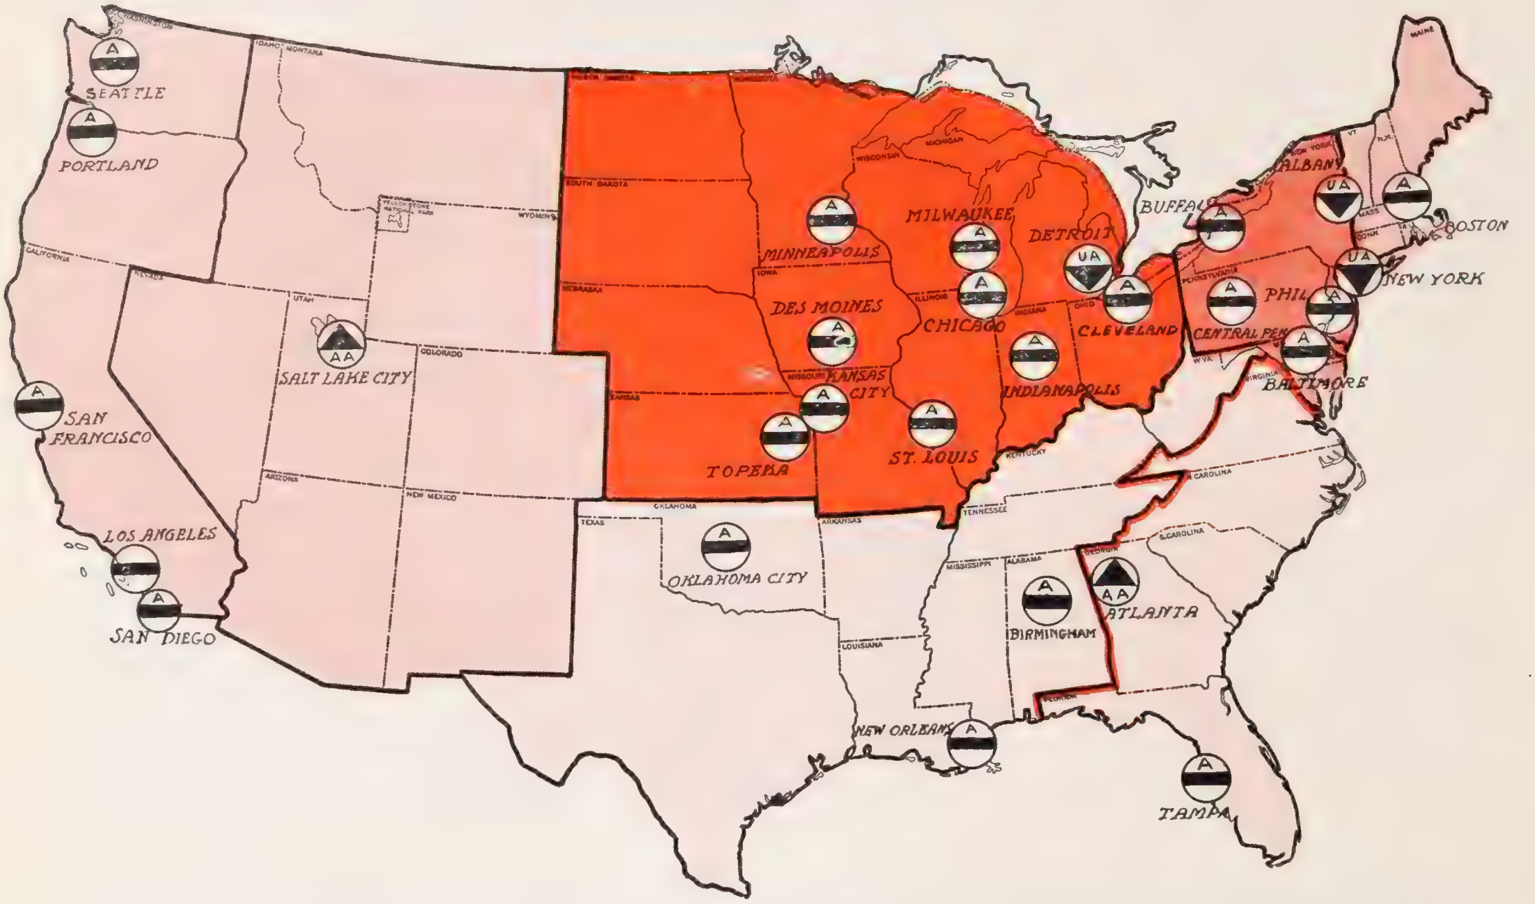
Banner Construction In 1928 Forecast

Theatre Building and Box Office Averages Map



Above Average Business	AA	☐	Very light new construction
Average Business	A	▨	Light new construction
Under Average Business	UA	▨	Moderately heavy construction
		🟥	Heavy new construction

The map of the United States shown here is divided into seven territories, with colored shading indicating the division of new proposed theatre building as represented for the year of 1928. This new construction is represented in valuation of dollars and cents rather than number of projects.

The shading is in four densities: solid, which represents the greatest value of proposed theatres; heavy stipple, which is second in valuation of new construction; medium, which areas represent conservative building; and the very light areas, where the investment in new theatre projects is very light. The information visualized by the map is based on the annual building forecast issued by The Architectural Forum.

The circles shown on the map are located in key cities and illustrate averages of theatre attendance during the three months period form November 15 to December 15. The diagrams indicate the relative attendance at the better theatres in these cities during the summer season. These are given by "averages, with symbols to indicate "Above Average" and "Under Average" box office returns. The term "average" as applied in this survey indicates satisfactory box office returns, based upon theatre expectancies, which, in turn, are governed by past earnings under similar or nearly similar conditions

ADVANCE information concerning tht annual building forecast issued by The Architectural Forum estimates the theatre building program for 1928 at $161,938,000. This figure is for building costs alone, and does not include equipment and sites.

The 1927 estimate was $199,652,000. This year's figures show a decrease of $37,000,000, which, however, does not mean a decrease in the number of theatres to be constructed, but in all probabilities, on the contrary, indicates a greater building program so far as numbers is concerned than in any year of motion picture history.

The year 1927 was notable not only for the amount of theatre building, but also for the number of extraordinarily extravagant houses constructed in the larger cities.

Heading the list was the Roxy in New York, where over ten million dollars was expended on the one theatre. The Fox theatre, in Washington, cost around five million, and others of similar size and magnificence went up in New York City, Chicago, New Orleans, Los Angeles, Detroit, Philadelphia, and Atlantic City.

It is safe to say that twenty theatres were built last year where the gross expenditure ran well toward eighty-five million dollars.

It seems probable that the peak in what has been termed "judicious extravagance" has been reached, and that for a number of years at least theatres costing considerably less money than the twenty referred to above will be the rule rather than th exception.

Theatre owners have found that the million dollar and the ten million theatre have comparatively little different possibilities when gross revenue is considered, and that the investment of the ten million dollar house is too much to carry, when the possible gross is considered.

IN other words there is still a limit to the amount of investment that can be profitably placed in a theatre.

The Architectural Forum divides its construction estimates into six groups as follows:

Section	1928	1927
Northeastern	$21,920,000	$18,637,500
North Atlantic	43,114,000	54,747,500
Southeastern	4,167,000	6,995,000
Southwestern	3,777,000	11,012,500
Middle	71,620,000	93,367,500
Western	17,340,000	14,892,500
Total	$161,938,000	$199,652,500

The Northeastern territory, which includes what is usually termed the New England states, the Forum reports as due for a three million dollar increase over 1927.

In this territory, there has been need of better houses for a considerable period. Maine needs many new houses in the smaller towns, and Massachusetts, with its large number of medium-sized cities, should have many replacement theatres. It is from these two states that the Forum forecast gets its volume of increase.

The North Atlantic division shows a decrease of about ten million dollars. As eliminating the Roxy theatre alone would bring the two years about on a par, it is safe to assume that there will be no falling off in the above territory. The number of new houses already planned in the New York territory alone practically guarantees this statement.

The Southeastern division also shows a decrease of a little over a million dollars. This, however, except in area, is a comparatively small territory, and, if it had not been for the unusual building program in Florida instituted during boom times in Miami, Jacksonville, Tampa and other resort towns, the gross for 1927 would have been probably not half the figures shown. Three houses completed in 1927 by Paramount in the South will account for over half of the 1927 Forum figures.

In the Southwestern figures there is a big falling off so far as percentage figures are concerned. This, again, is explained by the fact that Saenger Amusement Co., L. L. Dent and Paramount built four houses in the territory that probably cost one-half the eleven million mentioned as the territories' gross.

Eliminating Dallas, New Orleans, San Antonio and Houston, there is opportunity for theatres of the million-dollar class, and the 1928 estimate of the Forum of nearly four millions to be expended would indicate a healthy construction program scattered over a wide territory of small towns where $100,000 still builds a very fine theatre.

The decrease shown in the Middle territory is brought about by conditions in Chicago, where it is generally believed that the de luxe type of house has about reached its zenith. Practically every neighborhood section has been adequately covered, and in some zones the building is in advance of the population development. Chicago's building program will be easily fifteen million less than than last year, and it is safe to say that no downtwn houses ranking with the Chicago and others of like expensiveness will be built in the next year or so.

IN the Western territory the Forum advises an increase in the building program of two and a half million. This increase is largely due to the West Coast Theatres' expansion program, which contemplates the replacement of a considerable number of medium-sized city theatres by modern structures.

The total number of theatres to be built in the West will be larger than any previous year, and most of them will be of large seating capacity, although economy will be exercised in the budgets. The Western division, where the Forum predicts a gain, takes in Seattle, Portland and Spokane, where the de luxe theatre idea is just getting started.

The new Paramount house in Seattle is still uncompleted, and this building should be properly divided into the two years' totals. Advance information on a theatre building survey now being made by MOTION PICTURE NEWS, discloses unusual activity in the smaller towns of the country.

Up until the past year, building in cities of less than fifty thousand population has been extremely limited. The theatres average better than ten years in age, and the investment is comparatively small, according to present-day standards.

Hoover Sees Continued Heavy Construction

CONTRACTS let for future execution in the construction industries are at as high a level as at this time a year ago, according to Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, in his statement issued January 1, in which he sums up the economic forces dominating.

Mr. Hoover concludes the statement, which has been widely commented upon as most encouraging to an optimistic viewpoint of business conditions during the coming year, as follows:

"As to particular industries, agriculture, textiles, bituminous coal and some metals still lag behind the others. The contracts let for future execution in the construction industries are at as high a level as at this time a year ago.

"Taken in a broad sense we enter the New Year with the forces of stability dominant in the business world."

The NEWS survey, when published, will give approximate number of houses to be built by states and indicate probable costs, etc.

This survey will be ready in the near future, and is to be illustrated by maps and charts.

Equally encouraging from the standpoint of indications of an improving future is the data concerning attendance averages for the month's period graphically portrayed on the map.

The figures bespeak a better business tone generally, particularly when the averages of this month are contrasted with those on last month's map. Such comparison reveals first, that the majority of changes recorded are those which indicate an upward trend.

THE number of Key Cities showing under average marks on the last map totaled 10. The current chart shows that only 2 key cities were leveled to the under average rating for the month on which our present report is based. Furthermore, in December there were 17 Key Cities rating at Average, while January's map shows that 23 maintained an average business for the period covered. Both this and the previous map shows two cities rating "above average."

Considering the much-to-be-expected slump, due to the pre-holiday season of increased activities elsewhere—particularly at the shops selling merchandise of the "giftable" variety—it would not be surprising if the current map showed an even greater trend toward "under average" box box office business than the previous one. That things were better, despite the counter attraction of holiday shopping, as shown by the map, would seem to bespeak encouragement that the turning point had come and that a delayed season, owing to continued warm weather during the fall, held every promise of good times for the theatre men from this point on.

To those changes which have taken place during the month with regard to a more brisk or less profitable month from the box office point of view, many reasons can be ascribed. It is, however, in the main a mere repetition of what has been set forth before—purely local conditions.

In the aggregate the indications of the map are decidedly favorable to the conclusion that business theatrical is much improved over the slump which set in after the close of the summer season. And that is truly the accurate gage of things.

Going into greater details on the comparative basis, we find that the changes were as follows: five cities which on December's map were rated at "under average" are shown to be "average" on the current map; one city went from "average" to "under average," and one city went from "above average" to "average" during the same period. Floodlighting the Front An Investment in Beauty

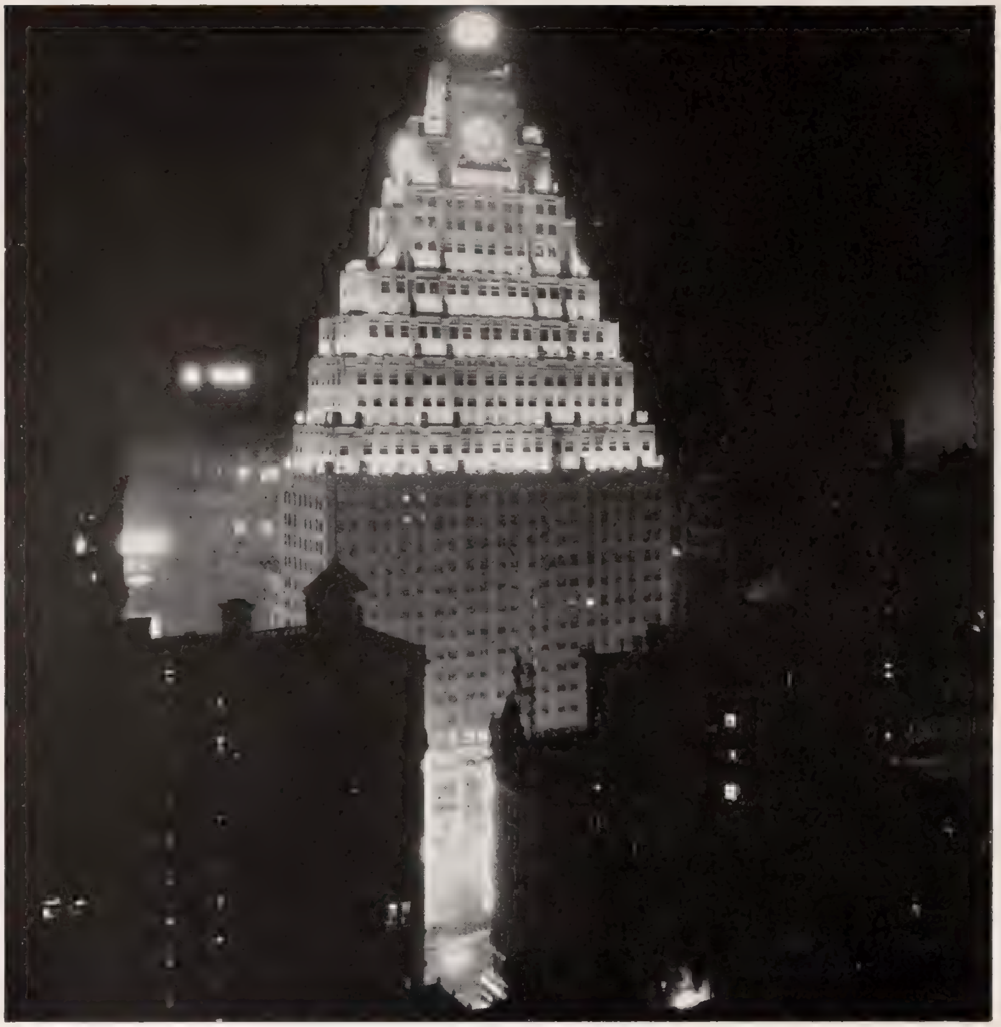
By J. A. SUMMERS

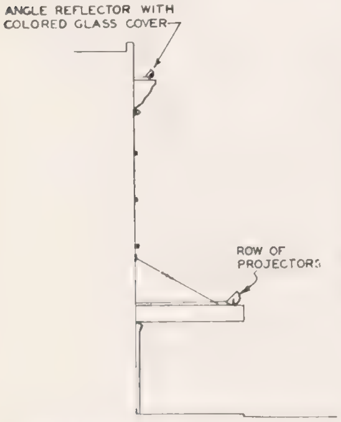
Edison Lamp Works of G. E. Co.



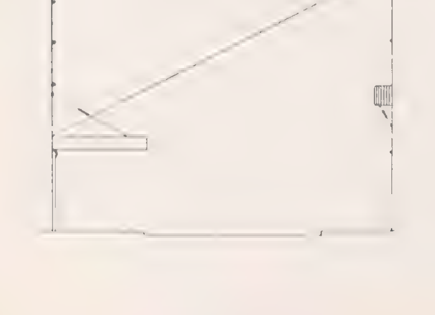
The Paramount building in New York. Showing how buildings with step back construction can be lighted from the building itself, producing a land mark visible for great distances.

THE plainest kind of construction would serve every purpose of a motion picture theatre if utility were the only consideration. But how many people would attend such a theatre when magnificent edifices are available for their enjoyment? The point is that utility is not the only consideration. In general, æsthetic considerations take the greater portion of the invested capital. If experience shows that the investment in beauty pays, why is it that part of this beauty is obscured in darkness during its most productive period?

In any successful business, every part of the invested capital is kept working. In contrast, an astonishingly large proportion of theatres let some of the capital invested in beauty lie idle. This is true because in the evening when people are pleasure bent and searching for amusement, the external beauty of the theatre cannot be seen and therefore the return on the investment is lost. There is no excuse for this state of affairs because for a small expense full value might be derived by lighting the front of the theatre. The sale of just a few extra seats would pay for the maintenance and depreciation expense of an installation, and who would dare say that lighting up the theatre would not attract the extra patrons? That light attracts the crowd is indisputable; and since the theatre draws a large number of its patrons from the passing crowd it is an important consideration.



Left—Diagram showing method of floodlighting with projectors on marquee. Below—Method used to floodlight front by projectors located on building across street.



There are many ways of lighting the front of a theatre, varying with local conditions. One of the simplest, as well as one of the most effective methods, is by means of floodlighting projectors. This method can be used in a large majority of cases. The projectors may be concealed on the marquee, on buildings across the street or on street poles. If none of these is available, ornamental street lighting poles have been developed on which the projectors may be mounted without detracting from the architectural effects of the building.

What do we mean by floodlighting projectors? A floodlighting projector is a modified searchlight. Different types of projectors give different spreads of light. A projector with a parabolic reflector and a concentrated light source will throw a long, narrow beam having a spread of approximately 10°. This type is used when the unit is placed 150 feet or more away from the building. It is obvious that one type of projector would not give satisfactory results under all the different conditions to be met. If a projector giving a narrow beam is used at a very short range, a spotted or streaked effect is likely to result. It is therefore necessary to have projectors that will provide a beam satisfactory at all ranges. Projectors are available which will meet practically any condition and it is only necessary to choose the proper type.

If it is desired to light a small area from a considerable distance (150 feet to 300 feet) a projector with a narrow beam should be chosen. On the other hand, if the front of the theatre is to be lighted from the marquee, it is probable that a wide angle projector must be selected. Under some conditions it may be desirable to spread the beam more than normal or change the shape of the beam so as to get a more efficient distribution. This may be done by using a form of lens in front of the projector, resulting in a more even distribution with a smaller number of projectors.

The intensity required to make a theatre stand out conspicuously depends to a large extent on the color of the building and on the surrounding conditions. It is

A Distinguishing Insignia

IT is fitting that owners of Carrier Conditioned Theatres should remind their patrons that Manufactured Weather* has been provided for their health and comfort. For this purpose the attractive bronze plaque, pictured above, has been designed and cast.

This tablet, displayed in lobby or foyer, is the mark by which a Carrier Conditioned Theatre may be recognized. It is a symbol of alertness, progressiveness, and thoughtfulness on the part of the theatre owner and architect. It is a pledge to the patrons that the finest Air Conditioning System available has been provided. It is the mark of Carrier acceptance of complete responsibility to make "Every day a good day" in the theatre.

Each of the many Carrier Conditioned Theatres is eligible to receive one of these tablets. Just write to our Newark Office stating that you desire to place this distinguishing insignia in your theatre.

If your theatre is not Carrier Conditioned, or if you are contemplating the construction of a new house, now is the time to have our engineers call and present to you the essential facts underlying the successful application of Air Conditioning in the theatre.

Ask, too, for the book "Theatre Cooling and Conditioning."

Charting Campaign Ideas Proves Best Method for Planning Drives

Experience of Chain Managers Shows Value of "Putting it on Paper"

THE director of advertising and exploitation for a theatre circuit, operating houses in a number of towns located comparatively nearby the home office, on a recent investigation discovered a condition to which he attributes the let-down in exploitation activities on the part of local managers.

There had been a falling-off in campaign activities at certain houses of the chain over a period of some time. The gradual decrease in exploitation effort, as shown by the detailed reports sent to the home office, was doubly puzzling because the same managers in the past had displayed ability and energy in planning and executing their exploitation, and as well were showing the same attractions which at other houses on the circuit received good advertising support.

Correspondence diplomatically suggesting greater activity and seeking an explanation of the condition was unfruitful of results, so the director made a personally-conducted tour of inspection. The conclusion he arrived at, after conferences with the managers and not without an initial misgiving, because it seemed too simple to be true, was simply this:

The managers who were letting down had gone stale on the work primarily because they had contracted the habit of formulating their campaigns entirely by visualization on their own part and without reference to records of stunts and ideas being used by others in various applications. In other words they were working entirely along the line of the inspirational method.

Furthermore, the men continued to flounder because they failed to get back to first principles by committing their campaign outline to paper. When it was suggested to them that they start by making a chart of each projected campaign there was in most instances a resentment and hostility to the suggestion, but when finally they were persuaded to try this system and include with it a practiced reference to old campaigns and stunts used by others, their difficulties gradually diminished and finally faded away altogether.

This experience, the relation of which must go without benefit of identification as to names—out of deference to wishes that are obviously most reasonable—has had its parallel in many a similar difficulty in which showmen frequently have found themselves.

The athlete of the finest physical resources and most rigid training will go stale after protracted concentration along his particular line of physical effort. Brain-fag is even more quickly arrived at when there is a constant drain upon that department of the mentality which invents ideas for application in the specialized duties of a day-in-day-out occupation. The most fertile imagination must give way to exhaustion after continued activity along a highly specialized line. So the "inspiration," the "big idea" after a while fails to arrive at the beck and call of the inventor upon whom there is thrust the necessity of "doing something" and doing it on time.

Consequently the "old reliable" in the planning of an exploitation campaign is the plan of "getting it down on paper." The first big advantage of this method, of course, is that there is a very obvious starting point—the title of the picture to be exploited. Then, equally obvious, is the fact that there are but three divisions of exploitation—newspaper advertising, publicity, and stunts.

GOING still further in a purely methodical manner, it is apparent that there are two kinds of newspaper advertising—"straight" and "trick" ads—and that the publicity may also be "straight" news or of the tie-up variety in which mutual benefits are derived by the theatre and its cooperating agent, the newspaper, a civic or social organization, or a local merchant; and the "stunts" are purely novel ideas carried out in lobby displays or street ballyhoos.

So the process of division and subdivision of the subject goes on until in a surprisingly short time the showman has run through the encyclopedia of available ideas. The process continues no further than is necessary to suggest to his mind something suitable to his campaign.

From time to time in statements written for the trade papers, some of the picture showmen who rank as outstanding figures in their field, have declared that they regularly practice the method of designing their campaigns on paper.

A detailed chart system is used by these showmen. Before a chart is attempted there is first determined the important factor as to how much the appropriation for the picture will be. Then under the title and the names of the stars and featured players there is written down, just as the ideas occur, all the suggestions which seem applicable to the title or star exploitation.

After the chart has from 25 to 40 stunts notated on it, they are arranged in order and the business of "blue pencilling" is started. The process of elimination brings the number of stunts down to the most suitable for the campaign being planned.

The common experience is that in using a chart system one idea suggests another and by this building-up process many novel and original applications develop without conscious effort on the part of the designer, or campaign architect.

The fundamental ideas are usually arrived at by analysis of the picture during screening, or a thorough digest of synopsis and story outlines in the press book. The angles of appeal to the particular patronage ordinarily suggest themselves automatically, especially to the showman who has become thoroughly familiar with his house and his community. So there is much of the "ready-made" about the features which should be stressed in the campaign under consideration.

Enlarging upon ideas offered in the press books and the adoption of stunts used by other exhibitors for other pictures—related in the trade papers—are other sources for the stunt list on the first rough chart.

Naturally, the individual type of the picture to be exploited imposes many limitations, so far as this revamping of other stunts is concerned. For there are many pictures having titles that might offer opportunities for some stunt advertising but the nature of which is such that this style of exploitation is unsuited. The "ballyhoo" cannot be turned on for every attraction. Street workers, floats, sandwichmen, etc., provide a selling means which in many cases would be highly profitable advertising, but they are effective only when used in a suitable connection.

EXPLOITATION can be over-done as easily as it can be under-done. Of the two evils, perhaps the former is the greater, because the ill-advised type of advertising usually results in disappointment to those who have been attracted by it. And, then, of course, there is the consideration that money and effort has been expended in an unprofitable enterprise.

The sensational stunt should not be avoided simply because it is sensational. However, when there is a likelihood that some form of exploitation will produce undesirable after effects, or bring the theatre and the manager into disrepute because of a display of bad taste, there should be no hesitancy in discarding it even if there is no substitute in the way of an exploitation idea.

Such details, obvious and cut from the ABC pattern of exploitation fundamentals, have been added for the very reason that they illustrate "beginner's" rules. It is sometimes only the failure of the veteran showman to get back to fundamentals that so seriously cramps his style after a long experience at the same old stand.

Regardless of how "presentation conscious" the industry is, the public still takes its pick. Two ads shown above are specimens of the appeal made by Grauman's Chinese theatre, Hollywood, featuring elaborate stage acts, and on the right an ad for the United Artists theatre, Chicago, stressing "The Whole Show on the Screen."

THE stage band policy, modeled after the style of revue formerly known to vaudeville as a "unit show," continues to advance its estate as a popular offering at the motion picture theatres of the "de luxe presentation" type.

If this steady extension of the policy means that it has an appeal to which the theatregoing public responds at the box office, the band act must rank as a showmanship invention that reflects no little credit upon those far-sighted pioneers who brought it into being as an adjunct of the motion picture presentation.

On the other hand, if some of the views expressed by the newspaper writers are true reflections of public taste in the matter, then a lot of film magnates are kidding themselves and paying out good sums to performers for services that are not appreciated and not even welcome.

Of the two suppositions, the former readily asserts itself as more reasonable than the latter. Because the very showmen who now sponsor this type of presentation are exhibitors who have grown and flourished as a result of their ability to attract the ticket buyers to their box offices.

Perhaps in the entire history of the business there has never appeared a development about which more has been said and written by picture men and the motion picture reviewers than this very subject of Presentation of the vaudeville type. From the outset it has been decried by the more vocal groups in the inner and outer circles of the industry. Producers, directors and even scenarists have "viewed it with alarm." The photoplay editors have panned it unmercifully. Even exhibitors have had at it on the score that it does not belong in picture theatres and will create a "volume buying" attitude on the part of the regular patronage of the cinemas.

The theatre men who have installed the policy have floundered at times, some of them starting out on "new policy" shows only to revert again to a bad imitation of their old policies. Nevertheless, there are many instances where the vaudeville presentation has jogged along successfully for a considerable period, and except for changes, which well might indicate that there was a healthy growth in the enterprise of improving and refining the device, there has been steadfast adherence to the elaborate type of stage and screen show.

Despite such evidence there are still many unconvinced, and recent discussions in the public prints make it apparent that many people are of the opinion that the mixing formula is simply an expedient, adopted by the showmen to meet a situation which they are still trying to solve.

This viewpoint is set forth in a very interesting manner by Nelson B. Bell, well known in the industry through his many years of association with the Crandall organization in Washington as director of publicity and advertising. In an article published in the Washington Post of Sunday, December 18, Mr. Bell says in part:

"Although he will probably be the last one to hear about it, the motion picture enthusiast who walks to the wicket and lays his money on the line—as Mr. Runyon says at his club—is right now enjoying what practically amounts to his heyday.

"Never before in the history of the theatre in America have such amusement bargains been offered the modest purse as now are purveyed by the palaces of the cinema, not only in Washington but throughout the United States. Great 'names,' splendid pictures, mammoth orchestras and all of the accessories that have come to be taken as a matter of course by the casual theatregoer combine to form a source of entertainment that has never been rivaled.

"This is not due wholly to the urge of the motion picture exhibitor to make his segment of the fighting front preeminent. It is, rather, a more or less natural evolution that has asserted itself by reason of a variety of contributory circumstances. But the ones most vitally concerned in this glorification of the movie business have been, and still are, the Wall street banker gentlemen.

"The banker gentlemen, per se, are banker gentlemen and not showmen. However, they have manifested a keen sense of the 'big shot' in their conduct of the enterprises that most closely involve the celluloid drama. Their admiration of the well known and highly revered 6 per cent is more deep rooted than a habit, more insistent than an obsession and as tenacious as a fetish. They have, therefore, enunciated certain precepts that must be observed. One of them is that 'the palaces of the cinema' and the 'cathedrals of the movies' that have been reared with their 'jack' must return the none too familiar legal rate. This has been pretty tough on some of the theatre boys.

"They have had to scurry around a bit and find some element of appeal not before known to their bag of tricks. This has entailed the employment of methods previously foreign to the wiggle picture industry. While the pictures may have been excellent, there still was need of further incentive to extravagance on the part of the vulgarly denominated 'cash customer.' This incentive took the form, still preserved, of 'acts,' 'presentations,' 'prologues,' or what have you?

"NONE of these departures may have had any proper place in the movie scheme of things, but here they are and what are you going to do about it? In fact, what do you want to do about it? Absolutely nothing!

"There may be all the hue and cry in the world about the decadence of the pictures—and they are not decadent—the substitution of every other known type of diversion for the silent charm of the shadow drama and the submergence of the films under a tidal wave of extraneous matter, but the fact remains that for his 50 or 60 cents the purchaser of tickets for the film plays avails himself of the greatest bargain in the annals of theatrical amusement. When before has it ever been possible to buy for the paltry four bits that is prevalent an orchestra of completely symphonic proportions, a picture that is as good as modern miracles of stagecraft can produce, personalities that have commanded three and four times the tariff that is assessed and accessories that mark the farthest advance of short-reel and atmospheric embellishment? Never."

That same idea has been expressed by others, and accepted by many as the most logical explanation of the growth of the "bigger and better and much more expensive show." But previously it was not forthcoming from a source so closely associated with the big theatre interests.

And it is a perfectly reasonable explanation. What other means is the showman to use to get a crowd large enough to even nearly fill his immense auditoriums than to broaden the appeal of his show by adding features that are likely to appeal to patrons of other types of entertainment while relying upon his picture to bring in the old line fans?

The danger, of course, as has been pointed out many times, is to be found in a tendency to over-do the thing, to overfeed the customers, create a market wherein the ticket money goes to the house offering the biggest bill, and alienate the affections of the dyed-in-the-wool picture fan by wearing him out with entertainment even before the picture goes on the screen.

Some of the stage attractions far overshadow the pulling power of the routine pictures which are available to the weekly change house. Not long since the Paramount theatre in New York offered a bill featuring Mae Murray as the stage star and a picture titled "Honeymoon Hate" as the screen attraction. The bill registered a big week's gross for the theatre, and the consensus of the observers along Broadway was that the "draw" was Mae Murray.

The Publix shows have been shifted about in a highly intelligent manner. The early offerings made their first flash and then showed signs of wear and waning interest. Some of the most successful New York offerings did not do so well in other distant towns on the circuit. In order to give greater local appeal to these stage attractions the Publix officials introduced in several of these towns "The New Idea" shows, which were the same unit shows with the added attraction of a resident orchestra leader as the "local contact" element. This was the forerunner of the present band act policy.

Some of these band leaders have demonstrated an ability to draw patronage and bring the box office returns up from below average to a good average. Jimmy Ellard is one of the outstanding figures in this connection. Ellard proved a big attraction in Des Moines, the returns showing a steady climb from the outset of his engagement, with pictures rated at various degrees of box office excellence. The demonstration was so convincing that the Publix officials rushed Ellard to Omaha to tone up the interest of the customers in the Riviera theatre there.

NATURALLY as long as that sort of thing goes on there will continue to be efforts along the line of developing something in the way of an attraction upon which the theatre can rely and which will make it independent within certain limitations of te fluctuating values of the product from Hollywood.

Eric Clarke, managing director of the Eastman theatre in Rochester, is one of the severest showmen critics of the vaudeville type of presentation. Clarke has maintained right along that the vaudeville and specialty act does not belong in the cinema. His public in Rochester seems to be of the same mind, for not long ago in an article written for a local newspaper he asked his readers to send him their views on the subject. "Would Rochester fans prefer their pictures 'straight' with perhaps only brief divertissements for the sake of variety or is it necessary to give them the elaborate stage presentations and famous 'names' in order to attract them to the theatres?" he asked.

The responses were heavily in favor of "straight" pictures with the type of divertissement which is standard at the Eastman preferred above the "name" acts. For Mr. Clarke reported: "The 'Back to the Movies' fans seem to be in the majority. Communications from Democrat and Chronicle readers indicate that the writers prefer their pictures 'straight'."

Two of the Loew houses have been dropped from the vaudeville circuit and will feature the de luxe presentations—of the band act variety—as their future stage attractions. These are Loew's Melba in Brooklyn, and Loew's State in St. Louis.

The announcement of the new policy for Loew's State in St. Louis brought forth a column of some highly interesting comment from Nie, motion picture editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The writer sums up the article with the statement: "And some day some movie house manager is going to wake up and remember that what he is running is, fundamentally, a picture theatre."

The United Artist theatres in Chicago and Detroit will have "the whole show on the screen" as their slogan. These theatres will be under the supervision of Hugo Riesenfeld, far famed for his musical scores and a type of presentation which places the emphasis on music and the pictures. The United Artist house in Chicago opened December 26, and the house in Detroit, now nearing completion, is scheduled to open about February 1.

In both of these towns the situation is such that a gage of the situation, "pictures straight vs. pictures with vaudeville," may develop within a comparatively short time. Chicago is all "band act" in its preferences, and Detroit has the Michigan with its Publix shows and several others with similar combination policies to line up as the "fors" while the United Artists will be the champion of the "against" jazz, hoofers, hot band leaders and merry mad maniacs.

by week we find that the most serious handicap to the business in cities which dropped to lower marks than those which they showed last month was nothing more serious or significant than a series of mediocre bookings — pictures which simply failed to arouse the interest of the local customers. Either that, or a stretch of bad weather figured as the only plausible explanation of the drop in attendance.

Naturally such deterrents to business cannot be considered as indicative of a general slowing down. They are purely local conditions and therefore matters which will either right themselves—as in the case of bad weather—or be righted by the parties interested in improving things —the theatre managers, as in the case where pictures lacking appeal to the local patronage are being forced on an unwilling public.

New York is among the Key Cities which has showed an "under average" rating this month and last month as well. The reason is simply that the theatres on Broadway, which dominate the situation, as regards reports of the kind with which we are concerned, as in the position of being a street where one man's meat is another man's poison. That is to say the competition is between four theatres—the Roxy, Capitol, Strand and Paramount. The others, Rivoli, Rialto and Cameo, are differently situated, since they are not "weekly grind houses." But between the "big four" there is a brand of competition which is bound to figure in a spectacular manner when you go over the facts at the completion of each week.

Announcement of Merger

On October 1, 1927, the

YORK ICE MACHINERY CORPORATION

became operative with the following companies comprising the merger:—

York Manufacturing Company	York, Penna.
The Arctic Ice Machine Company	Canton, Ohio
Bay State Construction and Supply Company	Boston, Mass.
Central Construction and Supply Company	Philadelphia, Penna.
Greenwood Construction and Supply Company	Pittsburgh, Penna.

P. H. GLATFELTER, Director
F. W. PILSBRY, Director
V. K. KEESEY, Director
W. W. HEPBURN, Director

The above list discloses the fact that this merger included not only the physical assets of the subscribing companies, but also the men who are responsible for the formation of the new corporation.

Hence, this new corporation will not only have the advantage of the factory facilities, financial backing, research findings and field service of the old organizations, but will also have the advantage of the cumulative experience and business ability of the men whose thorough and intimate knowledge of the industry made possible the individual success of the merged companies.

Such an organization insures stability which combined with possible operating economies provides for the buyer a source of supply for equipment of the highest quality at a minimum cost.

To owners and prospective users of Arctic machinery there is available for their requirements all of the facilities of this combination. Likewise, to users of York equipment there comes the many benefits to be derived from this new merging of interests—and there is the added advantage of many service stations located throughout the United States and in foreign countries.

YORK ICE MACHINERY CORPORATION, York, Pennsylvania

Development of Screen and Stage Shows Traced in Career of E. L. Hyman

By Lee S. Ferguson

THE recent announcement that Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, has been chosen by the Stanley organization to produce shows not only for the Brooklyn house, but for the theatres in Washington, Baltimore and Richmond, recalls the interesting fact that Hyman is one of the youngest successful managing directors and producers in this end of the business.

Although his career started in Buffalo, Hyman has been at the helm of the Brooklyn theatre for the past eight years, and has established it as one of the country's leading playhouses of its type.

From the time he became manager of the Victor Theatre in Buffalo, Hyman stressed the musical end of his programs unceasingly. We know that music is a universal language which can be understood by the classes and the masses alike, if it be given to them in the right way. To begin with, he created a beautiful stage setting at the Victoria, and into this he put his orchestra, which, to be sure, was not a large one. Instead, however, of permitting his fifteen musicians to play mediocre material, he secured the full cooperation of his director and men, and imbued them with the spirit of his own enthusiasm. In this way better music was taken out of the library and arrangements made to fit the number of instruments being used. Soon it became the talk of all Buffalo, and the people proved their appreciation by making Hyman's efforts pay a handsome profit. Soloists were also used to excellent advantage. After three years Hyman had thoroughly proved his ability—and then the world war.

Intent upon serving his country, Hyman enlisted his services, and was appointed film director of the U. S. Liberty Camp Theatres throughout the country. His excellent judgment of pictures was clearly shown by the selection of films for these Liberty Camp theatres. Further than this, the Buffalo youth gave the boys music to go with these pictures. He organized orchestras and selected musical programs and scores of the pictures that would best serve the purpose.

With his work completed for the Government, Hyman was sought out to assume the management of the beautiful Liberty Theatre in St. Louis, Mo. Again he delved into his storeroom of music ideas and brought forth innovations which proved highly acceptable to the Missouri folk, who must always be shown, as the saying goes. At this theatre he organized a thirty piece orchestra which played musical works of any kind. It was here that the young manager created quite a bit of attention through having the orchestra play standard overtures followed by popular selections. So pronounced was Hyman's success in St. Louis that the owners of the Liberty Theatre induced him to go to Denver, Colorado, to assume the direction of four leading theatres of that city. It was the old story all over again, Hyman woke them up with his knowledge of what the public wanted and would accept in the way of music and pictures.

Edward L. Hyman

Thus it was that with the building of the million dollar Brooklyn Mark Strand by the Mark interests of Buffalo, Hyman was brought back to the fold, and again became associated with the people who gave him his start.

COMING to Brooklyn, he found a magnificent three thousand seat house, but at that time it was located outside of the actual shopping and theatrical center. He had a further problem in that it was the first theatre of its type to open its door in the Borough and he had to take off his coat and pitch right in to educate the public to attend. Practically all of the theatre-goers who sought out the better type of photoplay-music entertainment had been in the habit of going to the several houses on Broadway. It was Hyman's task to draw these people to the Brooklyn Mark Strand and convince them that at that house they would see and hear a program that was the equal to any across the Bridge.

In doing this the young showman again brought his knowledge of music into play and made his musical incidents stand out prominently. It was not long before he had the people coming in large numbers and then it was possible to loosen up a little more on the bankroll in order to give still bigger and better musical performances. Within a short time Hyman had become established in Brooklyn and the Brooklyn Mark Strand had taken its rightful place as "A National Institution," representative of the best in the way of high class entertainment.

NATURALLY, the work did not cease with the staging of the program. Hyman, always a believer in system, mapped the work of his various departments so that each would operate at the maximum of efficiency. Ushers were trained to deal with the public in the most satisfactory manner and lobby attendants and sidewalk men were given specific duties to impress upon the public that at this theatre they could expect the utmost in courteous service. In this way the Brooklyn Mark Strand and its managing director had become known not only to theatre goers on Long Island, but also to theatrical men throughout the country. Hyman has received hundreds of letters from exhibitors in all sections commenting upon his methods and declaring that many of his ideas have been put into effect in their own houses.

One of the things in a musical way which has won Hyman much recognition is the idea of establishing artists in the orchestra who can do solo work. One of the first of these was Harry Breuer, xylophonist, who also doubled on the drums. Harry, a very talented young man, was developed by Hyman in xylophone solos, playing at his accustomed place in the orchestra pit. Later, a small orchestra to play popular numbers was organized with Breuer as the chief attraction and was presented on the production stage for several appearances. Through the adroit handling Breuer, after three years at the Brooklyn Mark Strand, is more popular today than ever.

Sascha Kindler, concert master, is another artist who has developed under the tutelage of Hyman. He now appears in solo presentations in the orchestra and also takes part in stage numbers frequently. Edna Burhans, a gifted young soprano, was discovered by Hyman and has appeared at the Brooklyn Mark Strand for the past several years, constantly gaining favor. Helen Gaubis, coloratura, made her first appearance on any stage at the Brooklyn Mark Strand after she was

Another huge investment protected by C-H Dimmers

Rear view of the C-H Dimmers which bring out all the interior beauty of Marks Bros.' new Marbro Theater, Chicago. Switchboard by Major Equipment Co. Levy & Klein, Architects.

BEAUTIFUL architecture and impressive interior decorations represent a tremendous investment in modern theaters. Yet their effectiveness is incomplete without lighting effects to bring out all their hidden beauty—the beauty that pulls the crowds.

Knowing this, Marks Bros. protected their investment by installing C-H Simplicity Dimmers.

Past experience had proved to Marks Bros. that C-H Dimmers provide fading of light rivaling the smoothness of nightfall, regardless of varying loads—that C-H Dimmers would meet all needs, present and future—that C-H electrical perfection insures against burn-outs, or other interruptions of service.

Your investment, too, can be protected, made more profitable. C-H Dimmers are easily installed whether your house is already completed or still in the plan stage. Consult your architect or electrician and write for the booklet "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater".

Promotion As Incentive for Efficiency

Head of Neth Circuit, Himself Up from Ranks, Offers Opportunities for Bigger Jobs to Ambitious Youngsters Who Demonstrate Ability

"IN the case of reporting courtesy of employees, your opinion may be the stepping stone to success or promotion for some deserving boy or girl. Take the case of a certain young man who, in June, 1922, entered the employ of the James theatre as usher, at the same time continuing his studies in the Trade High School. In the fall he was made head usher, then doorman, then cashier, and on August 13, 1925, became manager of the Vernon theatre."

The above quotation is from one of the typical personal messages which J. Real Neth, head of the group of theatres in Columbus, Ohio, which now bear his name and formerly were the William M. James theatres, addresses through newspapers and various other mediums to his patrons.

And the words illustrate one of the policies which Mr. Neth adheres to in the conduct of his theatre business—promotion from the ranks for the man or boy or girl who shows the ability and ambition to forge ahead.

Neth's own career may furnish the model upon which this policy has been built, for he began at the very bottom—as a prop boy at the old Empire theatre in Columbus, the place where he first made the acquaintance of William M. James, with whom he later was associated as "right hand man" and still later succeeded as head of the company operating five houses in Columbus.

As already told Neth and James first met at the old Empire, where the latter made an appearance on the stage as a member of a male quartet. Later Neth went on the road as a stage electrician.

Though an expert of established reputation in his line, Neth gave up his job with shows and returned to Columbus, for the reason that he wanted to be a theatre manager. For some time he found things no more promising than they were in New York, where he was catalogued as a stage electrician and consequently was not taken very seriously in his efforts to get a job as a manager.

The inevitable result was that when he ran across Billy James and the latter offered him a job as electrician at the Broadway, Neth accepted the offer with thanks. But he held on to his desire to became a manager nevertheless.

"All that winter I used up all my spare time trying to figure out a way to get my name in the papers in some connection with the front of the house. That, if you stop to figure it out, was probably why I came back to Columbus. I reasoned that the best way to go about being a manager was to mingle with people who were managers, and to mingle with managers was less easy in New York than it might possibly be in Columbus. Well, in spite of much thought, I didn't get into the papers that season, so I had to find some other way.

"At that time, the summer season was regarded as dead for theatrical purposes, and after a season of perhaps 40 weeks, theatres closed. So I decided to make the break without any more thinking, and persuaded Mr. James to lease me the Broadway during the 10 weeks it would otherwise be dark. He did, probably against his better judgment—and thus ambition was realized.

"Well, I was a manager at last! That was something—but all the angles of the business that had never occurred to me were something quite different.

"In the first place, there are a lot of heartaches to the business that might keep some people out of it if they could foresee certain angles that don't occur to them at first. I figured on looking nice, counting the box office receipts and accepting the grateful deference of those who would pass the doorman armed only with my signature. But I didn't figure on where I was going to get the money to pay the necessary employes or to pay for the pictures—didn't figure on the tug of war it sometimes takes to get the pictures you want—didn't figure on the sitting up nights to work on the hundred and one odd jobs necessary around a theatre, and which I had very little money to pay others to do.

"Just for instance, to show how much time I had for strolling up and down, I generally began the day by looking over the theatre, going to the bank, seeing film salesmen and talking to the publicity man.

"Well, after that, it was time to open the house and see that everything was in running order. When mealtime came I used to relieve the cashier, then the doorman, then the operator, until I came to be almost a jack-of-all-trades.

"Other difficulties, too, presented at inopportune moments. We were getting ready to show a big picture one week, and I had worked hard all day and most of the night pasting and gluing and finally putting up a lobby and sidewalk display, and then, late at night, when I'd just about finished, along came a couple of police officers and made me take it all down. It seems there was something about it that made it prohibitive. Another time I had a similar experience, this time with union men, who came along and made me quit hanging a lobby display because I wasn't a union billposter.

"All in all, those 10 weeks were not without their reward, for experience I needed, and experience I certainly got! I was lucky, too, for the next season Mr. James made me assistant manager of the Broadway, and later, manager of the Ada Meade Theatre in Lexington, Ky."

When the James Theatre was built Mr. Neth was transferred from the Ada Meade to the managership of the James, and as the neighborhood houses were added and the chain grew, was made general manager of all the houses, which position he held until Mr. James' retirement from active theatre work made him official owner, just a few weeks ago. The theatres remaining in the Neth chain are the Grand, State, Eastern, Clinton, and Vernon, with another, tentatively called the Western, in early prospect.

EFFECTIVE FRONT LIGHTING

THERE should be at least one in every city and community of this new and still very ancient style of theatre interior. It is no more than the Greek and Roman amphitheatre of ancient days redesigned for a modern indoor theatre with the whole range of beautiful decoration, and modern conveniences and comfort made possible.

Replacing the hard stone seats of the ancient amphitheatres are comfortable and beautiful upholstered chairs such as American Seating Company has furnished the Universal Theatre of Brooklyn, here illustrated. Many other theatres designed by John Eberson are likewise furnished with American Seating Company Theatre Chairs, among them the

New and Improved Equipment

A Review of the Latest Developments in Theatre Engineering

New Effect Machine for Short Range Work

THE Brenkert Light Projection Co. recently introduced a new effect machine called the Brenograph Junior. The device is especially adapted to short range work for covering large areas. It may be equipped with a short pedestal for location in concealed places for the projection of special effects either on the stage or for such auditorium effects as are employed on ceiling domes of atmospheric theatres.

The Brenograph Junior produces effects by means of interchangeable discs on which the effect scenes are photographed. Numerous light effects can be reproduced, such as rain, snow, clouds, ocean waves, falling flowers, flying birds, country panoramas, flying aeroplanes, etc. Special color wheels may be provided for showing floods of vari-colored light.

The device is automatic and may be operated over a wide range of speeds. Its automatic action permits it to be operated and controlled from the projection room. Back stage as well as scenic-moving effects of various kinds can be projected from overhead, or from the wings, with a suitable back drop. In the small theatre, the back stage effects can be controlled from the booth.

The Filmedor, a device for polishing film

When equipped with a short pedestal it may be concealed in a recess or compartment so as to hide the origin of the animated scenic effects from the theatre's patrons, thus adding to the illusion. The space requirements of Brenograph Junior for concealed work are as follows: 24 inches wide, 30 inches high and 30 inches deep.

Compact Device to Clean and Polish Film

ILLUSTRATED on this page is the "Filmedor," a device invented by J. Frankenberg and marketed by Movieads, Inc., of New York, for cleaning and polishing motion picture film. The Filmedor cleans and polishes both sides of the film with one operation.

The apparatus is used in connection with Filmite, developed by the same inventor and also marketed by Movieads company. According to an announcement by the company a recent test showed that a thousand foot reel of film could be cleaned and polished on both sides with one operation in less than ten minutes, the approximate cost of the processing being about four cents per thousand feet.

The polishing device is very simple in design and equally simple to operate. Among the advantages claimed for it is the fact that there are no parts that can get out of working order. Its operation requires no particular skill.

The machine is equipped to handle either 35 or 16 mm. film. This processing method is said to show in tests that films treated with Filmite have been exhibited as high as 4,600 times, whereas the maximum test run on continuous machines showed not more than eight hundred runs under similar projection conditions, according to officials of the company.

Gallagher Co. Issues New Catalogue of Equipment

THE Gallagher Orchestra Equipment Company of Chicago has issued a new full-line catalogue covering the various units for theatre orchestra pits and stages. The booklet, issued in attractive form, carries full descriptions, with photographs and dimensions, of the various products manufactured by the company. These include three types of de luxe leader stands; music desks and stands for the pit; stage, jazz and ballroom stands; organ and piano music racks; orchestra chairs and the Gallagher Resonator platforms and orchestral bases. Included in the line are some new designs for music stands.

Demonstrate New Color Picture Process

A NEW multi-color motion picture process, the invention of Harold N. Cox of Pittsburgh, has been demonstrated at several private screenings for scientists, educators and representatives of motion picture producers.

A reel of the film was projected for the benefit of an invited assemblage representing various branches of the industry in New York on Thursday, December 29.

According to an announcement preceding the showing, the invention makes use

Co-ordination

Big scale organization of brains and money will not of itself insure success. That is especially true in the theatre field where needs are so insistent and so exacting.

To meet those needs, a certain flexibility, a freedom from red tape, must be attained. That is only possible where perfect co-ordination of every individual and every department has been secured.

So finely co-ordinated is National Theatre Service that its most remote customers receive the same efficient and courteous service that would be accorded to a Manhattan theatre lessee. Working through Thirty-one Points of Vantage, National Theatre Service recognizes no barriers of direction or distance in passing along to its clients the benefits of its own coordination.

Xmas Stockings Hang in Lobby of Theatre

THE spacious theatre lobby that is often a problem to the manager, especially when he wants some novel decoration in it, is no problem at all to Richard R. Reilly, manager of the Embassy, a Stanley-Fabian Theatre, in Orange, N. J. Reilly has employed an original idea that not only serves as a unique decorative medium but is also a corking exploitation stunt.

Christmas is one day of the year that belongs to the children. The holiday season is a kiddie season and Reilly's entire idea is based on this psychological fact. Christmas time at the Embassy theatre is the time for hanging up stockings and the kiddies of Orange, East Orange, West Orange and other suburbs bring their stockings to the Embassy, where they are hung in the lobby.

Reilly inaugurated his idea as early as November 26. On that day, at the Saturday matinee performance, he told the kiddies of the coming of Santa Claus to the Embassy and he emphasized the fact that the following Saturday. The children came and brought their stockings, which were left with ushers who gave the children a number and took their names. The stockings were then hung in the lobby with the number of the child placed on each stocking so that attending kiddies all kiddies should bring their stockings on always could pick out their stocking, show them to companions and to parents.

The lobby of the Embassy theatre, with its array of stockings belonging to youngsters of Orange, N. J., and below, a view of the interior, wherein the over-flow was taken care of by Manager Richard R. Reilly.

Every Saturday meant a holiday for the children. As they came into the theatre they saw Santa Claus filing up the various stockings. This until Saturday, December 24, when the last stocking was filled. So great was the response from the children that on Saturday, December 3, the day set for the bringing of the stockings, there were 2,397 kiddies at the matinee. The number of stockings brought during the period was 1,227.

The sight in the Embassy lobby and foyer was a picturesque one. The stockings, filled with presents, were returned to the kiddies on Saturday, December 24, which coincided nicely with Christmas eve. Reilly placed in several of the stockings season passes to the Embassy. He further ingratiated himself with the children by having the children who received season passes report to him every Saturday matinee before the theatre was opened.

The manager took these children into his office, showed them the activities going on before a theatre is opened to the public, got their reactions to pictures and did everything to make them happy.

"The idea requires a lot of hard work," says Reilly. "I am making the of today the manager of tomorrow. At the same time I am spreading a lot of good will."

Control-Capacity and Unit Spacing

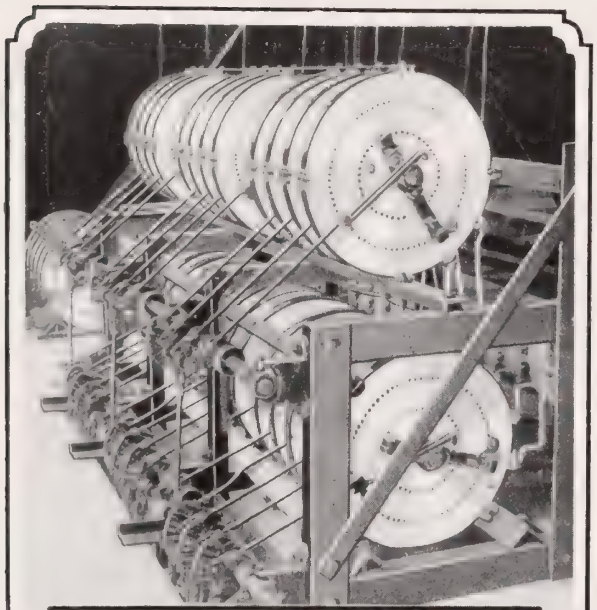
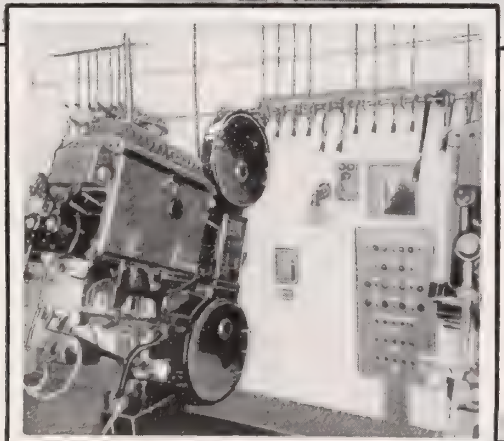
Ward Leonard— Vitrohm Dimmers





WHEN the owners and designers of theatres discuss lighting control apparatus they are interested entirely in results which necessitate a "control" system that will be dependable and accurate.

Apparatus employing Ward Leonard Vitrohm Dimmers is most frequently specified for these important installations. Here are some of the reasons.

Vitreous Enamel Insulation.

110-step control, all steps equally effective in even, flickerless light reduction.

Greater lamp "watt" capacity for space occupied.

Unit space engineering, each plate in the dimmer bank immediately replaceable by one of a different capacity to compensate for load changes.

Continuous duty operation at full rated load on any step without excessive heating.

Dimmer units enabling banking to any desired capacity.

All moving parts, including contact buttons, ground or machined, thus insuring smooth action.

Resistive element of plates permanently and completely protected from disintegration.

Cost of systems employing Vitrohm Dimmers the same or less than that of other equivalent lamp "watt" capacity systems.

Only in vitreous enamelled Ward Leonard Vitrohm Theatre Dimmers are all of these essential features found. Send your dimmer specifications to us for estimate. 25 years of manufacturing and research experience is fully at your disposal.

Screen Intensities and Clear Definition

Obtaining a Well Balanced Set of Conditions with Present Equipment

THERE is a fundamental law of light which states that the intensity of illumination, as received upon a surface from a source, varies inversely as the square of the distance between the illuminated surface and the light source.

This law is applicable to all cases which involve the use of light, although the exact manner of its application may vary under practical conditions. The so-called concentration of light into beams for purposes of its projection to relatively distant points in no wise affects the fundamental application of this law so that if a light projector is placed close to the object it illuminates, it will, other things being equal, have greater illuminating power than one placed farther away.

The direct effect of the Inverse Square Law, as it is commonly called, is evidenced in the placing of motion picture projectors at varying distances from the screen which they serve to illuminate. Relatively weak sources of light, such as the incandescent lamp, when used for the projection of movies, are strictly limited in illuminating power and so must be placed rather close to the screen. A projection distance of about 125 feet is commonly given as the maximum for successful operation.

Other, more powerful, sources such as the ordinary electric arc and high intensity arc are allowed greater leeway in the matter of projection distance which is sometimes permitted to go as high as 200 feet in the large theatres. Even at such great distances these sources are powerful enough to provide higher screen intensity than is obtained with the incandescent lamp in spite of handicap of added distance.

In the early theatres, the projection distance necessarily was short because the theatres were quite small. Under these conditions, short focal length projection lenses of small diameter successfully filled the needs of satisfactory picture registration. With the construction of constantly larger theatres, however, the projection distance also has been increased until it is quite common for the de luxe theatres to have the projection room located from 140 to 180 feet from the screen location.

As might be expected, these great distances taxed to the utmost the capacities of projector illuminating systems and, indeed, only the high intensity arc can be successfully used in such theatres. Aside from the decreased effectiveness of the illuminators when used on such long distances a number of other disadvantages were encountered which resulted in a change of sentiment in favor of much shorter throws.

In some cases where the projection spans the entire length of the theatre, it is practically impossible for the projectionists to be able to determine whether the picture is sharply focused unless the use of binoculars is resorted to. In spotlight operation, small spots can be obtained only by using so-called super-spot lamps equipped with extremely long focal length condensers and high amperage is required to offset the toll exacted by the great distances. Film destruction is more rapid because the heat energy passing through the aperture is greater in proportion to the added light required to illuminate the large screens placed far away from the projectors.

IT was such factors as these, principally that of inefficient operation, which inspired the movement to have the projection room in large theatres placed in the front of the balcony (where such was available) and a small number of theatres were erected in which this idea was incorporated. The most notable examples of this feature are the Roxy in New York and the Metropolitan in Boston. Others have come to light in the last few years so that the idea appears to find a certain degree of favor.

At first thought, this location for the projection room would seem to be the ideal one as far as projection alone is considered. In those theatres where the projection room has been so located the throw to the screen varies from 70 feet to 110 feet. On these moderate distances it is certain that most efficient operation is possible because, for the same amount of power involved a screen intensity ratio of 4 t 10 is obtained when the projection distance is reduced from 140 to 70 feet.

When compared on the basis of equal screen intensity, the shorter distance would require far less power so that highly efficient operation would be quite possible for the various light projectors used.

It is commonly known that the smaller the angle covered by a projection lens, the more sharply defined will be the picture. Small diameter in the projection lens also is favorable to good picture definition. With the old systems of illumination (the vertical arc) used, as they were, on short distances of projection a small diameter projection lens could be used to intercept all of the light passing through the aperture so that good picture definition could be obtained even though short focal lenses were used. The focal length commonly went as low, if not lower than, 3½ inches, and still satisfactory results were obtained. The new focus of illuminators, however, of which the reflector arc is the best example, makes great demands upon the projection lens because the angle of light emerging from the aperture of the projector is so large as to require a half-size projection lens, having twice the lens surface area, for complete interception of the light beam.

It is extremely difficult to fully correct such large diameter lenses over their entire surface and hence these lenses, especially the shorter focal lengths, produce pictures which are not up to the former standard as regards definition. This condition is not so serious as the longer focal lengths.

With the projection room located in the front of the balcony, the projection distance is materially shortened, but since the maximum receiving distance in the theatre is not affected, a large screen is still required so that we have the requirement of illuminating a large screen at a short distance.

To meet this, a short focal lens is required and the diameter must be large in order to accommodate the beam from either a reflector arc type of lamp or a high amperage intensity arc.

THESE conditions all lead to poor picture, definition and the only remedy, if no change in projection distance is considered, is to use a highly corrected lens. If the picture is exceptionally large so as to require the use of a very short focal length, small diameter lens, it is doubtful whether sharp definition can be obtained.

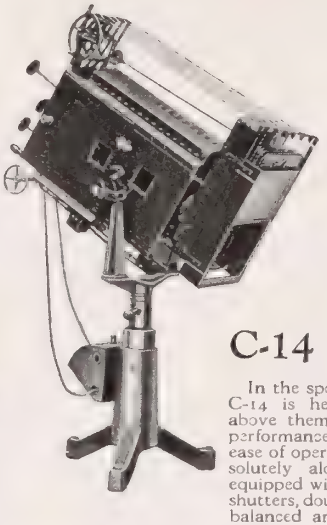
At present, satisfactory half-size lenses and focal lengths shorter than 5½ inches are not available. Where an inspection of the conditions that are likely to result show that a projection lens below 5½ inches equivalent focal length will be required, a more practical solution is to increase the projection distance to the point where a lens having this, or somewhat greater, focal length can be employed. It is often quite possible to do this when designing the theatre.

Increasing the projection distance under these conditions does not necessarily involve a loss in operating efficiency because of the Inverse Square Law since the increased lens diameter can be used to offset the effect of the greater distanc.

As an example, a 20-foot picture projected by a quarter-size lens at a distance of 77 feet will be no brighter than a 20-foot picture projected by a half-size lens at a distance of 110 feet. In the first case a lens somewhat greater than 3.8 inches focal length would be required and in the second, of of 5½ inches focal length is necessary.

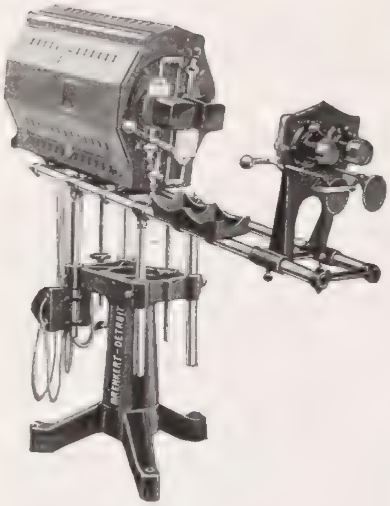
In this case the screen intensity would not suffer and the picture definition would be improved.

It is quite possible, therefore, to obtain a well balanced set of conditions with present equipment rather than adhere to practices which tend to force a remedy, but at greater cost.



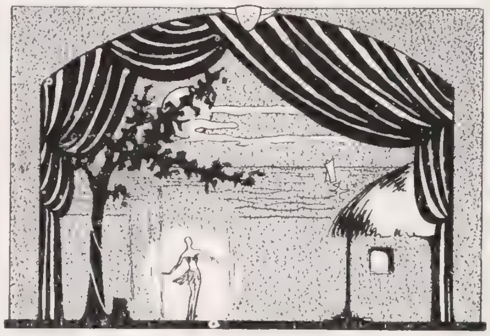
C-14

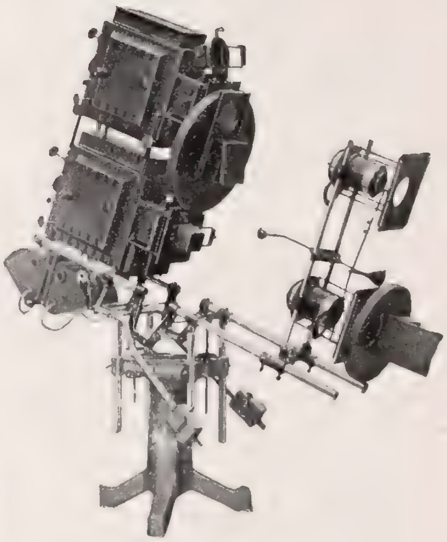
In the spotlighting field, the C-14 is head and shoulders above them all. In point of performance, economy, and ease of operation, it stands absolutely alone. Completely equipped with iris and framing shutters, double lenses, counter-balanced arc lamp and many other exclusive features.



F-6

Dissolving slides with but a single arc. The F-6, working on the reflector arc principle, will do this and so, quite logically, will reduce operating costs more than 50%, in addition to providing the very best slide projection yet attained. A new arc burner, automatic arc control, double achromatic lenses, and very simple adjustments are provided.





F-3

There is little need to introduce the F-3. This machine is providing thousands of theatres with lighting effects which can be obtained in no other manner. Besides showing all kinds of moving scenic effects, it can also be used for dissolving slides and for projecting colored spots and floods. Completely counter-balanced and easily swiveled to cover any part of the stage.

HEADLINERS

Here are three numbers which can be successfully billed by any theatre with absolute confidence that their box office value will not diminish no matter how long they will run.

Each in itself is a headliner and is capable of providing entertainment value far in excess of the original cost of booking them. All three, taken together, form a combination which no theatre, in justice to itself, can well afford to pass by.

This trio of headliners can be permanently booked by all theatres at a very modest cost by writing direct to the address given below.

given an audition by Edward L. Hyman. Miss Gaubis created a sensation and it is predicted that her rise will be rapid.

Constantly striving for better talent in all departments, Hyman was successful in securing as director of the Mark Strand Orchestra Willy Stahl, whose field of endeavor embraces both presentation work and scores for the photoplays. It is doubtful if more appropriate musical scores can be found in any similar theatre.

Much fame was also brought to the Brooklyn Mark Strand and its artists through the family of radio entertainers organized by and trained by Mr. Hyman. The Brooklyn Mark Strand group broadcast through WJZ and later through WNYC once each week, giving a program of music that includes selections of all types to please the various tastes of the radio audiences. These programs ran usually one hour and sometimes longer, being the most diversified of any offered by any theatre. In this group of artists were no less than one hundred and fifty individual performers, each an expert in his or her way. Letters complimenting the Brooklyn Mark Strand on its radio entertainment were received from practically every state in the Union and many listeners-in from distant points made it their business to visit the Brooklyn Mark Strand when they came to New York.

Among the famous artists induced by Hyman to appear at the Brooklyn Mark Strand was Victor Herbert, who conducted the Mark Strand Orchestra for two weeks, presenting during that time the best known of the Herbert compositions, together with other orchestral works. Charles Wakefield Cadman is another nationally known composer who has appeared on at least two occasions at this theatre. Cadman has presented his own compositions, which, with the staging created by Hyman, have been most favorably accepted.

Other famed entertainers include Van and Schenck, Ben Bernie and his Hotel Roosevelt Orchestra, Vincent Lopez and his orchestra, the Goodrich Silvertown Orchestra, the Victor Salon Orchestra with Nathaniel Shilkret, Chief Caupolican, Indian baritone, formerly of the Metropolitan Opera; Billy Jones and Ernest Hare, the Happiness Boys, and dozens of others.

Immediately following Gertrude Ederle's great feat in swimming the English Channel, Hyman was instrumental in bringing her to the Brooklyn Mark Strand for a personal appearance at a cost which was considerably higher than ever paid before to an individual performer here.

At the present time Edward L. Hyman is contemplating improvements at the Brooklyn Mark Strand which will make the house as modern as though it were built yesterday instead of eight years ago. Of course, improvements and changes have been constantly going on, but the ones now being planned should eclipse all previous ones. Within the next few months it is aimed to go over the theatre from the marquee in front to the rear wall, installing new electric signs which will permit of additional advertising for the musical incidents; the enlargement of the orchestra pit and placing it on a platform which can be raised and lowered for the double purpose of playing for presentations and for the picture; a complete new organ of the latest make which can be featured alone; the enlargement of the presentation stage to twice its present size, so that the musical program may be expanded poportionately.

Stage Bands New Feature at Loew's Temple, Birmingham

Loew's Temple theatre, Birmingham, has fallen into line with the many houses which feature stage bands. The new policy was introduced with Tommy Christian and His 20 Dixie Melodists.

Not to be outdone on introducing innovations, Manager Vernon Reaver, of the Ritz, opened with the Fox-Case Movietone Christmas week and offers this as the attraction to off-set the opening of other local theatres, together with the introduction of stage bands, etc. The Ritz, incidentally, has one of the best musical organizations in the South, headed by Joe Belle.

of a lens attachment which can be placed upon any camera and the picture taken in the ordinary way. It is projected with the ordinary projection machine equipped with a special lens attachment. The film after being photographed is developed in the same manner as black and white film. The developed picture shows no hues or tints, these being imparted to the scenes as they are projected by means of the special attachment. Panchromatic film is used for the process.

The demonstration in New York included several test scenes in which a wide range of colors were shown on the screen. In one picture showing a woman wearing a brocaded shawl and holding an ostrich feather fan there were present in the color composition definite purple, lavender, as well as flesh tints, reds and greens. The demonstration proved that this process is capable of reproducing the true blues and purples in their natural shades—a feat not hitherto accomplished by any of the two-color methods.

It was stated that the lens attachment for both the camera and the projector can be put on ordinary machines in the same manner and with no more time required for the operation than the regular mounted elements employed with those devices. Any of the regular printing machines used for black and white photography can be used for the printing of this color process film. Also the usual developing processes are used.

In the course of the demonstration there was shown a picture of an American flag. The colors were faded out and the flag shown in black and whites as in the case of ordinary photography and then color again was added without stoppage of the machine. The film photographed with the Cox attachment can be projected only by a machine equipped with a special projection lens attachment provided for it. Ordinary black and white film cannot be projected from a machine while this special lens is affixed. A representative of the company handling the process declared that pictures can be made cheaper by this process than by the ordinary black and white photography, the main saving arising from the fact that no make-up or special combinations of color are necessary as in cases of photoplays photographed in black and white. The basic patents covering the devices employed have been issued. It was said the color attachments for cameras and projectors will be placed on the market soon.

obvious that a theatre on a brightly lighted street with well lighted show windows and numerous electric signs would require more light than a building set in dark surroundings. The same is true of a dark colored or a light colored building. As a general indication of the intensities in foot candles necessary on a theatre the following table is given:

	Character of Surroundings
Building Surface	White Way	Residence
	ft. candles	ft. candles
Dark colored — red brick, brown stone, etc.	20	15
Medium colored — concrete, granite, etc.	15	10
Light colored — glazed terra cotta, marble, etc.	10	5

The method of calculating the number of projectors necessary to secure the proper intensity is very simple. Find the area of the surface to be lighted and multiply this area by the desired intensity in foot candles which gives the total lumens. Divide the total lumens by the lumens in the beam of the projector to be used and the result is the number of projectors necessary. Stated as a simple formula:

$$N = \frac{A \times I}{L}$$

N = Number of projectors.
A = Area of surface.
I = Lumens in beam of projector (This figure is secured from projector manufacturers' data.)

It is always necessary to make a reasonable allowance for overlapping of beams so that a uniform illumination is secured. It is also necessary to have enough projectors so that the beams cover the entire surface. As a check on the calculated results it is desirable to make a sketch of the area, to scale, and from the location of the projectors measure with a protractor the angle subtended by the area to be covered. Knowing the angle of spread of the projector (secured from manufacturers' data) it is at once evident whether sufficient projectors are provided to light the area uniformly.

There are many conditions where touches of color will add materially to the artistic effects. Niches or deep recesses thrown in shadow by the regular lighting may well be lighted by a suitable color. A parapet above a deep cornice would look well in color. These touches of color usually are very pleasing and are often more desirable than lighting the whole building in color. Colored light and white light cannot be mixed very satisfactorily because the white light is usually so much stronger that it washes out the color and the effect is lost.

1. Curtain Shutter Control. Opens and closes the curtain shutter in front of the lens from black-out or a mere slit to full opening
2. Iris Shutter Control: A partial turn of the handle opens the iris shutter from a pin-point to full opening, or vice versa.
3. Color Frame Control: Separate lever for each color frame and each lever keyed to correspond with the color frame it controls. A quarter turn of the lever throws the desired color in or out of position in front of the lens and each color is visible to the operator as the color frame is moved into position.
4. Focusing Control: Positions are with respect to the lens; moves horizontally; thumb nut locks it in place.
5. Arc Control: Varies the distance between the carbons; permits accurate and smooth adjustments of the arc.
6. Handle: For control of direction of the light beam hood is perfectly balanced, swings easily and "follows" readily.
7. Wing Lock: Holds hood securely at desired angle. Long leverage permits easy and speedy adjustments.

SILVERSHEET

"It Just CAN'T Be Torn"

THE WORLD'S FAVORITE MOTION PICTURE SCREEN

Canvas Base

The Tear-Proof Silversheet is built on a non-tearable, abuse-resisting, puncture-proof canvas base and can be had seamless in all sizes. This fabric is so tough that it positively resists the damage that would ruin a screen built on a lighter base.

Specification Surface

The Tear-Proof Silversheet is the only screen made with a specification built surface on a canvas base. This is the same Knobel-built surface that has brought Silversheet world-wide fame for its superior projection qualities.

Redwood Frame

Every Tear-Proof Silversheet is provided with our genuine California Redwood tension frame. This frame is fitted with our well known steel jacket tension device, which always keeps the screen taut and gives the frame unlimited life.

Colortone Bronzes

Specially blended and expertly applied bronzes which reproduce on the screen all the photographic quality of the film, are incorporated in the Tear-Proof Silversheet as well as in all other Silver sheet screens.

Satisfaction Guaranteed

We back each Tear-Proof Silversheet with a money back, absolute guarantee of satisfaction in every respect. Why experiment when you KNOW you cannot go wrong on a positively guaranteed Tear-Proof Silversheet.

Some Partinent Facts About Theatre Management

lobby and its accessories, giving a thorough code for the observance of the manager, an illustration of which may be found in the following discussion of the box office. "The interior of the box office should be immaculate. Only such objects are admitted as are necessary in selling tickets. A vase, either on the cashier's shelf or hung in view of the purchaser, is a pleasant and refining touch. The box office should be roomy, with two openings, so two cashiers may sell tickets at one time. This is not only a convenience for patrons, but also a means of additional revenue."

Regarding advertising, Mr. Franklin sums up his estimate of its worth to the theatre in the following: "It is the mouthpiece of the management, the instrument through which the theatre speaks to its public. It is the one medium which a theatre can use in lieu of salesmanship. It is salesmanship. The institutional advertising done by the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago as well as the West Coast Theatres was effective in convincing the public that their houses and their operation were superior, and resulted in building a good will, and at the same time in setting up an ideal to aim for. Such advertising fulfills its mission in the broadest sense. Management must display showmanship in advertising, just as much as on the screen or the stage. Advertising can do a great deal towards adding to or detracting from the good will of a theatre. Advertising must always be honest with the public. There can be no exaggerations, if advertising is to be effective."

Reaches New Patronage with Special Rate Matinee

On the first day of the showing of the French version of "Les Miserables" in the Colonial theatre, Harrisburg, Manager Charles J. Jones arranged a matinee at half the regular price of admittance, which educators generally, and particularly teachers of the Harrisburg public schools, were specially urged to attend. The house was crowded and in this way, Mr. Jones said, he attracted a new class of patrons, many of whom had never before attended the theatre. A special appeal was made to them on the ground of the educational and literary value of the Victor Hugo story.

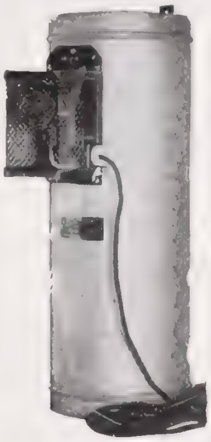
Approved by Underwriters Laboratories



Safe! No danger of fire! No rejection by local building inspectors! That is what the approval means to the architect.

Evenheeters have been thoroughly tested, they have been tried out in the laboratories of men whose duty it is to test materials to determine whether they meet the required standards of efficiency and safety. Evenheeters have passed with flying colors.

Consider now the men that endorse and approve Evenheeters. Architects, theatre owners, organ men and the Underwriters Laboratories. Such endorsement means but one thing. Evenheeters meet the required standards, and they will meet your requirements too!

The Function of the Projection Lens

is to reproduce on a flat screen a magnified image of the picture on the positive film. This picture consists of high lights, shadows and half-tones, separated by more or less distinct boundaries.

The picture on the screen is, in effect, a shadow of the picture on the film. If the film be held between a small light source and a white screen, a shadow will be cast on the latter which may be recognized as a reproduction of the film picture. Its size will depend upon the distances from the film to the light and screen.

If we attempt to reach any useful size the illumination becomes too faint and the lines in the shadow too indistinct. By means of condensers or reflectors we can increase the illumination, and by means of a projection lens we can increase the sharpness of the lines in the picture.

The projection lens has no other duty nor should it put into the picture on the screen any quality not present in the film picture.

First National Has Many Films in the Offing

The First National studio, its facilities fully engaged in manufacturing the present output of new screen productions, is also preparing for the next cycle of First National films which will soon be made.

The adaptation is being done on a screen version of "Synthetic Sin," which is now being called "Baby Face." It will follow "Lilac Time" into work. Richard Barthelmess, following "The Shepherd of Kingdom Come," will make "Roulette," under Alfred Santell's guidance, it is announced. Barney Glazer is working on "The Barker," which Milton Sills will make as soon as "Burning Daylight" and another story have been finished.

Bess Meredyth is adapting to the screen "The Yellow Lily," which Billie Dove will do following "The Heart of a Follies Girl." "The Upland Rider," Ken Maynard's next western, is now being welded into continuity form by Marion Jackson. "The Butter and Egg Man" is being whipped into readiness for early screening, while "Harold Teen," the comic newspaper strip, is being adapted for screen purposes by Tom Geraghty.

In a new comedy Charlie Murray will burlesque the classic Greeks; Eddie Cline will direct. Dorothy Mackaill will soon start working on a picture in which she will be featured alone. Its story also is in the hands of the writers.

Rayart Finishes Three More Special Pictures

Following the completion of "Casey Jones," one of its special productions, Rayart Pictures Corporation has also finished three more pictures: "The Law and the Man," "The Heart of Broadway" and "You Can't Beat the Law." The first is a story by Octavus Roy Cohen, starring Gladys Brockwell, with Tom Santschi, Robert Ellis and Tom Ricketts. The second, from a story by Arthur Hoerl, stars Pauline Garon, who is supported by Bobby Agnew, Wheeler Oakman and Duke Lee. The final picture, from a story by H. H. Van Loan, stars Lila Lee, and featured in supporting roles are Cornelius Keefe, Betty Francisco and Warner Richmond.

"The Law and the Man" is scheduled for release during the present month, the other two are scheduled for February. The company has but six more pictures to produce and expects to have them finished by February.

New Title for Banky-Colman Vehicle

"The Passionate Adventure" has been selected as the title for the Ronald Colman-Vilma Banky co-starring vehicle. The picture is an adaptation of the novel by Baroness Orczy, "Leatherface." Fred Niblo is shooting the production for Samuel Goldwyn. The actual shooting of the production is expected to be finished by January 12, when titling and cutting is scheduled to begin.

"The Passionate Adventure" will be the final co-starring appearance of Colman and Miss Banky. They will be individual stars on their own in the future.

Reported Robert E. Welsh to Become U City General Manager

(Special Dispatch to Motion Picture News)

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 4. Despite denials in some quarters it is persistently reported here that Robert E. Welsh now personal representative for Carl Laemmle, will become general manager of Universal City succeeding Henry Henigson.

In quarters usually well informed the report is given credence and it would not be surprising if official announcement is made shortly.

Mr. Welsh came to the Coast several weeks ago with Mr. Laemmle following his appointment as personal representative. Previously he had been Advertising Manager for Universal at the Home Office in New York. Recognized as one of the ablest of the younger executives he established his reputation first as managing editor of Motion Picture News, which was followed by the editorship of Moving Picture World and wide experience in production and distribution.

Mr. Henigson, one of the most capable and best liked executives in Hollywood, has been general manager of Universal City since October 1925, prior to which he had done important work for the company in Europe.

Former Extras Graduate

Central Casting Corporation Anounces 29 Player Qualified for Higher Roles

THE names of twenty-nine former extras, who during the past year have graduated from those ranks to definite screen personalities or stars, have been released by the Central Casting Corporation, which is maintained on a co-operative basis by the various producing companies. The list includes players from all parts of the country who have made splendid progress during the year.

The players graduated from the "extra" ranks are as follows:

Ruth Hurst: Born in Atlanta, schooled in Boston, stage-trained in New York, and employed about three months as an extra here before being signed by Universal.

Nora Lane (Norma Stone): Youthful wife of a doctor, signed early in the year as leading woman for Fred Thompson. Home town, St. Louis.

Marjorie Beebe: Red-haired vaudeville comedienne from Kansas City, who entered films as an extra and won a contract with Fox on the strength of her work in support of Madge Bellamy.

Edna May (Adams): Blonde milliner from St. Joseph, Mo., signed for five years by Johnny Hines after bit in "Home Made."

Sue Carol (Evelyn Keefer): Well-to-do Chicago girl, who came here last February, and jumped out of extra class when picked as Douglas McLean's leading woman.

Jeanette Loff: From Orofino, Ida.; Madena, Saskatchewan, and Portland, Ore. Was movie theatre organist before she came to Hollywood and was raised out of ranks by De Mille.

Nena Quartaro: Recent arrival from New York, "discovered" in the extra mob by James Cruze, director-producer.

Audrey Ferris and Diane Ellis: Los Angeles high school girls, signed, respectively, by Warner Bros. and Fox.

Sally Eilers: Born in New York, schooled in Hollywood and discovered by Mack Sennett.

Frances Hamilton: Daughter of former Seattle business man; educated in Alhambra and Palo Alto, Cal., schools; widely traveled and well-to-do. Signed by First National after extra work in Colleen Moore picture.

Fay Webb: Daughter of Santa Monica, Cal., police chief; signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Doris Dawson: From Goldfield, Nev., signed by Christie.

Marion Byron: From Dayton, Ohio, signed by Buster Keaton.

Donald Blossom (Breneman): From St. Louis; signed by Bray-Pathe.

Marjorie King, Bakersfield, and Caryl Lincoln, Oakland, Cal.; signed respectively by F B O and Fox.

The boys who made good were fewer than in the previous year. The list:

James Murray: From New York; discovered by King Vidor early in the year.

Davie Rollins: Glendale, Cal., high school boy won contract with Fox after playing extra in "The High School Hero."

Milton Holmes: Former Syracuse University student found in extra ranks by De Mille.

Churchill Ross: Lafayette, Ind., lad picked by Universal on strength of talent shown in "Collegian" comedies.

Billie Bakewell: Schooled in Los Angeles, discovered by Henry King and given first important role in "The Magic Flame."

Bob St. Angelo: Born in Elena, Italy; reached movies via marine corps enlistment and subsequent work as make-believe marine got him De Mille contract.

Pat Cunning: From Santa Clara, Cal., nearly starved as extra before Fox found him and gave him chance as Madge Belamy's leading man.

Gordon Elliott: From Kansas City; saved enough money speculating in calves to support himself through lean years in Hollywood; now playing male leads.

$100,000,000 in Real Estate Added to Vaudeville Holdings

ACCORDING to statistics published by Wall Street Journal, realty additions to vaudeville holdings increased by $100,000,000 in 1927. The Orpheum circuit added 10 new houses at a cost of $29,000,000; Keith-Albee invested $31,000,000 in 16 houses; the Loew circuit spent $15,000,000, and Pantages increased its realty holdings by $3,000,000.

Additions to Keith-Albee and affiliated houses included the Palace, Chicago, seating 3500; the Capitol, Davenport, Iowa, seating 2200; Keith-Albee Georgia theatre, Atlanta, seating 2400; the Granada, South Bend, Ind., 2700 seats; F. F. Proctor's, Schenectady, seating 2600; Keith-Albee's Uptown in Detroit, seating 3200; the Orpheum in Madison, Wis., 2500 seats; Orpheum, Springfield, Ill., seating 2200, and Proctor's 86th Street, New York City, with 3200 seats.

All these theatres were opened between January 1 and May 16, 1927. Twelve other Keith-Albee houses were opened during the last 6 months of the year. Thirteen additional K-A houses are under construction in other cities.

Pictures Must Dominate

Jesse Lasky Says Entire Theatre Programs Must Be Built Around Films

IN discussing the problem of presentations, Jesse L. Lasky has come out with a statement that the picture must dominate all programs, with other features on the bill incidental. The film must be the main attraction in any picture theatre, he says, and the time consumed by other attractions must be based on the length of time the picture consumes.

In his experience with operators of large theatres, he says, he has found the running time of their shows is around two hours and ten minutes. The average time of the running of the film programs is one hour and fifteen minutes. Programs should be arranged so as to fill in the difference following the conclusion of the film and two hours and ten minutes.

One of the main faults, he finds, is that some stage managers permit their programs to run to too great lengths and that they therefore cut down on the time of the film program. It is the elaborate presentation, then, he says that becomes a menace to the picture.

In discussing the problem further, Lasky said:

"When stage acts are necessary to round out a complete program those acts should be subordinated to the film. Certainly the stage act should not be allowed to run so long as to crowd out worthy film comedies and newsreels. Above all, the stage entertainment should not be of such length and nature as to leave the patrons weary when the feature picture is thrown upon the screen. It is the feature picture that the patrons have come into the house to see. If this be not true, then the whole motion picture business is not true.

"Just as sure as the picture is subordinated in the theatre, so will it deteriorate in the studio."

Production Changes Due

Year Will Be Busy One With More Regulations Along Lines of Economies

THOUGH the Warner and Sennett plants are shut down out in Hollywood there is an abundance of production activity, but with indications that the new year will bring forth many changes. The impression seems to be that the economy program will be rigidly maintained during the year and that there will not be the overproduction that has maintained in past years. It may be that the curtailing of the number of pictures to be made by the big companies will be offset by increased production on the part of the independents, but this is not thought likely.

Fox, Paramount, First National, United Artists, M-G-M, Universal, FBO, Columbia, Tiffany-Stahl, De Mille, Christie and Educational studios are proceeding with production at top speed with indications that their product will be completed at an earlier date than this task is usually accomplished.

Both the Warner and Sennett studios are closed because of advanced production, according to announcements from the companies. Sennett is completing a new studio at Studio City, which will be ready in January. It will represent a cost of $800,000. The Christie Company is building a $500,000 plant on an adjoining site.

There will probably be considerable contract regulations around the studios in the near future. The uniform contract for free-lance artists is already in effect, and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is now busy drafting a suitable contract for other studio workers.

It seems likely that the higher salaried players will be placed on a profit-sharing basis.

New Serial on Pathe's January 15 Program

The first chapter of "The Man Without a Face," the new Pathe serial, and comedies from Hal Roach and Mack Sennett are highlights of the group of short subjects scheduled by Pathe for release during the week of January 15. Seven other shorts comprise the remainder of the program.

"The Man Without a Face," from an original story by A. M. Williamson, was directed by Spencer Benet, with a cast headed by Allene Ray and Walter Miller. The first chapter is entitled "The Perilous Mission."

"Run, Girl, Run!" is the Sennett comedy presenting Daphne Pollard, who worked under the direction of Alf Goulding. "Should Tall Men Marry?" is the title of the Hal Roach production which has Stan Laurel, Jimmy Finlayson, Stuart Holmes, Martha Sleeper, Theodore Von Eltz and others in the cast; it was directed by Claude Bruckman.

"Honeymoon Hints" is a new Rarebits release edited by Beth Brown. Will Rogers has another of his travelogue shorts in "Reeling Down the Rhine with Will Rogers." The usual Aesop film fables is "High Stakes." Pathe Review, No. 3, presents: "The Beauty Thief," "Interesting People the Editor Meets" (introducing Casey Jones, Charlie Francis Coe, Ernie Schaaf and others, and "The Land of the Firewalkers," which concerns the Fiji islanders.

The concluding subjects on the week's program are Topics of the Day, No. 3, and Pathe News, Nos. 8 and 9.

Jack Holt Signs for Five Columbia Films

A series of five action dramas will be produced during the current season by Columbia Pictures with Jack Holt starring in each of them, Columbia having renewed its long-term option on the actor's services and signed him to a new contract. Holt's two pictures for Columbia, both of them current releases, were "The Tigress" and "The Warning."

Holt's first production under the contract will be announced shortly.

Warners Will Release Two in January

"Beware of Married Men" and "A Race for Life" will be the two feature productions coming from Warner Bros. during January. The first is set for the 14; it stars Irene Rich, supported by Clyde Cook, Myrna Loy, and was directed by Archie L. Mayo. January 28 is the release date for the other picture, a Rin-Tin-Tin vehicle in which the dog star was directed by Ross Lederman and supported by Virginia Browne Faire and Caryl Nye.

Support for Colman-Banky Film Chosen

Supporting Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky in "The Passionate Adventure," their latest vehicle which Sam Goldwyn is producing for United Artists, will be Noah Beery, Paul Lukas, Nigel de Brulier, Helen Jerome Eddy, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Allen and Virginia Bradford.

Pathe Film Program Practically Complete

SIMULTANEOUS with the arrival of the New Year the De Mille studio has practically finished its production schedule which it had begun with the start of the season. Since that time it has produced for release through Pathe 31 pictures, some of which have not yet been released. The Metropolitan and Mack Sennett studio turned out together 75 productions—the Metropolitan producing 30 Western features and the Sennett lots running up a total of 37 comedies. Also made at the Metropolitan plant were five serials and three Monty Banks comedies.

The De Mille studio was responsible for five genre pictures, seven farces, two detective stories, eight comedies and serio-dramas, two military pictures, three romances, one satirical drama and five serious dramas. Heading this group of pictures, some of which have not as yet been released, was Cecil B. De Mille's personally directed production, "The King of Kings."

Four Features Finished by Fox Films

Four features and a comedy were finished last week by the Fox Films Corporation at its studio in Hollywood.

The last week of the old year saw the completion of "Soft Living," which has Madge Bellamy in the featured role; "Hello Cheyenne!", a new Tom Mix western; "A Girl in Every Port," Victor McLaglen's initial starring vehicle, and "Four Sons," the John Ford production for which some extra scenes were taken. This latter picture will be given an extended engagement in New York some time in the near future, Fox reports.

The comedy completed in time for the arrival of the new year was Billy West's "Old Wives Who Knew," featuring Hallam Cooley.

Production activities were resumed after the holidays with a renewed vigor at the Fox studio.

"Ladies of the Mob" Title of New Bow Picture

"Ladies of the Mob," a story of underworld life by Ernest William Booth, a prisoner of Folsom Prison, will be Clara Bow's best picture for Paramount. Oliver H. P. Garrett is working on the screen adaptation. William Wellman will direct the Bow vehicle, which will be filmed immediately following the completion of "Red Hair."

The Garrett story recently was published in The American Mercury.

First National Releasing "Patent Leather Kid"

Exhibitors will have first call on the First National special, "The Patent Leather Kid," as the company is releasing the picture to motion picture theatres of the country.

First National believes that an auspicious launching for the new year has been made in deciding to give the Barthelmess production to exhibitors in time for January and February showings.

Brandt Talks on Values

Decries Excessive Overhead Production Costs and Says Columbia Will Not Retrench

JOE BRANDT and Jack Cohn, president and treasurer respectively of Columbia Pictures, are back from the coast following a series of important conferences and sales conventions, which followed closely upon Brandt's recent return from a European trip. Their first statement made upon arrival in New York was that the company had no intention of retrenching, but would offer bigger picture values for the 1928-29 season than ever before.

With regard to production extravagance and retrenchment, Brandt said: "Columbia will not retrench. We will spend more money in every branch of our business the coming season to give the public the best form of entertainment.

"Excessive production costs are not primarily due to the salaries paid to actors or actresses. I will admit that many of the profession are getting salaries out of proportion to their value at the box-office, but I maintain that excessive costs are due in the main to the terrific waste in executive overhead and in the conference system so prevalent at many of the studios. I want to emphasize that this does not apply to Columbia.

"Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been added to payrolls in Hollywood for unit supervisors and production executives, and as a result pictures are costing more and entertainment values are growing less. I personally believe that a director should be kept within reasonable bounds, and that the matter of preparation before a director actually starts to shoot his picture is of the utmost importance. Nevertheless, I claim that the present system as it operates in some studios is a criminal waste."

Columbia has signed a number of important screen personalities for the coming year. Among them are Jack Holt, Lois Wilson, Hobart Bosworth, Bert Lytell and Claire Windsor. In the directorial staff such talent has been signed as George B. Seitz, Edward H. Griffith and Frank Capra.

Columbia's program for the coming year makes necessary important additions to the already commodious stages at the studios in Hollywood. They will be extended in size so that they may care for producing units which will be devoted exclusively to the making of several super-features to be included in next year's program.

43 Features for Pathe

Cecil B. De Mille Studios Will Produce That Number for Coming Year's Program

THE Cecil B. De Mille studios will make 43 productions for the Pathe program for the coming year, according to the latest announcement. That number was decided upon at a recent conference between executives of the two organizations on the coast. Stories, plays and books to the number of eighty had been submitted as likely material for screen reproduction, but these were sifted down to the 43 retained as being worthy of production.

Just what these stories are has not yet been divulged, but the titles will be announced in the near future following a visit to Hollywood by Elmer Pearson, John P. Flinn and Phil Reisman of the Pathe organization. At this coast conference all details of the ambitious program will be discussed and preliminary plans completed.

So far announcement is made of only two pictures. One of these will be "The Godless Girl," which gained considerable publicity when it was reported the picture would deal in part with the subject of atheism. This will be personally directed by Cecil De Mille and will have Lina Basquette in the leading role. George Duryea, comparatively unknown to films, but well known on the speaking stage, will have the male lead, and Eddie Quillan is cast for thecomedy role. The story is by Jeanie Macpherson and Ernest Pascal.

"The Red Mark" is the other definitely announced production and it is now being filmed. It is one of at least two that will be produced by James Cruze. The locale of "The Red Mark" is the French penal colony, New Caledonia, located 1,000 miles east of Australia. Practically every character in the story is a convict. The leading role is being played by Gustav von Seyffertitz. Nona Quartaro, practically an unknown on the screen, is also to be featured.

Corinne Griffith Again With First National

CORINNE GRIFFITH has again returned to First National Pictures, and will make a series of eight pictures under the supervision of Walter Morosco for that company. Frank Lloyd will direct the star in her first, "The Divine Lady;" the director will also make four other films for First National.

Production on "The Divine Lady" will be started within a couple of weeks; the story will be an adaptation of the novel by E. Barrington.

Neill and Mortimer New Columbia Directors

R. William Neill and Edwin Mortimer, two directors of motion pictures, were signed last week by Columbia Pictures to handle several of the company's forthcoming productions.

Both of the new Columbia directors came from the stage; the former was a legitimate San Francisco star while the latter acted in Broadway dramas. Mortimer entered pictures as leading man for Imp, while Neill has been identified with pictures since 1915.

The two new additions to the Columbia directorial roster now bring it up to eight.

Chaplin to Produce Film of Napoleon

BEGINNING in April of this year, Charlie Chaplin will film the story of Napoleon Bonaparte. The production will be in a serious vein, and is to be written, directed and produced by the comedian, according to his personal representative, Caryl Robinson, who has just arrived in New York from the Coast.

Chaplin will not attempt to play the role of the Emperor himself, but he is seeking, through his representatives, a player suitable in America, France and England. Chaplin, it is said, will have authentic backgrounds in his picture, and therefore some of the scenes will be taken in France. He is now doing research work on the life of Napoleon, and will begin the story (a sort of screen biography in connected story form) following his next comedy, “Nowhere.”

Ruth Taylor Signs New Paramount Contract

Ruth Taylor, who was chosen for the role of Lorelei in Paramount's picturization of the Anita Loos book, ‘‘Gentlemen Prefer Blondes,’’ has won a new long-term contract with Paramount. Along with the new agreement she secured a six-weeks' trip to all of the principal cities on the continent.

She left with her mother on January 4 on a good-will trip to the largest theatres of the country for a series of personal appearances heralding the showing of the Loos picture. During this trip around the various theatres she will act as ambassador for Jesse L. Lasky during the forthcoming ‘‘Lasky Sales Contest’’ for film salesmen in the United States and Canada.

Pathe Sets 10 Features for January Release

Pathe's releases for the month of January include ten productions—three of them De Mille's five of them Westerns, one a comedy and the other a drama.

On January 1 the releases were: ‘‘On To Reno’’ and ‘‘Laddie, Be Good.’’ The former, a De Mille production, was directed by James Cruze and stars Marie Prevost supported by Cullen Landis. The latter is a western featuring Bill Cody. The release for January 8 will be ‘‘The Ballyhoo Buster,’’ a Buffalo Bill, Jr., western. Three features are set for the 15: ‘‘Desperate Courage,’’ ‘‘Let 'Er Go, Gallagher’’ and ‘‘A Perfect Gentleman.’’ The first is a Wally Wales western vehicle, the second a De Mille production starring Junior Coghlan, directed by Elmer Clifton, and the latter is a new Monty Banks comedy directed by Clyde Bruckman.

On January 22 ‘‘What Price Beauty,’’ a dramatic feature supervised by Natacha Rombova and presenting Nita Naldi in the featured role, will be released in company with ‘‘The Boss of Rustler's Roost,’’ starring Dan Coleman, and ‘‘The Leopard Lady,’’ another De Mille picture starring Jacqueline Logan.

The 29 will have the last release for the month, a Buddy Roosevelt western entitled ‘‘The Cowboy Rustler.’’

New F. & R. House to Be Called Minnesota

THE new Finkelstein and Ruben theatre which is being constructed at Ninth Street and La Salle Avenue, Minneapolis, will be known as The Minnesota, Finkelstein and Ruben and New York Publix executives have announced. The $2,000,000 house was originally to be called The Minneapolis, which name was chosen before the F. & R. affiliation with Publix. The theatre will be opened in April, although the two story commercial unit of the structure will be ready in January.

The Minnesota together with the new Chateau Dodge at Rochester, will bring the total value of Minnesota theatres up to $25,000,000, according to latest estimates.

Nagel and Brown Sign New M-G-M Contracts

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has renewed contracts with Conrad Nagel and Johnny Mack Brown, featured players. Nagel's last appearance was in M-G-M's ‘‘Quality Street.’’ He has been appearing in some of the Warner Bros. productions. Brown has played in ‘‘The Fair Co-Ed’’ and ‘‘The Divine Woman’’ and has been working of late on the Fox lots.

“That Certain Thing” a January Release

‘‘That Certain Thing,’’ a comedy starring Viola Dana with Ralph Graves as her leading man, is Columbia's first release during January. Frank Capra handled the megaphone on the production, the plot of which has to do with a box lunch factory. Aggie Herring, Syd Crossley and Burr McIntosh are also members of the cast.

Mulhall to Star Alone in “Butter and Egg Man”

Jack Mulhall, First National player who has recently been ‘‘teamed’’ with Dorothy Mackaill, is go it alone in his next picture, a screen version of George S. Kaufman's stage comedy, ‘‘The Butter and Egg Man.’’

Richard Wallace has been assigned to direct ‘‘The Butter and Egg Man.’’

Molly O'Day Signed for Year by First National

First National Pictures has exercised its option on the services of Molly O'Day, for another year. During the next twelve months First National officials have a number of important assignments in store for her.

She is acting as leading woman in ‘‘The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come.’’

Billie Dove Will Star in “The Yellow Lily”

Billie Dove's starring picture following ‘‘The Heart of a Follies Girl,’’ will be an original, called ‘‘The Yellow Lily,’’ written by Lajos Biro, noted European dramatist, who is now preparing treatment for the film.

Alexander Korda, First National director, will direct Miss Dove.

Southern and Bennett to Star in New Pictures

TIFFANY-STAHL PRODUCTIONS is making ready to star Eve Southern, one of its stars in “Wild Geese,” and Belle Bennett, who also acted one of the featured roles in the screen version of the Ostenso novel. Miss Southern, who has just signed a new contract, is now having a story written for her as her first starring vehicle. Miss Bennett has been signed to star in “The Devil Skipper,” uggested from a Jack London story now in the course of production at the Tiffany-Stahl studio on the Coast.

Paramount's “Tillie” to Be a Six-Reeler

No more than 6,000 feet will be the footage of the Paramount-Christie comedy special, ‘‘Tillie's Punctured Romance,’’ which Eddie Sutherland, its director, is now cutting. Al Christie has stated an opinion to the effect that one of the winning qualities of a comedy is its short running time, which enables an exhibitor to turn over his program rapidly.

The footage of ‘‘Tillie's Punctured Romance’’ will be approximately the same as that of Sutherland's other directorial effort, ‘‘Behind the Front.’’ The cutting and previewing work on the picture may take another several weeks, it is expected. The release date has been set for February 18.

In and Out of Town

WILLIAM LE BARON, F B O production chief, left the West Coast New Year's Day for the East for a conference with F B O officials on the product for the new year. He will remain in New York for about a month.

H. M. WARNER, president of Warner Bros., and Jack L. Warner, who is in charge of the Hollywood studio, will sail for Europe on Saturday, January 14, for a two months' trip combining business with pleasure. They will be accompanied by their wives.

SAM SAX, president of Gotham Productions and Lumas Film Corporation, arrived in New York this week after a four months' absence on the West Coast producing Lumas releases.

C. V. HAKE, F B O representative, returned to the New York office recently from a trip through Central America.

DOROTHY FARNUM, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scenarist, left for the Coast this week. She spent the holidays in New York.

CHARLES M. STEELE, supervisor of exchanges for First National, left on Tuesday, January 3, for the South, where he will visit his company's branch office in Charlotte, N. C., Atlanta and Cincinnati.

LEO MEEHAN, F B O director and his wife, Gene Stratton Porter's daughter, left Hollywood this week for New York, where Mr. Meehan will confer with home office executives concerning his future productions.

Studio Briefs

Evelyn Brent has signed a new contract with Paramount. Her first assignment will be the lead opposite Adolphe Menjou in his next picture, as yet untitled. Lothar Mendez will handle the megaphone while Ernest Vajda will supervise the production.

Patrick Kearney, who will adapt "Elmer Gantry," to the stage, has been engaged by M-G-M to prepare an original story for John Gilbert. It is said that the theme will have a dual personality basis.

Andy Devine, juvenile screen heavy, who has had roles in "The Collegians" series of Universal, has been cast for a featured role in "We Americans."

"The Yellow Cameo," a new Patheserial, has been placed in production at the Metropolitan studio in Hollywood with Spencer Bennett directing. Allene Ray heads the cast. In the support are Noble Johnson, Edward Snyder, Frank Redman.

M-G-M has acquired the screen rights to the Jacques Devel stage play, "Her Cardboard Lover," produced last season by Charles Frohman. No announcement has been made as to the plans for the screening of the comedy.

Dorothy Gulliver, who has been featured by Universal in "Honeymoon Flats," has been cast for a part in "Be Yourself," Reginald Denny's next comedy for Universal.

Neil Hamilton will be leading man in "Nothing Ever Happens," the new Esther Ralston vehicle which Paramount will begin shortly to produce.

Peverell Marley, youthful cameraman who filmed "The King of Kings," has been chosen by Cecil B. De Mille to handle the photography on "The Godless Girl."

Varieties to Contain Shots of Head Hunters

TWO single-reelers—"Head Hunters of Ecuador" and "Jungles of the Amazon"—will be released on the regular Fox Varieties schedule —January 22nd and February 5th. These pictures show the adventures of an expedition into the jungles of South America and for the first time, it is said, the Jivero Indians at the grewsome work of shrinking human heads.

The pictures of the head hunters were made after a journey filled with dangers from torrents, mutiny, starvation, poisonous insects and the savages themselves, Fox Films claims. Originally it was intended to present them in feature length, but it was later decided upon to adhere to the policy of presenting only dramatic productions in the feature footage.

The expedition, backed by William Fox, was headed by Dr. Herbert S. Dickey, of the Royal Geographic Society, his wife, and three cameramen equipped with specially constructed motion picture cameras.

Paul Perez, erstwhile publicity and exploitation man and now a title writer, has been re-signed by Mack Sennett as a caption-writer for his Pathe two-reelers.

"China Bound," Ramon Novarro's new M-G-M production, has been placed into work by Director Will Nigh. Much of the picture will be filmed at sea and on location representing a New England fishing village. James Mason has a role.

George Irving will have an important role in Paramount's "Feel My Pulse," starring Bebe Daniels.

Joachim Rehorst, who was at one time a member of Baron Richthofen's famed "flying circus," has been brought to Hollywood by the Caddo Company to act as one of the technical advisors on "Hell's Angels," which United Artists will release.

Marjorie Bonner has been cast for the chief feminine role in "The Trail of Courage," an F B O western which is starring Bob Steele. Dorothy Kitchen was originally slated for the part but was unable to finish her work in another film to begin the Steele western.

Three Christie two-reel comedies are now in work at the Christie plant in Hollywood. They are: "Water Bugs," featuring Billy Dooley, who has Vera Steadman as leading lady; "Holy Mackeral," in which stars Jimmie Adams supported by Lorraine Eddy as leading lady; and "Just the Type," a Bobby Vernon comedy in which the comedian receives support from Doris Dawson.

Gloria Grey has been given the leading role in Jack Perrin's "Hoof Beats of Vengeance," in which will star Rex, the Universal horse star.

Production started last week on "Partners in Crime," the new Paramount vehicle for Beery and Hatton. Mike Donlin, former star of the baseball world, has been assigned the role of a gangster in the picture.

James Mason has joined the cast of the M-G-M sea story, "China Bound."

Carl Laemmle, Jr., son of the Universal president, in addition to his duties as supervisor of productions, is writing an original story for a future Reginald Denny feature, called "Off Tackle," and dealing with football.

Herman J. Mankiewicz has been chosen for the job of titling Paramount's "The Last Command."

Roy D'Arcy will have the role of the villain in "The Actress," a Pinero play which M-G-M is about to film with Norma Shearer in the stellar role.

Jack Raymond has been signed for a prominent part in Universal's "Fallen Angels."

Laon Ramon, child actor, will play the part of six year old Abie, in Paramount's "Abie's Irish Rose."

Estelle Taylor has returned to the Fox lot, on which she made some of her first screen vehicles, to play the role opposite George O'Brien in "Honor Bound." Production starts in the near future.

Rose Gore, character actress, has been added to the cast of "Has Anybody Here Seen Kelly?" in which Bessie Love and Tom Moore are co-starring for Universal.

Milton Holmes, juvenile player, has been assigned one of the principal roles in the Pathe production, "His Country."

Cissie Fitzgerald will have the role of the old burlesque actress in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," the M-G-M picture which Herbert Brenon will produce.

Estelle Bradley, who has performed in Mermaid comedies for Educational, will be Johnny Arthur's leading lady in "Wildcat Valley," a new Tuxedo comedy.

Florence Vidor will support Emil Jannings in "The Patriot," the Paramount picture which Ernst Lubitsch will direct.

Betty Boyd, leading lady in Educational comedies, has the principal feminine role in "Indiscreet Pete," a new Mermaid comedy starring Jerry Drew.

Lya Mara, Defu-First National's star, has begun working on "Sweetheart," her second picture for that company.

Plan 6,300 Seat Theatre to be Built in London

ACCORDING to an announcement made this week by Arch Selwyn, theatrical producer, he has concluded arrangements with Charles B. Cochran, London theatrical man, for the erection of motion picture theatre to be built on a gigantic scale in London. The proposed playhouse will have a seating capacity of 6,300, which will give it rank as the largest in the world. The largest in London at present is the Paramount house, the Plaza, which seats 1,900.

Mr. Selwyn said that Cochran had been working on plans for the theatre for the past two years. Construction plans had been drawn, he said, and it is expected the house will be completed in about 18 months.

The policy of the theatre will be based on the lines established in this country for the palatial cinema of huge capacity. First-run pictures with added features in the way of music and stage divertissements will comprise the programs. Admission prices will be 1 and 2 shillings (25 and 50 cents, and the evening scale will have a 75 cent top.

Neither Mr. Selwyn nor Mr. Cochran plans to operate the theatre. They are negotiating now with British and American producing companies to take over the theatre on a rental basis, according to the announcement.

Key City Reports

New York City

AFTER a seeming lack of interest a couple of weeks before Xmas the cash customers came back strong last week resulting in excellent grosses for practically every theatre along Broadway, some of the houses even putting on late shows to accommodate the spendthrifts.

All the Publix houses did exceptionally well—Richard Dix was at the Paramount in "The Gay Defender" (Par) and all performances were well attended; likewise "Wings" at the Criterion and "Now We're in the Air" (Par) at the Rialto. The latter finished at the end of the week to good business for the entire run. The "Dove" followed in.

They were waiting in line in the early forenoon alongside the Roxy, where "Silk Legs" (Fox) and a special Xmas program was showing and the Capitol also did a real box office business with Marion Davies in "Quality Street" (M-G-M.). At the Rivoli Gilda Gray continued to shake 'em up in "The Devil Dancer" (U. A.) She also shook the tickets loose from the box office register.

"Love" continues at the Embassy as one of the biggest hits that house has had since "The Merry Widow" opened there. It's great to watch the scalpers work when a live one comes to town—and these boys are after all the "Love" they can get away with. M-G-M's "Enemy" came into the Astor and is reported to be doing well at the start off. At the Times Square "Sunrise" also shared the general prosperity, although this picture has had rather rough sledding of late. It is being heavily advertised in the dailies. "Uncle Tom's Cabin (U) continues at the Central and the "Private Life of Helen of Troy" at the Globe. The fact that word has gone around that this picture is to go into the Paramount at regular prices has hurt the trade a bit. "Chicago" (Pathe-De Mille) is doing well at the Gaiety, especially during matinees. The Strand also shared in the good news with Billie Dove in "The Love Mart" (F. N.) as did "The Gaucho" at the Liberty.

Seattle

"'TWAS the week before Christmas"—and, as usual, business in the picture houses suffered to a noticeable extent, despite an attempt on the part of at least two houses to bolster up business with special added attractions that should get extra box office money.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre led the rest of the houses with a bill that featured Miss Nora Bayes, advertised as the highest artiste in the world." Miss Bayes is said to have received $3,000 a week for her showings in the Northwest, and there is no doubt that she did help the box office. Some like her work, others did not, but she put the bill across to a good gross. The film attraction was "She's a Sheik," which was not very well liked, but a fine Fanchon-Marco Ideal called "Collegiate" and some clever musical numbers by Hermie King and his orchestra saved the show. Gross about $17,000.

Second in the running, probably, came Bob Bender's Columbia theatre, with "Madame Pompadour" as the film attraction and Vic Meyers' Orchestra on the stage. The film was not particularly strong as a box office attraction, but the Meyers band, famous for work at the Hotel Butler in Seattle, as well as Columbia Records and Broadcasting Station KJR, put the bill across in nice shape. At any other time of the year, it would undoubtedly have been a big box office show, but this engagement did not pull any better than the average attraction at this house.

"The Garden of Allah" at the United Artists theatre played one week to average business. It was a picture that failed to register strongly, yet did a consistent business for the engagement. Average gross.

"A Reno Divorce" at the Blue Mouse theatre failed to please the patrons, and even with a strong supporting program of Movietone and Vitaphone subjects, this week's bill was off. The picture played for six days only, and was then pulled to make way for the following attraction. Business was noticeably below the usual strong gross that this house has been piling up.

"The Thirteenth Hour" at the Liberty theatre was an average attraction that suffered the pre-holiday slump, as well as all the other films. It played a week to fair business, still below normal.

"After Six Days" has been playing an extended engagement at advanced prices at John Danz's Strand theatre, and has been doing a fairly good business, despite the season. It is a good holiday attraction and has been strongly advertised and exploited. Business above average.

"St. Elmo" was brought back as the film attraction at Pantages, but failed to do much business. It was offered with a fair program of vaudeville and together the two units were unable to get much gross. "Discord" at the New Orpheum was a distinct failure, inasmuch as the film has no names, was too long, and was poorly produced technically. With a fair bill of vaudeville, the program registered the lowest, probably, that this house has had since it opened several months ago.

Neighborhood and suburban business showed the same general depression that was felt throughout the first run district.

Atlanta

THE holiday season brought a noticeable increase in the box-offices of Atlanta theatres last week. Before each theatre lines formed in the evenings and nearly every afternoon.

"Love," showing at Loew's Grand, proved the prize boxoffice ringer. Greta Garbo and John Gilbert were crowned supreme lovers, if unceasing lines bespeak such crowning. The theatre gave an extra show three days in attempt to satisfy the rowds, but many were turned away and SRO being out shortly after the opening of the box-office each day. Next door, Colleen Moore held forth at the Howard in "Her Wild Oat," drawing good houses. She reached the theatre's expectations.

The Capitol offered "The Four Flusher," with a young star cast, which proved extraordinarily popular. Marion Nixon and Geo. Lewis were featured, along with many of the cast previously seen in Universal's popular series, "The Collegians."

Keith's Georgia showed Adolphe Menjou in "Serenade," which brought, also, good houses.

"Wild Geese," playing at the Rialto, had a good week, but not as good as it deserved. Critics gave this picture some enviable hands. The Metropolitan enjoyed above the average week with "Slightly Used," featuring May McAvoy and Conrad Nagel. News from the New Alamo comes that by 10:30 A. M. each day the old SRO sign was even itself breaking. The bill for the week was a daily change of second runs.

The Tudor played "The Frontiersman" the first part of the week to a fair house, and Tom Mix in "Arizona Wild Cat" the latter part to capacity audiences throughout daily and evening performances.

Chicago

BUSINESS increased considerably during the week following Christmas, practically all Chicago theatres showing a better box office, those in the loop especially doing a big business with matinee hold-outs being noted at practically all the latter houses.

"The Valley of the Giants" and a great Christmas stage show played to big business at the Chicago throughout the week, while at the Oriental Paul Ash was back after six weeks' vacation, and "Spotlight" was the screen feature, the combination accounting for better than average attendance. "The Gorilla" completed the first week of its run at McVickers to good business and "Love" drew well at the Roosevelt. Chicago also put its endorsement on the policy of United Artists Theatre, straight screen entertainment, and went in large numbers to see "The Dove." "The Fortune Hunter" at the Orpheum had a satisfactory week and the Monroe did fair business with "Silk Legs."

The Avalon had as its attraction, "She's a Sheik" and Buddy Fisher's big Christmas show, which pulled good crowds afternoons and evenings, the same being true at the Capitol, which had "Buttons" as its screen feature and Husk O'Hare's "Extravaganza." "The Gay Defender" and big Christmas stage show accounted for good box office report at the Tivoli, while at the Uptown, "She's a Sheik" and Benny Kreuger's gala Christmas stage show fared well.

"Buttons" also went over big at the Sheridan, where Verne Buck and his band held the stage.

At the Granada and Marbro "The Wizard" was the screen attraction. At the former, Benny Meroff officiated on the stage and at the latter Kaley, both houses having satisfactory box office reports.

Ottawa

MOST everybody in Ottawa, Ontario, took in a show during Christmas Week and, what with good wishes, good cheer and good business, the exhibitors had reason to be merry. There were several hockey counter-attractions during the week but they did not cut in very severely on theatre crowds. The Harvard Glee Club sang to an empty house one night.

The week's film honors were carried off by "Camille" with Norma Talmadge, this being the screen piece at the Centre Theatre. Business was so good, in spite of the picture's sad ending, that Manager Don Stapleton decided on a second week.

The runner-up was "Get Your Man." in which Clara Bow did most of the getting. This enjoyed a full week at the Regent Theatre, aided and abetted by a Canadian Government special scenic and the Belanger-Jarvis flyweight championship fight pictures in toto.

A unique combination drew plenty of people, juveniles particularly, to the Imperial Theatre. In the afternoons, "Peter Pan" and "A Dog of the Regiment" formed the bill while at nights the Rin-Tin-Tin feature held the screen alone. Manager Ray Tubman felt that he might have done better if he had played "Peter Pan" alone as a Christmas revival after he had heard the comments. But the week was big as it was.

Not another person could have been shoehorned into B. F. Keith's Theatre on the Christmas holiday where "The Bugle Call," starring Jackie Coogan, was the feature and attendance was high during the remainder of the week.

Boston

HOLIDAY week exceeded all expectations in all of the Boston down town and suburban theatres, with box offices apparently trying to make up for the pre-Christmas lull.

With vacations for all New England Colleges falling at this time, audiences were especially marked by the presence of college youth. Managers who made film selections with such audiences in view happily cashed in on the week.

"Two Flaming Youths" as the feature at the Metropolitan was one of these films which drew big. Gene Rodemich and his band threw in a few real college numbers for good measure, much to the enjoyment of the audiences. "Beau Sabreur" opened Saturday night.

Loew's State had for its feature "Love"—and how the college youth ate it up! A Chinese stage presentation, "Honorable Wu," made good variety.

Other down town houses grossing well were the Washington Street Olympia with "Valley of the Giants"; Fenway with "Shanghaied"; Lancaster with "Now We're In the Air"; Modern and Beacon with "The Heart of Maryland" and "Sailor Izzy Murphy"; Keith-Albee Boston with "Dress Parade"; Capitol with "Seventh Heaven"; University with "Woman On Trial" and "The College Widow"; Loew's Orpheum with "Garden of Allah"; and Exeter with "Seventh Heaven."

Los Angeles

THERE has not been any noticeable slump in box office receipts of theatres in Los Angeles during the Yuletide. In fact, each theatre enjoyed an increase in patronage although it rained every night last week.

Monday night marked the brilliant opening of the United Artists Theatre, showing "My Best Girl." The picture is doing excellent work with a full house constantly.

Colleen Moore's latest picture, "Her Wild Oat," was well received and was up to the usual standard set by her previous pictures.

"Quality Street" at the Metropolitan didn't go over so well nor did "Old Ironsides" at the Million Dollar. Each night a popular player in "Old Ironsides" appeared on the stage and this helped to draw out customers.

So far "Sunrise" at Carthay Circle has done a bigger business at the box office than any of the preceding Fox pictures for the same length of time.

Grauman's Chinese Theatre showing "The Gaucho" is the one that is doing the business with choice seats always sold days before the performance. "Word of mouth" advertising is helping a great deal.

Cleveland

THIS was record holiday week at all of the local theatres. The Stillman had to include extra performances to take care of the demand for seats. Long lines in front of the Allen, State and Palace blocked traffic all day long. Secondary box offices were opened to clear the congestion and facilitate service. Standing room was sold in all of the houses.

"Love," the Greta Garbo-John Gilbert version of the Tolstoy novel "Anna Karenina," broke previous house records at the Stillman. Seven performances were given instead of the usual five. It is being held over, of course. Lon Chaney in his latest picture, "London After Midnight," packed the Allen both matinees and evenings. Almost as good as "The Holy Three." Jackie Coogan in "The Bugle Call" got a 100 per cent response at the State. The picture was well liked and the star attracted old and young alike. Ruth Elder appeared in person, which helped pack the house for every performance. "Rose of the Golden West" taxed the capacity of the large Palace theatre. A beautiful picture, beautifully presented, delighted the tremendous holiday crowds that attended every show. Reade's Hippodrome had good business all week with "A Hero for a Night," good comedy drama, as the main attraction on a well balanced combination bill. "The Irresistible Lover" brought droves of people to Keith's East 105th street. where it amused the crowds who were looking for pleasant light entertainment. "Night Life," consistently interesting drama, told simply and with charm, got its full share of the holiday trade at the Cameo. "My Best Girl," playing its first-run neighborhood engagement at the Park, did great business both afternoons and evenings. Neighborhood houses were not so happy over results. Their holiday business failed to equal last year's.

Legitimate theatre competition was keen. "My Maryland" was sold out for every performance at the Hanna. "Tommy" pulled big audiences to the Ohio. "The Great God Brown" played to capacity crowds every night at the Playhouse. Fritz Leiber and his Shakespearean repertoire company packed the Little theatre with "Macbeth." In addition, there was the University of Michigan play, and musical attractions at Masonic Hall.

Kansas City

BUSINESS was anything but lively at virtually all first run down town theatres last week, due, it was believed, to the late rush of Christmas shoppers. At Loew's Midland, John Gilbert, in "Love," did not play to near the attendance which it deserved while Marion Davies in "Quality Street" fell below the normal mark at the Newman. The same can be said of "St. Elmo" at the Liberty.

The Royal offered its last picture before closing, January 1, permanently ,Jackie Coogan in "Buttons," but the attendance was a continuation of the type of attendance which has caused the theatre to close.

"Her Wild Oat" at the Mainstreet did a fair business, as did "Very Confidential" at the Pantages and "The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson, at the Globe. "The Fireman" at the Capitol attracted crowds below the average.

Pittsburgh

AND the people didst flock to the theatres the day after, also the midnight show Christmas Night. Grand, Cameo, State, and the burlesque houses had midnight shows scheduled but the jam was so great the Blackstone was opened with no music and was filled. Reserved seats to the burlesque houses were scalped for five dollars a seat. An odd incident was the fact that over 1,000 people waited in front of the Penn until 12:30 thinking that house was having a midnight show but none was advertised or announced in any way. The town went show crazy and on Monday all theatres did capacity.

The Penn played "Love" and with unusually fine stage show broke all records each day. Monday (holiday prices) was the biggest day in Pittsburgh history as the theatre played to over 17,000 people that day, doing five shows and no seats in the house from 1 P.M. to 10 P.M. including the five o'clock show. The rest of the week the big house stood them out from 1 to 4 and 7 to 10 every day with Saturday again a repetition of Monday. And the other picture houses did very well, even though the Penn played to more than its share of people. Grand having Colleen Moore in "Her Wild Oat" gave that house a good profit. "She's A Sheik" and vaudeville headed by Julian Eltinge at the Davis did remarkably well. The Aldine with Jackie Coogan in "Buttons" and vaudeville broke records for the vaudeville policy which has been in effect since Labor Day. Olive Borden in "Pajamas" at the Olympic, "The Four Flusher" at the Cameo, and "Brass Knuckles" at the State all did well, too. The Harris, a pop vaudeville house, played "Little Mickey Grogan" as the feature always does a steady business and this week it was steadier than usual.

Milwaukee

MILWAUKEEANS, it seems, celebrated the holiday week by attending theatres —a week of broken records at practically every house. Matinee business was unusually heavy at all down town theatres.

"Love" was the Merrill's offering—it kept the lobby as well as the theatre packed to capacity just about all of the day and evening. The Wisconsin enjoyed unusually heavy patronage. "The Gay Defender" was the picture and Sophie Tucker joined the Playboys in their offering. "My Friend from India" was very well received at the Palace. "On Your Toes" brought in extremely good business to the Alhambra. "Tell It to Sweeney" kept the Strand well filled at all performances. "Ginsberg the Great" was a good business getter at the Garden. All in all it was a most satisfying week for manager and patron alike.

Neighborhood theatres got their share of good business. The Egyptian on the north side opened on Saturday with capacity houses and continued throughout the week to pack them in. "Now We're in the Air" was the picture. The Modjeska and Garfield offered "Camille;" the Oriental, Tower and Uptown showed "7th Heaven," and at each theatre patronage was very good. The Venetian enjoyed unusually good business with the "Magic Flame." "Les Miserables" at the Colonial was well received. "Moment of Temptation" drew exceedingly well at the Milwaukee.

Baltimore

PATRONAGE at the moving picture theatres in Baltimore during the week beginning Monday, December 26, was very good for most of the first-run houses but even during that week, considered the best in the year for theatres, it could be seen that this city with 19,000 first-run seats, has too many for the estimated population.

Of course, the first day of the week being a holiday, all the theatres did a capacity business and the opening of the new Keith-Albee Garden proved a high-light for that day's business as 8,000 persons attended, with afternoons at 75 cents and nights at $1 top.

"Love," featuring Greta Garbo and John Gilbert, pulled them in strongly from the first day to the last. But patrons went away dissatisfied, claiming the picture was not as good as "Flesh and the Devil," being minus the fire shown in the latter picture. Whether this was caused by Censor Board eliminations has not been ascertained.

At Loew's Century, Lon Chaney, always a strong drawing card in Baltimore, appeared in "London After Midnight," with Sam Robbins and his Baltimoreans on the same bill and the attendance was strong throughout the week, although this Chaney show did not measure up to what was expected.

All during the week "Husbands or Lovers," with Emil Jannings and eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville, pulled them in strong at the Keith-Albee Garden. Keith's Hippodrome also had a good feature picture in "The College Hero," and with five acts of vaudeville, business was excellent throughout the week.

"Very Confidential," although liked for its humor, did not pull them in strong at the New theatre with Madge Bellamy in the starring role and a stage prologue on the bill.

"Her Wild Oat," with Colleen Moore and Frank Silver and his orchestra and dancers, proved a pretty good drawing bill at the Stanley, but business there dropped off to about fair after the first day of the week.

"Shanghai Bound," with Richard Dix and Ulis, Ross and Reeves on the bill, pulled them in only fairly well at the Rivoli.

Business at Warner's Metropolitan was good throughout the week wtih "Old San Francisco," featuring Dolores Costello, but the attendance did not come up to what was expected. Vitaphone numbers were also on the bill.

The Little theatre went along with good business with "Stark Love" for its second week.

Minneapolis

THE past week was not at all bad from the standpoint of moving pictures, in spite of the fact that it included Christmas. Christmas and the day before Christmas were generally poor, but Monday business started to pick up and the balance of the week showed good grosses at the box office. Bebe Daniels in "She's a Sheik" was the film attraction at the State theatre, although the big drawing card was probably the famous F. & R. Kiddie Revue. At any rate, the house did a very good business for the week.

"The Gorilla" played to average houses at the Garrick, although it was not as good an attraction as the rival mystery film, "The Cat and the Canary." It was not strong enough to hold over for a second week.

John Gilbert and Greta Garbo opened at the Strand in "Love" and this picture proved of such strength that it was necessary to hold it over for a second week. Fred Thomson attracted western fans to the Lyric in good numbers in "Jesse James," while "The Cat and the Canary," fresh from its triumph at the Garrick, went into the Grand and kept the crowds coming. Virginia Valli in "Ladies Must Dress" was the picture attraction at Pantages, although a local "kiddie revue" was responsible as much as anything else for a good week. The Hennepin-Orpheum showed Vera Reynolds in "The Main Event" and the Seventh Street theatre an aviation picture, "Aflame in the Sky." The neighborhood houses, as a rule, enjoyed good business, with the school children still on vacation and anxious to be amused. The Lagoon, Lyndale, Loring and Rialto included on their programs such pictures as "Madame Pompadour," "What Price Glory," "The American Beauty" and "Camille."

Tampa

THE double holiday last week gave the theatres of Tampa an opening that was a wow. Every house in the city enjoyed excellent business, with the big down town houses "turning 'em away" both Sunday and Monday.

The Tampa had two excellent cards. "Love" was featured the first half and "Quality Street" the last, with a stage presentation the entire week. Both pictures went over fine and gave the house a big week.

The Victory opened the week with "The Girl in the Pullman" and it caught the holiday crowds of the first two days. "The Valley of the Giants" drew very good the next two and "The Chinese Parrot" with the usual bill of five acts of vaudeville went over big for the last three.

Both the Strand and Franklin had big business with "Women's Wares," "The Joy Girl" and "Tea for Three," featured by the Strand, and "Singed," "Buttons" and "The Swift Shadow' having the billing for the Franklin.

It was a very Merry Christmas week for Tampa show-folks.

Cincinnati

JUST as all roads led to Rome in the olden days, so did all roads, local at least, lead to the new Albee Theatre during the week, where each day a solid lineup at the box office was the rule rather than the exception. The capacity business for the week was partially due to the curious crowds who desired to inspect the extraordinary appointments and innovations which were embodied in the house, and partially due to the excellence of the program. "Get Your Man" was the screen feature. Several specially selected presentation acts helped swell the returns. This condition, however, reacted adversely on the attendance of the other downtown houses, including those of the Libson chain, of which the Albee is a unit.

At the Capitol, "When a Man Loves" was well liked by the Barrymore fans, and, although Vitaphone helped somewhat, the attendance for the week did not come up to the previous records. "Dress Parade" at the Lyric got a fair break for the week. This house is located in close proximity to the new Albee, and probably took care of some of the overflow from the new house. The Walnut, presenting "Becky," proved satisfactory from an attendance standpoint, considering the strong opposition in town for the week. "Open Range" at the Strand, got over to good returns, and was well liked by followers of Zane Grey stories. At the Family, "Wolf Fangs" held up nicely, building up as the split-week engagement progressed.

All in all it was an off week in Cincinnati, due to opposition and the holiday season, which helped the slump in majority of the houses.

Albany, Schenectady and Troy

WITH ideal weather conditions prevailing, business came back to the motion picture theatre of Albany, Troy and Schenectady with a bang. This was true with both downtown and residential houses. Some of the theatres, notably the Leland, in Albany, reported the biggest Christmas business in the history of the house.

At the Mark Strand in Albany, "My Best Girl" played to a whoppin' business on Monday and filled the theatre the remainder of the week. The same might be said of the Mark Ritz, where "Two Flaming Youths" went the limit in the way of entertainment and received support from the public through the box office. At the Leland, "The Flaming Forest" caught the fancy of the crowds and the week was most successful from the standpoint of the ticket office. At the Clinton Square, "Married Alive" proved itself a good business getter. Practically every neighborhood house in Albany reported they had nothing to complain of when it came to sizing up the week's receipts.

In the neighboring city of Troy, the Christmas Day business was of smashing proportions on Sunday, but slumped somewhat during the days that followed. "The Shepherd of the Hills" held up well at the Troy theatre for four days and was followed by "Becky," which ran only fair for three days. At the Lincoln, "Quality Street" did only fair for the split week and the same held true of "Paid to Love."

One of the outstanding features of the week occurred in Schenectady, when "The Jazz Singer," coupled with the Vitaphone, inaugurated a new policy at the Strand theatre, and with boosted prices packed them in like sardines. At the State theatre "The Loves of Carmen" did what might be termed fair business.

Salt Lake City

THEATRE business in this city is very much on the improve, having commenced with big business all over the city Monday, the 26th. Heavy snowstorms have prevailed since and the week proved to be an exceptionally good one.

The Capitol theatre, under the management of George E. Carpenter, has been crowded to capacity all week. The feature picture at this house was Clara Bow in "Get Your Man," which proved to be a big drawing card, as well as was the stage attraction, "The Polar Idea," a Fanchon and Marco presentation.

An exceptionally good week was reported at the American theatre during the week's run of Richard Barthelmess and Patsy Ruth Miller in "White Black Sheep." Colleen Moore in "Her Wild Oat" filled the Paramount Empress throughout the week. "Silk Legs," featuring Madge Bellamy and James Hall was a good drawing card at the Victory theatre and was well received as a cheer picture.

The feature offering at the Gem theatre this past week was "Discord" with the European artists, Lil Dagover and Gosta Ekman. Very good business was enjoyed during this showing.

Central Pennsylvania

A SPLENDID come-back was scored by leading Harrisburg theatres in the last week of the old year, following the rather dull week immediately preceding Christmas. With the holiday shopping over everybody went in strongly for amusements, and the theatres apparently provided a very large percentage of the Yuletide entertainment. Managers say that while they expected big improvement in business after Christmas, based on their experience of previous years, the crowds that attended the picture shows considerably exceeded expectations. This was attributed in large degree to the fine quality of the attractions that were offered.

The town went wild over Greta Garbo and John Gilbert in "Love," which was the feature at Loew's Regent. It is a known fact that many persons went to see this play a second time during the same week, and some went even oftener. If the Regent's experience is typical of what may be expected elsewhere, "Love" is going to sweep the country as an outstanding artistic and box office success.

Clara Bow, who has a tremendous Harrisburg following, was pictured in "Get Your Man" at the Victoria, and the theatre was packed at almost every performance. No less successful was the Colonial attraction, Colleen Moore in "Her Wild Oat," which kept the house filled almost to capacity throughout the week.

At the State the last half of the week the film offering was Rin Tin Tin in "Jaws of Steel," which proved popular. Broad Street drew crowds with Johnnie Walker, and the dog Silverstreak, in "The Cross Breed." Another Clara Bow picture "Roughhouse Rosie," appealed to the crowds in the Grand, while the Russell showed Syd Chaplin in "The Better 'Ole."

Birmingham, Ala.

CHRISTMAS week proved a winner in Birmingham theatres, nearly all houses sharing in the general prosperity. The new Alabama, with elaborate presentations and stage show, Ralph Pollock and his band; Joe Alexander, organist, coupled with "Spotlight" (Par.), featuring Esther Ralston, had very big business, as might have been expected, on opening week. The Ritz, with five acts of Keith vaudeville, and "Ladies Must Dress" (Fox), with Virginia Valli, and a special feature, Fox-Case Movietone, also had very big business, as did Loew's Temple, with the regular Loew acts, and Greta Garbo and John Gilbert in "Love" (M-G-M), although some critics declared the film not up to "Flesh and the Devil." At Loew's Temple, Tommy Christian and his Stage Band is attracting favorable comment. Pantages pulled a Mutt Matinee, on Friday, and let all kids in who brought their canines along. The occasion for this was Rin-Tin-Tin in "Jaws of Steel" (Warner). The Pantages vaudeville bill was pronounced very good.

Among the strictly picture houses, the Trianon, with Colleen Moore's "Her Wild Oat" (First National) ran away with the business, while the Strand, with Reginald Denny's "Out All Night," only fared comparatively well, as did the Galax, with a split bill. The Lyric, with the Marcus show and "Racing Blood," had a good week. The Jefferson, roadshowing the musical sensation "Hit the Deck," with Marion Saki and a bevy of Broadway stars, had a fair week, but for some reason Birmingham seems to be laying off the musicals and the show did not gross anywhere near what its merit entitled it to. The Empire, with the final week of the Richard Allan Players, is reported to have had fair business with "Seventh Heaven." The Empire closed December 31, and no announcement as to future policy as yet is forthcoming.

New Orleans

NEW ORLEANS' holiday business was record-breaking at the down-town theatres during the past week, despite several days of inclement weather.

Loew's State theatre did a huge business and Manager Rodney D. Toups gives full credit to "Serenade," the Paramount vehicle starring Adolphe Menjou, with Kathryn Carver. Five strong acts of vaudeville were presented in conjunction with the bill.

The Saenger theatre played Colleen Moore in "Her Wild Oat." Colleen has a large following here and the result was that the theatre did a nice business all week. The least least said about the New Idea Publix stage show the better, although Ben Black is proving a more popular "personality leader" than his predecessor.

At the Palace theatre "In the First Degree," with Alice Calhoun, was the film offering, but it was the personal appearance of little Jackie "Hoo" Ray, the little red-headed star of "Our Gang" comedies, that drew crowds there. A musical comedy show was presented on the stage.

"The Main Event," with Vera Reynolds, was the Orpheum feature photoplay, but without the vaudeville, business would not have been what it turned cut to be.

'Man, Woman and Sin," with John Gilbert, was the Strand feature and the flappers flocked there all week to see their hero. Business was far above average. "The Lovelorn" packed them in at the Liberty theatre. The New Lyceum, recently renovated and beautified, played "The Gay Retreat," and its business soared. Although "Ben Hur" had its local premiere at the Strand theatre, Orleanians went to the Trianon in large numbers all week.

The Tudor showed Jetta Goudal in "The Forbidden Woman," and its business was up to average. Mary Pickford in "My Best Girl," had its local premiere elsewhere and Buster Keaton in "College" drew them to the Crescent theatre.

San Francisco

THE pre-Christmas week in this city was the same as it usually is at that time, not as good as other weeks. The reason given by the several managers was that the shoppers together with their children have time for nothing else but shopping.

Because of the attractiveness and high quality of the pictures presented during the week by both first and second run theatres, it is thought that was the reason more attended the motion picture houses than usually do the week before Christmas. "Man Crazy," shown at the Loew Warfield theatre, together with the wonderful presentation act, "The Starlets," more than filled the theatre Saturday and Sunday. The comedy, "Up in Arms," also proved very popular and this program was considered one of the most popular ever shown.

"The College Widow," "Back Stage" and the presentation act shown at the Granada theatre attracted many. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," shown at the California theatre, was considered a wonderful production from the standpoint of acting, dress and comedy. "Stark Love," something new in the motion picture line, attracted many to the St. Francis theatre, but many thought it was a little too deep in sections for an entertainment. The thrilling parts seemed to be enjoyed by all.

The Union Square theatre filled its seats with "The Return of Boston Blacky," "Weak Knees" and the vaudeville acts. The Cameo theatre did well with "The Desert Pirate" and Chapter 8 of "Scotland Yard." "The Golden Gate theatre is proud of its record made with the picture "Discord," the comedy shown the news reels and the acts of vaudeville. The picture "Romance," as shown at the Coliseum theatre, a residential house, did exceptionally well, many having seen it played as a first run, again desiring to see it.

Newsreel Resume

There was not exactly a dearth of film stories in the newsreels this week, but there were very few really important highlights such as previous weeks had. It depends on the rush of events, of course, and whether they be of the ordinary calibre of things or something mighty important news stories as played up in the newsreels are generally alive and almost always interesting. This week there was not much doing (the only stories that won a general break in the different reels were the reception on New Year's Day at the White House and the vogue of winter sports) but the reels were leavened with exclusive stories, glimpses of football, Lindbergh and such sort of attractions to give them substance.

What the week's releases contained is roughly summarized as follows:

Paramount News, No. 45: Army engineers demolish North Carolina bridge; Hughes and others who will figure in Pan-American Congress; Tunney in Florida; a Coast Guard cutter after bootlegging craft; new babies who arrived on Christmas Day; sons of railroad men enjoy a luncheon; scenes in capitols of Poland and Lithuania after arbitration to avoid war; ice champs at Lake Placid; Argentina's beautiful falls at Iguezu; the search for the lost "Dawn."

Thompson).

Newspaper Opinions

"King of Kings"—Pathe-De Mille, Columbia Theatre, San Francisco

Chronicle: "De Mille's magnum opus, 'King of Kings,' had its San Francisco premiere yesterday at the Columbia theatre, drawing large audiences. It is a big, beautiful, impressive film, great in many respects; marvel in matter of production and direction. Taken as entertainment and leaving out any claim to ethics, philosophy or religion, 'King of Kings' stands up with greatest pictures that have issued from studios at Hollywood."

News: "In producing 'The King of Kings' De Mille has exceeded any of his past contributions to screen, not excepting even his great 'The Ten Commandments.'"

Examiner: "One of introductory titles in 'The King of Kings' recalls that Christ commanded carrying of his message to uttermost parts of earth. There seems little room for doubt that this picture will closely approximate such a task, for it is picture that—for one reason or another—will have very nearly universal appeal."

Bulletin: "Magnificently produced, conscientiously treated, Cecil B. De Mille has given screen his finest work in 'The King of Kings.' It is simple, yet straightforward story of Jesus of Nazareth, powerful in handling story intently interesting throughout."

"Love"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Embassy Theatre, New York City

News: "Most exquisitely beautiful thing screen has offered. Greta Garbo far and away reigning motion picture queen. Gorgeous Swedish charmer surpasses all other efforts. Gilbert cuts imposing figure and fire in his eyes as he makes passionate love to ravishing Anna impels one to see picture a second and third time. . . . Our silent drama can't get much farther than this. It is too utterly wonderful!"

Times: "Greta Garbo outshines any other performance she has given. Miss Garbo's singularly fine acting as Anna held the audience in unusual silence."

Herald-Tribune: "Is beautifully done and twin stars leave nothing to be desired. Seems to us that Greta Garbo is more beautiful than ever before. She tears one's heart to shreds. Gilbert a wonderfully fine actor."

Telegraph: "Walter Winchell's line is always appropriately descriptive of Gilbert. 'He burns 'em up and knocks 'em cold.' And that is what Jack does once again. Greta Garbo does best work which has thus far marked her American career. Picture beautiful throughout its length. Backgrounds have been selected so that they enhance film, and direction of Goulding leaves nothing to be desired."

American: "Undoubtedly will score hit at box-office. There is much of beauty. Location scenes glorious. John Gilbert and Greta Garbo have made names for themselves as silver sheet lovers in previous production, so their triumph in this picture is merely a repetition of their former success."

Journal: "Miss Garbo, the exotically beautiful Swedish star, is fascinating as Russian heroine, and Gilbert is dashingly handsome."

Sun: "Magnificently photographed . . . it conjures up electric feeling of surging romantic passion. Gilbert plays role to its romantic hilt. Miss Garbo captures you with her uncanny powers of fascination. One reads volumes in closeups of her eyes and other volumes in her smoldering, repressed gestures."

Evening World: "Takes its place among very rare film characterizations which may be classed as great. Miss Garbo ascends to heights seldom scaled by screen artist. Her characterization has seldom been equalled. As for pictorial composition, picture is a marvel. Scenes are things of sheer beauty, and there is a military horse race which is the most thrilling thing imaginable. This is one picture you can't miss, no matter how intelligent you are, and no matter what your attitude is to the movies."

Graphic: "Sympathy of scenes, unfolding big story in smoothly linked sequences, action dramatically building toward high-tension climax and suddenly smashing fade-out, leaving an audience breathless and a fine picture finished. Goulding has done impressively beautiful thing. Has no dull moments nor rough spots. Garbo has an unusual and individual beauty that is not matched in all movie colony, and with special lighting in some of closeups she was exquisite."

Telegram: "Military steeplechase one of most exciting things of sort ever filmed. Miss Garbo once again proves herself incomparably beautiful and alluring."

Brooklyn Eagle: "Picture has been well-named. Immensely effective and satisfying. . . . compelling love chapter, white-hot in its more amorous moments and engrossing in between."

"The Thirteenth Hour"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Capitol Theatre, New York City

World: "Exciting moments, almost endless manipulation of secret passages and stairways, trapdoors, sliding panels, Barrymore playing a sort of Caligari character, and magnificent police dog, Napoleon."

Journal: "Clutching hands reach out of velvet curtains, glittering eyes peer through clocks; people appear and disappear through sliding panels and secret staircases. Is corking good mystery melodrama with plenty of thrills and more than usual suspense. Napoleon excellent actor. . . . new movie wow!"

:: "The Check-Up" ::

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who consider it "Fair"; the third, the number who consider it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who consider it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated at 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together, and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

The Chinese Parrot

Mystery Picture Will Entertain

(Reviewed by E. G. Johnston)

PEARL divers engaged in their arduous labors of bringing to the surface quantities of shell, sometimes repaid by one small pearl—a scene of night life in a dance hall along the water front where a string of crude pearls are bartered for a sly glance from a nautch girl she, later in the evening, being sent to Heaven or elsewhere with a knife thrust at the hands of a greedy admirer—that is the prologue of this picture which has to do with a necklace to which is attached a curse—and how Sufi, a Chinese parrot, proves the means of untangling a mystery.

The second episode of Earl Derr Biggers' Saturday Evening Post story shifts to San Francisco on a New Year's eve when the most recent owner of the jewels, after a series of misfortunes, has arranged their disposal. More deviltry afoot now—and then on to a lonely hacienda in the desert where a gang of thieves play a desperate game to their undoing . . . how Charlie Chan, a Chinese detective, played finely by K. Sojin, effects their capture, and how the curse is finally removed. Lots of spooky atmosphere arranged by Director Paul Leni—the master of the house and his valet lying trussed up a closet, both apparently done for—and then most all turning out to a satisfactory end.

This picture can hardly be compared to Leni's "Cat and the Canary" but it is a safe bet that it will be found entertaining. The cast is a good one, notably Marion Nixon, Florence Turner, Hobart Bosworth, Edmund Burns and K. Sojin. Too little is seen of Anna May Wong—that is, in footage.

Drawing Power: Good for all types of houses. Exploitation Angles: Saturday Evening Post circulation big asset. Play up mystery angle, also cast.

THEME: Misfortunes following owners of a string of pearls are finally ironed out through series of episodes. Romance has its part.

Produced and Distributed by Universal. Released, Oct. 23, 1927. Length, 7,304 feet. The Cast: Marian Nixon, Florence Turner, Hobart Bosworth, Edmund Burns, Albert Conti, K. Sojin, Fred Esmelton, Ed. Kennedy, George Kuwa, Slim Summerville, Dan Mason, Anna May Wong, Etta Lee and Jack Trent. Directed by Paul Leni.

By Whose Hand?

A Clever Piece of Suspense

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A NICE little program picture, one in which the suspense and plot unravelment are worked out with a finesse that the best of serial directors might envy. They keep you guessing here as to who are the good and who are the bad. You have these two elements in every picture, but here you are not told pronto just who is the man representing the law and who is the man from the underworld. As a matter of fact, one is liable to grow confused, for the director and his assistants have craftily shown, with an idea of leading you astray, the actions of other guests in the house of the wealthy lady on the night her jewels were robbed. They all act mysterious, even the comic butler, and the crystals of truth are sifted down only at the tail end when it is revealed that Cortez is the renowned Operative X-9—who always gets his man.

The knack of keeping a story suspenseful has been displayed time and time again by clever writers of detective tales, but it is not so often that you see it done as neatly as Walter Lang has done it here.

The production is an entertaining one and one that your patrons will enjoy if you can get them into the house. The entertainment value is there, so the only thing you'll have to worry about is the picture's draw.

Drawing Power: Between fair and good. Exploitation Angles: Tell 'em it's a good mystery yarn. Play up Cortez and the goings-on in the house on the night of the jewel theft.

THEME: Melodrama of detective pitted against master crook. The two of them are invited to wealthy lady's mansion and during the night her jewels are robbed. After a complicated series of events during which the jewels pass from one hand to another, the crook is caught by the detective. The love interest comes in between the detective and the wealthy lady's young girl friend.

Produced and Distributed by Columbia. Length, 5,432 feet. Released, September, 1927. The Cast: Ricardo Cortez, Eugenia Gilbert, J. Thornton Haston, Tom Dugan, Edgar Washington Blue, Lillianne Leighton, William Scott, John Steppling, De Sacia Mooers. Director, Walter Lang.

The Pinto Kid

Melodrama with Plenty of Action

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BUZZ BARTON is a clever youngster in these western roles and they certainly give him plenty to do. In fact they seem to impose almost superhuman tasks on the boy, but he gets away with them in great shape. If one can overlook the illogical story and become engrossed with the rapid action it is all very thrilling. There are certainly enough climaxes to keep the interest at fever heat.

Young Buzz, with the assistance of his pony, is first called upon to rescue both the girl and her horse from the quicksands. Then follow rescues of the girl in which he has to lower himself over a chasm, and the skillful capture of the villain, as well as other thrilling episodes.

It is the typical tale of the cow or the sheep country with the villain from the city in possession of facts by which he knows the real value of the ranch owned by the girl's father. He, of course, tries every known intrigue to gain possession, even to having the girl kidnapped and held for $10,000 ransom so that the father will have to sell to meet the ransom price. Every effort of the villain is thwarted by Buzz and his inseparable companion, Hank Robbins. It is just a succession of heroics.

Here and there are injected pathetic efforts at comedy relief with the two aged owners of adjoining ranches engaged in fist fights and eventually in a pistol duel, which are all too ridiculous to be funny. However, as all of the incidents of the story are exaggerated, the comedy may be appreciated as much as the dramatic action.

Drawing Power: This young star is bound to be popular where they like real melodrama. It should go very well in the neighborhood houses. Exploitation Angles: The youthful star and the many thrilling episodes.

THEME: Western melodrama in which the youth and his partner are successful in keeping the city slicker from gaining possession of a ranch of much potential value because of a proposed irrigation project. The ranch is owned by the father of the girl young Buzz saves from the quicksands.

Distributed by F B O. Released, April 29, 1928. Length, 4,884 feet. Cast: Buzz Barton, Frank Rice, James Walsh, Gloria Lee, Milburne Moranti, Hugh Trevor, William Patton, Walter Shumway. Director, Louis King. Story by Jean Dupont and John Twist.

The Dove

Enjoyable as Screen Play

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE Willard Mack stage play, which enjoyed a successful run in New York three years ago, has been accurately and successfully transferred to the screen. It follows closely the original play, with the exception that the locale is transferred from Mexico to Costa Roja, an island somewhere in the Caribbean Sea. This doubtless was considered necessary for diplomatic reasons.

Norma Talmadge as The Dove, and Noah Beery as Don Jose Maria y Sandoval, "the best damn caballero in all Mexico," have the roles enacted by Holbrook Blinn and Judith Anderson, and their work on the screen is just as artistic and effective as was that of the stage players.

It is a splendid picturization of a highly entertaining story, and it is one that should be exceptionally popular with audiences of all classes, as it has every element necessary for entertainment. Miss Talmadge's role is just a trifle overshadowed by that of Beery, who has never been seen to better advantage. He is the perfect egotistical, arrogant and powerful caballero, who would not stop at wanton slaying to have the lady of his desire. He is just as effective when he eventually yields to the cleverness of The Dove in her challenge to him as the best damn caballero in all Mexico.

Miss Talmadge seems to get everything possible out of the Dove role, which calls for much emotional work, as well as defiance. She is ably supported by Gilbert Roland, her leading man, as Johnny Powell, craps dealer of the gambling house, who acts the part nicely, and thus rather belies his looks. All in all, however, it is an exceptionally well-acted picture, with the cast capable from top to bottom, and all splendidly directed by Roland West.

THEME: Melodrama of dance hall girl in love with gambling house employee. She is desired by wealthy, powerful and swarthy gentleman, who connives to have her lover slain in a gambling house row. The ruse fails and the lover kills his framed assassin, for which he is ordered put to death. He is eventually saved by the cleverness of The Dove.

Distributed by United Artists. Released, December 30, 1927. Length, 8,400 feet. The Cast: Norma Talmadge, Noah Beery, Gilbert Roland, Eddie Borden, Harry Myers, Michael Vavitch, Brindsley Shaw, Kalla Pasha, Charles Darvas, Michael Dark, Walter Daniels. Directed by Roland West. Adapted from the Willard Mack stage play by Roland West and Wallace Smith.

Husbands for Rent

Dull and Slow Moving Comedy

THERE is little that can be recommended in this Warner Bros. feature which has Owen Moore and Helene Costello in the leading roles. Its alleged comedy is of the crudest, its plot is slim and moves along at a snail's pace and there is none of the necessary element of suspense. It has one daring touch that goes a little bit beyond the border of the risque, but otherwise it is without incident.

While there is little chance for any of the players to do any noteworthy work, they all seem poorly cast. Owen Moore is a somewhat slow moving and slow thinking lover and husband, whose sheer timidity makes him a married man in name only, despite instructions given him by the butler, a sequence that might well have been left out, and thus made of the picture an entire blank.

Helene Costello, it would seem, would fit better into the role of Moore's wife, instead of the flighty, indiscreet cigarette-smoking vamp type which she depicts. As a matter of fact both Kathryn Perry and John Miljan, the other married couple, give much more capable performances than Miss Costello and Moore.

The story is slim enough to be told in a single reel and seems interminable when stretched out to five or six. It involves a quartet, none of which seems to know with whom he or she is really in love. Their affections are switched before marriage and they apparently would all be better satisfied if they were switched again after marriage. It does develop, however, that Moore, as Herbert Willis, and Miss Perry as Doris Knight, really did love each other all the time and eventually were glad that Hugh Frazer eloped with Molly Devoe on the night set for the wedding of Molly and Herbert.

Drawing Power: Will draw only up to the strength of the players in the cast. There is nothing in the story that would appeal to an audience. Exploitation Angles: The players offer the only angle for exploitation.

THEME: Domestic comedy in which two couples appear to be unhappily married and would switch husbands and wives, but in the end one of the couples finds there is true happiness ahead.

Distributed by Warner Bros. Released, December 31, 1927. Length, 5,200 feet. The Cast: Owen Moore, Helene Costello, Kathryn Perry, John Miljan, Claude Gillingwater, Arthur Hoyt, Helen Lynch, Hugh Herbert. Story by Edwin Justin Mayer. Directed by Henry Lehrman. Scenario by C. Graham Baker.

Two Flaming Youths

A Gag Picture of Much Humor

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

W. C. FIELDS and Chester Conklin make a splendid comedy combination in this picture of gags and humorous situations. Made entirely for fun purposes it achieves its aim and will win laughs wherever it is shown. It is more or less slapstick comedy, but is so capably enacted that it is lifted from the realm of the idiotic comedy that characterizes most pictures of the type.

There is little in it that Fields has not injected into his past pictures, but his mannerisms will endure for a long time. His juggling art figures more prominently than usual. Conklin as the stupid sheriff figures in a secondary role to Fields, but in his own way he offers just as much comedy.

It is not the type of picture that will cause spontaneous outbursts of laughter, but the antics of the comedians will keep any house in almost a continuous state of giggles at least for the full length of the picture. It is just one gag after another, with the two comedians in love with Cissy Fitzgerald, as the hotel keeper who is in dire straits to meet a mortgage.

Fields is the proprietor of a defunct circus, whose freaks continuously and persistently demand their pay that they might eat. Conklin is the small town sheriff who would run the circus proprietor out of town and leave the road to the widow clear for himself. There is some splendid comedy when Conklin becomes engaged in fistic combat withe the boxing kangaroo as Fields capitalizes on his efforts at the box office, and as the two race back to the widow, each with a roll of $1,500 with which to lift her mortgage. A love theme threads through the comedy with Mary Brian and Jack Luden capably enacting the roles.

Drawing Power: Should be a sellout wherever shown. Exploitation Angles: The names of the stars and the circus atmosphere, as well as the freaks.

THEME: Comedy in which proprietor of defunct circus reaches small town and falls in love with hotel proprietress, who is also loved by town sheriff. The latter would run the circus owner out of town for failing to pay bills. Both are after $1,500 with which to lift widow's mortgage and wed her. Each succeeds in getting roll and on racing back to her find she has married the money lender.

Distributed by Paramount. Released, December 17, 1927; Length, 5,319 feet. The Cast: W. C. Fields, Chester Conklin, Mary Brian, Jack Luden, George Irving, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jimmy Quinn. Directed by John Waters. Screen play by Percy Heath and Donald Davis.

The Warning

A Fair-Enough Melodrama

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE opium loaded dives of Shanghai, a pretty girl in the clutches of rascally smugglers, an English captain of one of the smuggling ships who aids the girl when she needs help—stuff like this can be translated into terms of good melodrama. In this case a fair-enough job has been done by the Columbia people who have employed Jack Holt and Dorothy Revier to carry the brunt of the tale. That they have spent money (and lots of it, too) on the production is easily seen. Furthermore, you have exceptionally good photography to help the picture along. It seems to us that it sags only in the direction. But although the story is of an oft-seen pattern and the role of hero calls for the customary heroics there is plenty of action interwoven into it, atmosphere of the creepy, lurid Shanghai dens to lend it reality and, lastly but not least, Holt.

He is ideally suited for the type he portrays here. He hides his identity of chief of the British Intelligence Service underneath a doubtful exterior, playing the part of friend to the smugglers until in a scene in a Chinese temple he reveals himself as a hero of the first water. This scene, by the way, is the big "tremor" of the picture. The girl has been double-crossed by a member of the Service in league with the smugglers and turned over to them. Surrounded on all sides by a mass of hateful Orientals she has no one to render her assistance except Holt and his Chinese servant. With a machine gun they hold the seething crowd at bay and when the Englishman is wounded the girl bombs the temple, destroying her enemies underneath its crush of stones.

Drawing Power: About good. Holt is well known to the fans. Exploitation Angles: Playing up the hero wouldn't be a bad idea. Also give the leading lady some space, as she certainly deserves it. Create that Oriental atmosphere in the lobby to attract them.

THEME: Melodrama of Shanghai smugglers and their defeat at the hands of two members of the British Intelligence Service.

Produced and Distributed by Columbia. Length, 5,791 feet. Released, Nov, 1927. The Cast: Jack Holt, Dorothy Revier, Frank Lackteen, Pat Harmon, Eugene Strong, George Kuwa, Norman Trevor. Director, George B. Seitz.

West Point

Ought to Click—It's Typical Haines

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

YOU can't very well expect, it seems, something new in a Haines vehicle. This one of the military academy up the Hudson employs practically the same formula, the same type of characterization and the same sort of climax that "Brown of Harvard" had. Haines simply cannot live down that previous collegiate success; his latest bears witness to that fact, it being but a faithful imitation.

You can bet your boots there's humor to be found in the piece. They'll laugh out loud at the nervy guy's smart aleckisms up at the Point where discipline is the first thing they teach you. The hero is subjected to many close-ups of his wise cracking and swelled headed attitude. He's a naturally gifted fellow—a crackerjack at making love, playing football or anything else.

The cry of the wise guy was heralded in other Haines opi, forerunners to this, and the producers have not forgotten it. He reaches such a stage that his colossal conceit leads him to fight with the football coach, damn the corps and become a bench warmer on the eve of the big game with the Navy. His roommate back at the Academy, very ill (more evidence of "Brown's" influence), his conscience rankling him with the thought of unworthiness, he is ready to burst into flame from the sway of his feelings. Put in the game at the last quarter, he goes through the Navy line like a tornado, ultimately winning the game. Then, after the victory, comes a sense of true fellowship for his classmates and a true appreciation of the qualities of the girl he has been trying to win.

Haines, of course, takes his role of the fresh chap off very well, although the sequence when his pride gets the better of him is a long stretch of blueness in which he does not shine so brightly. Young William Bakewell as his weak classmate does the best work of his career to date. He acts with plenty of feeling and one could say many things about him of a commendatory nature.

Drawing Power: Good. Haines is a popular star and the picture boasts actual backgrounds of West Point with its wonderfully trained soldiers and memories of military men to create a patriotic tang. Exploitation Angles: Play up the title and its fame. Array your ushers and decorate your lobby with an eye for the military.

THEME: Drama of young West Pointer who goes through a spiritual struggle and emerges from it with the veneer of his conceit wiped away.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Length, 6 reels. Released, January. The Cast: William Haines, Joan Crawford, William Bakewell, Neil Neely, Ralph Emerson, Leon Kellar, Major R. G. Moses, U. S. A. Story by R. L. Schrock. Director, Edward Sedgwick.

"Should Tall Men Marry"

(Roach-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is much slapstick and knockout stuff in this Hal Roach comedy, which has in its leading roles Stan Laurel, Stuart Holmes, James Finlayson, Martha Sleeper, and Theodore Von Eltz. It is better than the usual run of this type comedy and should be good for many laughs. It is one of these pictures of continuous action with the girl in the hands of the desperadoes, while the hired hands use all sorts of contraptions in a huge barn to render them null and void and rescue the girl, which they eventually do. The proceedings are considerably enlivened by a mule.

Stan Laurel is the hired hand on the ranch and injects a lot of fun into the picture when, demonstrating on a goat, he tutors Teddy on how to make love to Martha. He is discovered in the act by the ranch head, who aptly inquires how long this has been going on? There is little in the way of a story, but a picture such as this needs none. It achieves its purpose with its numerous gags.

"Paris Fashions in Color"

(Educational—One Reel)

HERE'S another edition of the McCall Fashion News that will prove interesting to Milady. These shots, in Technicolor, of pretty Hope Hampton wearing charming gowns that fit her gracefully, are lovely, the appealing soft tones of the gowns contrasting pleasingly with the gleaming mass of golden hair that sets off Miss Hampton's features so becomingly.

You might call this subject one of paramount importance, from the point of view, of course, of the women folk, who regard clothes and fashion as perennial attractions, both for the purse and as a topic of conversation. We can well imagine the delight of a lady fan when viewing the exquisite and delicate creations from Paris, bearing the stamp of Jean Pateau, Paul Poiret and others. For the mere male they are pleasing things to behold. For the women folk they must be as least a hundred times more so.

Suffice it to say that this one reel of fashion news is a sumptuous production, pleasing to look at are its prettily colored creations and the figure of Miss Hampton herself in various poses. The interest of the ladies in things fashionable never does wane and, therefore the reel is an appropriate one for showings at most any time of the year.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Horns and Orange Blossoms"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

OCTAVUS ROY COHEN is responsible for this story in which the rotund comedian, Charles Puffy, is starred. It is not unlikely that the original story was a good one, but doubtless it was given considerable battering during its transposition to the screen.

Puffy works hard enough to wring some laughs out of it and probably will succeed in doing so from neighborhood audiences, but it is all of the rougher type of rough and tumble comedy. He engages a French chef to prepare a dinner in honor of his girl, but his meddling aunt interferes, and the chef quits, leaving Puffy to prepare the dinner himself.

The comedy is much exaggerated in the preparation of the food, as might be imagined, and the kitchen is just a mess of ruined material, out of which Puffy realizes enough net to finally place upon the table. Just as this is accomplished the aunt informs him the guests telephoned they could not come, whereupon he destroys what he has prepared. At that moment the guests arrive and the aunt informs him she was April fooling him. He instructs her to tell the guests he has departed ill. She does so, but the girl walks in on him through a rear door, and promptly puts an end to their affair. The aunt foreseeing what is in store for her makes a hurried getaway.

"Mr. Pooh"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THE McDougall Alley Kids have a fairly laughable comedy in a two-reeler, the title of which does not seem to bear any connection with any of the events in the story. It is probably a variation on the title of a recent Lon Chaney vehicle—a legitimate idea, of course.

They hop a freight to Chicago (which comes in for a knock in a title), and are chased by trainmen into the tenement section, where they find refuge in a Chinese laundry. The original proprietor, returning to his shop, is scandalized to see them there, so he chases them also. A "Boy Wanted" sign in a delicatessen shop attracts the attention of the kids, and Fatty goes in to apply for the job, but spends so much wind shouting into the ear trumpet of the deaf proprietress that he falls into a faint.

In the short space of time that Fatty is on the floor, he dreams of the gang coming into the store during the absence of the deaf woman. He dreams that they have some fun with a monkey and that they are throwing canned goods all around the place.

The rough house antics of the kids can probably be counted on for a fair number of laughs. George E. Walcott directs them.

"There It Is"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

CHARLEY BOWERS' first comedy for Educational is a corker for ingenuity and unexpected surprises. Charley's active brain must worked overtime thinking up all the many little things that relate to the "It" which plays so important a part in the comedy. It clicks along nicely, holding up consistently to the last few moments when the mysterious "It" is revealed. This Bowers comedy is as different from the average slapstick affair as an apple is from a pineapple. It is a different sort of comedy and one which is enhanced in effectiveness by means of Bowers' process of fooling you with camera tricks.

A mysterious figure flits in and out of the rooms of a mansion in America, causing so much terror to be broadcasted that a call is sent in to Scotland for held. Charley, dolled up in kilts and other things Scottish, and accompanied by a sort of doodle-bug whom he calls Mac, arrived at the mansion to solve the mystery. All sorts of inexplicable things occur and Charley is stumped when it comes to capturing the mysterious creature or even identifying him. The thing is here, there and everywhere, appearing at the most unexpected times and in the most unsought-for manner. Finally, the mysterious one is discovered to be grandpa, who had been wandering around the house ever since the family moved away and forgot to take him with them.

H. L. Muller directed and photographed this Bowers comedy and Kathryn McGuire, Melbourne McDowell, Buster Brodis and Edgar Blue have roles in the support. It's a good number, one that your patrons ought to enjoy.

"The Bare Co-Ed"

(Bray—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AN entertaining comedy is this two-reeler from the Bray studios, featuring Perry Murdock and Cliff Lancaster as two college dolts love-stricken by Nita Cavalier, their landlady's daughter. A supply of fun is had in the capers of the oafish Perry in his little hall room, in his tiff with his rival, Cliff, and in that incident where he is thrown, body and baggage, out of the landlady's house after he had inflamed her wrath by ehrowing mud in her face.

On the condition that Perry win the forthcoming hurdle race, and thus honor his and her daughter's alma mater, the irate landlady softens under the entreaties of the girl to let the student resume his place as one of her roomers.

The hurdle race is almost a fiasco for the love-smitten Perry. He is being left far behind by the other athletes until a wasp stings him, putting him so much on the jump that he wins the hurdle race with plenty of room to spare.

There are a good number of laughs in the comedy, although all of the gags are not new by any means. But it goes along smoothly, betokening good direction by Craig Hutchinson, and there is one gag with a camera which will be sure to cause a hearty spasm of laughter.

"Brand of Courage"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BOB CURWOOD is featured with Peggy Montgomery in this Western featurette, whose story, as usual, is of the rustlers and the dashing young special investigator who runs them down against the greatest odds. There is some good riding in the picture, with a fist fight here and there that helps liven it up a bit.

Curwood would be a much more convincing figure in these Westerns if he did not affect the same winning smile for all occasions. It is the same when he is making love to the girl as it is when he is engaged in the most desperate efforts to rescue her from the somewhat perilous position she finds herself in at the hands of the rustlers.

Curwood, as Jack Rhoads, is the special investigator of the Cattlemen's Association, engaged to run down the rustlers. He is hurled into their midst over a cliff when his horse stumbles. They are under the impression that he is badly hurt and leave him. He proceeds to the nearest ranch house, in which he convinces the girl of his identity. The rustlers come and best him and carry the girl away. He again gives chase, overtakes them and this time gains the upper hand. They will probably like it where they are partial to these short Westerns.

"Reeling Down the Rhine With Will Rogers"

(Pathe- One Reel)

WILL ROGERS takes his audience for a trip down the Rhine in this travelogue, which is not so humorous in its titles as most of the series. Some beautiful scenery is the main attraction of the picture, which depicts the numerous castles overhanging the Rhine. The large and well-kept vineyards are also a feature. Young Miss Rogers and the Rogers boy lend a novel note when they relieve their famous father in announcing some of the attractions along the scenic route.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Central Penn

WITH New Year's Day falling on Sunday this time theatre managers of Central Pennsylvania racked their brains for solutions of the problem of how to arrange shows to welcome 1928 without running afoul of the State blue laws, which prohibit Sunday amusements. New Year's Eve shows, lasting after midnight, always have been profitable in the theatres, and the difficulty was to determine how to preserve this source of extra revenue without conflicting with the law, and some clever plans were evolved.

In at least three cities—Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and Altoona—the police authorities issued specific edicts warning against any places of amusement, including theatres, dance halls and midnight clubs holding celebrations later than midnight Saturday. Some theatres held performances up to the very last minute, but dismissed their audiences promptly at the stroke of 12. Many of the leading theatres, however, arranged what they called "Sunday midnight shows, which actually started at 12 01 A. M. on Monday.

In the State, Altoona, there was one of the "Sunday midnight" shows, the theatre opening at 11:30 P. M., Sunday, and the performance beginning at 12:01 Monday. "Ben Hur" was the feature film. At the same time shows were held in the Capitol, the Strand and the Olympic, in the same city. Noise-making novelties were distributed as souvenirs to the audiences.

The Strand, Embassy and State in Easton held New Year's Eve shows ending at midnight, Saturday, and a similar plan was followed at the Strand, Scranton. The Wilmer & Vincent Company theatres in Harrisburg combined in celebrating the arrival of 1928 by holding a joint midnight show at 12:01 A. M., Monday, in the Victoria. Noise-making devices were provided to the patrons by Manager Lee Levy, and the film feature was the Adolphe Menjou picture "Serenade." The doors were opened late Sunday night.

The feature of the Sunday midnight show at the Fulton, Lancaster, was "Alias the Deacon," with extra features added for the New Year's revel. At the same time the Capitol, Lancaster, held a show featured by Leatrice Joy and Charlie Ray in "Vanity."

The Comerford management of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, arranged what is described as "the first annual midnight show," the doors opening at 11 o'clock Sunday night and the show starting with the arrival of Monday. Among numerous other Central Pennsylvania theatres holding Sunday midnight revels were the Strand, Mahanoy City; Capitol, Pottsville; Strand, Shenandoah, and Orpheum, Franklin.

The Capitol, at York, advertised a special performance to welcome the New Year, starting on Saturday night at 11 o'clock.

Fifteen hundred toys for the poor children of Altoona were collected on December 23 at special matinees held at the State and Embassy theatres, and at which one toy was the price of admittance. All the children were the guests of Jack Maloy, manager of the Wilmer & Vincent theatre enterprises in Altoona. The toys were distributed among the poor on Christmas Eve by Commander Bell of the Salvation Army.

The Rialto and National Theatres, Harrisburg, went under the actual management of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Krupa, formerly of Lancaster, on Monday, January 2. The Krupas leased the theatres from Isaac Marcus, of Harrisburg, the owner, who heretofore had operated them.

These are neighborhood theatres, and the new management advertised it will offer "Downtown" features at "Uptown prices." The scale of prices for the Rialto is: "Weekly, evening, adults, 15 cents, children, 10; Saturdays and holidays, adults, 25, children, 10." The Rialto had been closed for three weeks to undergo extensive improvements.

Harry J. Troxell, owner and manager of one of the leading picture theaters in Gettysburg, retired on December 31 from the office of treasurer of Adams County. He was elected to the office four years ago, and his term has now expired.

Plans have been prepared for the enlargement of the Orpheum Theatre, Carlisle, in behalf of the owner, Mr. Bolen. The present theatre, in the Bolen Building, W. High Street, has a seating capacity of 350, which will be increased to 700 by utilizing the space now occupied by a store and a restaurant. The lobby will be enlarged and an extra exit added. The leases on the store and restaurant will expire July 1 next, and meantime Mr. Bolen will erect new partition walls.

Oscar W. Althoff, of the Strand motion picture theatre, in Berwick, Pa., and one of the pioneers in the movie field in the hard coal mining regions of Pennsylvania, was selected on December 22 as the subject for the "Velvet Hammer" column, in which the Harrisburg Evening News, in humorous fashion daily, pays tribute to some distinguished Pennsylvanian.

New York & New Jersey

WHAT was generally conceded to be one of the pleasantest social functions held under film auspices in this territory for a long time was the Annual Installation Beefsteak Dinner of the New York Board of Trade and Testimonial to Mr. Louis Phillips, attorney and executive secretary, who severs his connection with the organization on January 1st. The dinner was recently held at Janssen's Hofbrau, Broadway and 50th Street. Mr. Phillips will become a member of the legal staff of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under Mr. E. L. Ludvig, chief counsel.

The entire membership of the Film Board of Trade, including a long list of honorary members and a few specially invited guests, were present.

A number of professional entertainers, many of whom are appearing at local vaudeville houses, entertained the members and guests under the direction of Mr. Joe Lee, New Jersey excshange manager of Fox Film Corporation, and master of ceremonies of the New York Film Board of Trade.

Harry H. Buxbaum, general manager of the New York Fox Film Corporation, acted as toastmaster, and introduced the following speakers: Mr. David Rosengarten, resident manager of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Dist. Corp., and president-elect of the Film Board of Trade; Louis Rosenbluh, of the Fox Film Corporation; Louis Nizer, who succeeds Mr. Phillips as attorney and executive secretary of the New York Film Board of Trade, and John T. Cronin, office manager of the latter organization.

The whole affair resolved itself into a farewell testimonial to Mr. Phillips and a welcoming party for his successor, Mr. Nizer.

All the speakers extolled the accomplishments of the departing secretary, and predicted a future of great promise for Mr. Nizer.

During the evening Mr. Rosenbluh, who is a very close friend of Mr. Phillips, the guest of honor, presented to him a very handsome traveling bag fitted with a complete outfit of toilet articles. Mr. Phillips was greatly affected by this exhibition of affection and esteem on the part of his former associates, and feelingly referred to the four pleasantest years of his life spent with the Film Board of Trade.

Mr. Nizer, who is a member of the law firm of Phillips & Nizer, located at 1560 Broadway, New York City, paid a glowing tribute to his departing friend and associate, and pledged the best that is in him to the service of the twenty-five film companies affiliated with the Film Board of Trade.

The committee which arranged the dinner was composed of Joseph Lee, of Fox Film Corp., chairman; Joseph Vergesslich, of First National; Jack Bellman, of Hollywood; Morton Van Prang, of Universal; Earl Sweigert, of Famous Players-Lasky Corp,. and David Rosengarten, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Dist. Corp.

Santa Claus was unusually kind to Jack Ricker, of 232 West 52d Street, whose heroism recently saved the lives of his wife, baby daughter, and the tenants of the apartment house in which he lives. In addition, his cool-headedness enabled rehearsals of the show for the Capitol Theatre to go on without interruption.

Jack is assistant to Major Bowes at the aforementioned theatre. Recently he returned home at 11:30 P. M., carrying manuscripts of the music and the revue to be rehearsed early this morning for next week's show.

Walking up the stairs to his apartment, where his wife and child were sleeping, he smelled smoke. First awakening his wife and ordering her to dress hurriedly, he then traced the smoke to the apartment below. Receiving no response to his knocks he broke in the door, and was nearly enveloped by the burst of flames that shot out at him. Ricker dashed down-stairs, put in an alarm call, and returned to the apartment house, banging on all doors on his way up.

When he reached his own apartment he found his wife clinging desperately to their baby, too terrified by the flames below to move. Bundling up the infant in his wife's fur coat he succeeded in fighting his way through the increasing barrage of fire, his wife following behind. By this time the fire engines had arrived.

Depositing his wife and child at a nearby delicatessen shop, Ricker discovered that he had left behind his music and manuscripts. He rushed back instantly, only to be refused admittance to the premises by two burly firemen. After much talking he convinced them of the importance of his bundle, and they accompanied him up through the conflagration while he recovered it.

Xmas morning Jack received additional gifts from Major Bowes, his wife, his landlord and the tenants of his apartment house, not to mention a vote of thanks from the Fire Department.

Dave Brill, manager of the Tiffany-Stahl Exchange in New York, was the recipient of a silver loving cup presented by General Sales Manager Ed. J. Smith for securing the greatest amount of 100 per cent contracts during the recent Tiffany-Stahl Christmas Sales Drive.

In complimenting Mr. Brill, Mr. Smith said: "I was not surprised at the showing the New York crew made, and was thoroughly satisfied with the generous amount of first-run bookings they turned in."

During the twelve weeks of the drive, which ended December 17th, it was surprising to see a new exchange at the head of the list each week, but in the final few weeks the New York Exchange scored heavily by securing volume sales.

The sales staff of the New York office consists of Dave Brill, manager; Jack Meyers, Charles Gould, Bert Frese, Ben Rappaport and Sol Edwards, salesmen.

E. W. Gould, manager of the Morningside Theatre, 88th avenue and 116th Street, New York City, announces the appointment of Maestro Voncent Fontanello as leader of their Concert Orchestra, effective December 25th.

San Francisco

M. E. CORY has been appointed local branch manager of Pathe, Inc., thus discontinuing the separate heads of features and short subjects as was instituted immediately following the merger with De Mille. Cory served as branch manager of P. D. C. since the reorganization of the old Hodkinson Distributing Corp., absorbed by the P. D. C. people. He made an envious sales record of P. D. C. product. "Mark" enjoys an extensive acquaintance in the northern California zone of theatre owners. W. G. Seib, who has been manager of the short subject department, will continue in the general sales department as an assistant to Cory.

J. L. Seiter, formerly operating the Lyric theatre at Manteca, is reported to have obtained the Garden theatre at Kinsburg, which he will at once renovate and open as a motion picture theatre.

Walter W., Kofeldt, now associated with the George Mann theatres with headquarters at Eureka, where he has charge of the Humboldt county enterprises of the Mann holdings, was a San Francisco visitor recently.

Friends of Mike Zar, well known among the film salesmen, are extending him their sympathy in the loss of his devoted mother, who passed away at her home in Watsonville.

The staff of the local Embassy Vitaphone theatre is: William B. Wagnon, proprietor and managing director; J. M. Boyd, house manaager; E. L. Jones, Exploitation; Harold Wilson, advertising manager; John Robinson, treasurer; Major Livingston and E. Casper, Vitaphone engineers.

Harry Seipel, with whom A. C. H. Chamberlain was formerly identified in his Oroville theatres, has bought out Chamberlain's interests. Now Chamberlain is representing the Harry Seipel interests in San Francisco.

The new officers elected for the ensuing year for the San Francisco Film Exchange Board of Trade are as follows: Grover C. Parsons was unanimously elected president of the board. Similarly M. E. Cory was unanimously elected president of the board, and J. J. Partridge honorary secretary and treasurer, and Messrs. George C. Blumenthal and William J. Heinemann as governors. The last two named with the three officers first named constitute the Board of Governors or Trustees. Milton A. Nathan was unanimously elected attorney and executive secretary for the tenth consecutive year. Nathan, on behalf of the individual members, presented to Charles H. Muehlman, the retiring president, a beautiful traveling case for his own use and a betautiful fitted case for the use of his wife, in appreciation of their friendship for him and and of his splendid services just ended.

L. C. Cory, who has about finished his new theatre at Fresno, states that the theatre has been leased but will not say to whom. Pantages' new theatre in Fresno is also well under way and most of the steel has been erected.

Miss Claudine Hartman, 22, a well known member of Fanchon and Marco's beauty chorus, died Dec. 17th at her home in Oakland, after a brief illness. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Hartman. The funeral was held at 2 o'clock December 19th.

H. A. Stone of the McGill theatres, McGill, Nev., was a visitor on the row a short time ago.

Charles Koener of the George Mann Theatre Circuit left on Dec. 15th for New York and many eastern points. He will be away weeks and while on the trip will inspect a number of the latest theatres built in New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago.

H. A. R. Dutton, president of the National Theatre Supply Co., was a visitor of the San Francisco branch for several days.

The San Francisco Orpheum has completely remodeled and equipped its Kinebooth in the latest, up-to-date equipment. This includes: Motiograph De Luxe Projectors, complete with the latest type speed titling device, on account of using two screens on the stage; Chicago Cinema De Luxe Improved Spotlight; Chicago De Luxe Film cabinet and rewind table, Blanchard speed indicators, Brenkert floods and spots.

B. F. Bowden has purchased the Arvada theatre of Arvada, Colo., from R. A. Pruess, owner and manager of the theatre since its erection.

Des Moines

WEDDING bells in Movie Row chimed during the pre-holiday season, when the office of Paramount contributed a beautiful bride, Miss Marjorie Reed, who is stenographer for the booking department, was wed on December 14 to Angus Campbell, who is not connected with the film business. The wedding was a secret until last week, when Mrs. Campbell sent out her announcements. She will continue her work at the film exchange. She has been receiving the congratulations of the trade.

And on Christmas eve there was another wedding. Ted Yarowsky, who is manager of the Des Moines Poster Exchange in the block adjoining the Film Exchange building, became a benedict on that date. He was married to Miss Bertha Rosenbaum, who is from Cedar Rapids, Iowa. Miss Rosenbaum is a former Des Moines girl and of a family well known here. Mr. and Mrs. Yarowsky are making their home at the Brown Hotel.

Joe Keefe, of Dumont, Iowa, has sold his theatre. The new owners are Wilson and Clemmons, bankers at Dumont. They will have charge of the theatre which is in the I. O. O. F. building, and the theatre will be operated as a community enterprise.

Among those who went to Waterloo for the opening of the new Riviera there, which is to be one of the A. H. Blank-Publix houses, were E. J. Tilton, manager of the office of the First National; Bill Copeland, manager for Paramount, and A. W. Nichols, who is their district manager, and Dorothy Day, who does the publicity for the houses of the A. H. Blank chain. The Riviera had its opening on December 29. A notable list of guests were present from over the state, from Omaha and from the theatre men in adjoining territory. Herb Grove, formerly manager of the Des Moines in Des Moines, will have the management of the Riviera.

Roy O'Brien, assistant manager of the office of Fox films, was ill for a few days. He is now recovered and back at work again but not quite his old self.

The managers and salesmen from the offices of the National Theatre Supply Company will hold a convention in Chicago, which starts January 11 and lasts for a week. The Des Moines office will be represented by Arthur E. Thiele, while the salesmen for this office will come from the Omaha office. Exhibitions will be held at one of the theatres in Chicago of the newest in theatre supplies and equipment, while the headquarters in general will be at one of the hotels.

Mrs. Paul Grove, contract clerk for First National, spent the Christmas holidays with her parents at Vinton, Iowa.

Grantham and Peters are buying up a number of Iowa theatres and last week added two new theatres to their interests. The Grand theatre at Jessup, Iowa, was sold by F. Mertz to Grantham and Peters. Another theatre owned by Mr. Mertz, the Opera House at Goggen, Iowa, was also transferred to Grantham and Peters.

At Clairmont, Iowa, there was a change of ownership last week when the Opera House there was sold by C. O. Christ to E. M. Hogg.

J. E. Trovas, who has had the Plaza theatre at Ackley, Iowa, for some time, last week disposed of his theatre interests to M. A. Brown. Mr. Brown now has three theatres and may add others to his interests. Mr. Brown has the Opera House at Riceville and the Forest theatre at Forest City.

E. M. Rulan is the new owner of the theatre at Mechanicsville, Iowa. The Scolora Amusement Company had the Rialto theatre at Mechanicsville and last week sold the house to E. M. Rulan, who is a new man in this territory.

Youngclass and Latta of Perry, Iowa, who have the Foxy theatre there, recently rechristened after it was named Roxy, have opened up the Grand theatre there. The partner bought the Grand theatre about a year ago and announced at that time that the theatre would not be operated immediately. Extensive repairs were made to the Grand and also the theatre men won out in the Sunday closing fight in Perry. So now the partners are planning big interests for their theatres at Perry.

The offices of the Iowa Theatre Owners Association, which have not been active in Des Moines for some months, are about to be opened up again. E. P. Smith, who is executive secretary of the association and who has been buying a string of theatres which are known as the Polka Dot houses, is about to make some new announcements both as to his own activities and those of the association of theatre men.

A. H. Blank has taken the lease of the new theatre building under construction at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. This theatre, which is part of a big office building now under way is to be a $1,000,000 construction and the annual rental secured by Mr. Blank will average $40,000. Mr. Blank was given a 25 year lease on the theatre.

C. R. Grims, of Woodbine, Iowa, has purchased the Electric theatre at Manilla, Iowa. The former owner was James Jordan,

Kansas City

WARRENSBURG, MO., has fallen a victim of the blue law supporters and that town of 8,000 population will have no Sunday motion pictures in the future. About one month ago Mrs. Chas. Goodnight obtained permission from the city council to operate her theatre on Sunday. Then along come the blue noses in a parade of protest. The prosecuting attorney announced that he would close all shows on Sunday. It at first was announced that exhibitors would retaliate by filing complaints against other business houses which remained open on Sunday, but this week Mrs. Goodnight, around which the exhibition phase of the fight hinges, announced that she would close her theatre, the Star, on Sundays.

At Pittsburg, Kan., however, exhibitors are continuing to obtain warrants for all persons who operate their business on Sundays and a special election, with Sunday closing as the issue, seems inevitable.

The Movietone news reel of Fox made its debut at the Globe theatre, Kansas City, last week amid much advance publicity exploitation. Attendance throughout the week showed a marked stimulation.

Members of the casts in stage productions at the Orpheum and Main street theatres, first run motion picture and vaudeville theatres of Kansas City, were guests of the Orpheum Circuit Saturday night in the annual Christmas party of that circuit to its actresses and actors. The party was at the Hotel President.

The Marquis de la Falaise, husband of Gloria Swanson, arrived in Kansas City the other night with unusual enthusiasm.

"Just came here to meet Gloria and go to Beverly Hills with her," said the marquis. "She'll be here in the morning and I'll meet her at the union station. We want to spend Christmas quietly at home."

Miss Swanson had been in New York.

Joe La Rose, who came from the Fox theatre, Philadelphia, to assume charge of the stage productions at Loew's Midland theatre, Kansas City, also will have charge of stage productions at Loew's State, St. Louis.

The three theatres in Kansas City of K. S. Duncan have been closed for repairing and cleaning. The theatres were closed at this time in order that the loss would be at a minimum, Mr. Duncan said.

The personnel of the First National branch had a Christmas party all its own. Tom Byerle, assistant manager of the exchange, donned the whiskers and played the role of Santa Claus, distributing the presents.

Lew Nathanson, formerly with the Warner Bros. and Universal exchanges, who has been with Warner Bros. as a sales representative in Minneapolis, has returned to Kansas City.

C. A. Schultz, manager of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., spent Christmas with his parents in Minneapolis.

Movie row was a lively place for more reasons than one on Christmas. Virtually all exchanges "called in" their salesmen as it was deemed useless to have them in the territory during the holidays. All of which, of course, helped make up more "cheer" for Christmas. There may have been some lacking, but the "cheer" was plentiful.

Many exchange men sent congratulations to Bob Gray, former exploiteer for Universal at Kansas City, last week, following the announcement that Bob had been made director of all Schine theatres in Ohio.

W. E. Bishop, former M-G-M exploiteer, who was succeeded as publicity manager of Loew's Midland by Charles Winston, has gone to Detroit to act in a similar capacity for Loew interests.

M. C. Sinift, Warner Bros.' branch manager, made a trip into the Kansas territory last week in search of more business, which he found.

Tom Baldwin, former Educational branch cashier, has succeeded John Graham as booker for the Tiffany exchange.

Bill Warner, First National branch manager, also was a territory visitor last week.

New England

MANY of the Boston exchanges have been holding observances in keeping with the holiday season. These affairs have been fully as elaborate as any in former years.

At the Fox exchange a decorated tree was the center of attraction. There were gifts for everybody, a catered luncheon and dancing. The staff presented District Manager H. F. Campbell with a beautiful gold wrist watch.

Independent Films, Inc., held their annual party, work ceasing at 11 o'clock and the party continuing until three. Joseph Roth took the part of Santa Claus and President J. J. McConville and Treasurer Abe Montague with a beautiful mahogany cabinet for their offices. President McConville responded and in turn presented to each one gifts of gold from the firm. Charles Whitely and Booker Phil Fox of the exchange entertained with skits while Timothy O'Toole and Phil LaMonica gave instrumental numbers. Dancing was enjoyed and a catered luncheon was served.

Metro held its annual party in the evening with a catered banquet and District Manager M. N. Wolf took the part of Santa and gifts were exchanged. To Mr. Wolf the staff presented a combination brief and overnight case and to Office Manager Henry Wolper they gave a traveling bag. Music and dancing followed.

There were festivities at the American Feature Film exchange with exchange of gifts. The prize waltz was won by B. Portella and "Steve" Brody, who each received fountain pens as prizes. William Kelly played the role of Santa. Harry F. Asher, district manager, was presented a week-end bag and Branch Manager M. E. Morey was the recipient of a lounging robe.

First National had a decorated tree and grab bag with an exchange of gifts, mostly humorous in nature. Expressions of sympathy were sent to Del Bibber, sales manager, who was ill at the Faulkner hospital in Boston and was unable to attend.

Pathe held its customary party with a decorated tree and exchange of gifts, a catered supper and dancing. A special entertainment was also provided.

The several committees for the New England Film Board of Trade have been appointed for 1928, as follows:

Safety committee—C. McGerigle of F. B. O.; W. H. Bradley of Pictures In Motion, and Moe Grassgreen of Fox Films.

Arbitration—W. H. Erbb of Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corp., Carl Crawford of Royal-Red Seal, R. C. Cropper of Pathe, M. N. Wolf of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who is permanent chairman, and H. E. Elder of Warner Brothers, permanent vice chairman.

The wedding will be held at the home of the bride's Uncle, Jacob Lourie, president of New England Theatres Operating Co. The residence is at 164 Ruthven street, Roxbury, Mass. The couple will spend their honeymoon in New York and Atlantic City.

Cincinnati

AN AMBITIOUS thief, who was poorly rewarded for the chances he took, entered the box office of the Hippodrome theatre, Baymiller and Ninth streets, Cincinnati, and after hitting the cashier, Miss Pauline Morand, over the head with the butt end of a revolver, escaped with $53.50. Miss Morand was badly frightened, but not seriously injured.

Fire of undetermined origin swept the Pastime theatre, Martins Ferry, Ohio, recently, entailing a loss of $50,000. Firemen from Wheeling, W. Va., Bridgeport, Ohio, and other nearby towns were called upon to help fight the blaze. The house was rebuilt in 1925 following a disastrous fire.

Miss Dora Stecker, manager of the Forest theatre, a neighborhood house, in connection with the Women's City Club, of Cincinnati, gave a special matinee for the benefit of a local junior organization.

Trade and private circles were shocked at the recent passing of John W. Weining, head of the Western Hills Amusement Co. and Pelee Theatre Co., Cincinnati, who died following operation at a local hospital. In addition to owning the Western Hills theatre, Cincinnati, Weining also owned the Pendrola theatre, Lockland, Ohio, and the Emery and Lyric, at Reading, Ohio, both of which cities are adjacent to Cincinnati.

Manager Harry Brown, Jr., of the Majestic theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, in cooperation with the Lions club of that city, arranged a special morning matinee to which all unfortunate children of the city were invited.

When one of Hamilton's daily papers listed the predictions for general business conditions for 1928, an interesting prediction was given by Manager John A. Schwalm, of the Rialto theatre, which story was accompanied by a good size cut of Schwalm. In addition to guiding the destiny of the Rialto, Schwalm is president of the Jewel Photoplay, Hamilton, and a member of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O., Ohio.

A new screen has been installed in the Lyric theatre, Hamilton, O., by the Garland Screen Co., of Columbus, O. Since the house was taken over by Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Zost four years ago, extensive improvements have been made, including recent installation of a new Wurlitzer unit organ, and an improved ventilating system.

The Cheviot theatre, Cheviot, O., suburban to Cincinnati, was opened recently and will play a straight picture policy. Charles Weigle is manager.

Among the recent openings is the Mayflower theatre, Troy, O., operated by the Troy Amusement Co., of which C. P. Pfister is the executive head.

In addition to a "Midnight Frolic," Griff. Granger, manager of the Kaypee theatre, Mt. Gilead, O., the smallest first-run house in the state, served his patrons with refreshments on the stroke of 12. Several acts of vaudeville were presented in connection with the regular picture program.

Employees of the Majestic theatre, Mansfield, O., were lavishly entertained by the Variety Amusement Co., and Harry Brown, Jr., at a Christmas party, immediately after the last performance on Christmas night. Subsequent to the showing, favors were distributed, a buffet lunch was served and dancing was enjoyed on the stage.

Extensive alterations, which will include an addition to the house, will be made by the Washington C. H., Ohio, theatre, operated by Public Amusement Co., Springfield, Ohio, of which John C. Gregory is president and general manager.

Pittsburgh

THE Harris Amusement Company has made arrangements to celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the firm by the late Senator John P. Harris, throughout the entire month of January, and each week will introduce de luxe programs of Keith-Albee vaudeville and feature photoplays.

Every theatre in the circuit is to be ornately decorated in appropriate schemes. The inevitable birthday cake, with its thirty lighted candles, will be in evidence, and the whole character of the theatre and its performances will bespeak the spirit of the natal anniversary.

Senator Harris began his career as an owner of theatres in co-partnership with his father, the late John Harris, Sr., at the old World's Museum on the North Side. That was in January, 1898, and, hence, the anniversary marks the completion of the third decade of these purveyors of amusements.

The personally owned theatres of the circuit are all now under the direction of Senator Harris' brothers, Dennis A. and Senator Frank J. Harris; his sons, John H. and Harry D., and his long time business associate, Eugene L. Connelly.

Joseph De Listi, owner of the Liberty theatre in Saltsburg, opened his beautiful new Delmore theatre at Avenmore on Monday evening, Dec. 19th. The new house seats 400 people, and is a two-story structure, with apartments overhead, and two storerooms on the ground floor in addition to theatre lobby. The investment is approximately $50,000.

The new Roxy theatre, Follansbee, beautiful 500 seat theatre, opened Monday, Dec. 26th. The new Roxy has been built by the Floyd brothers, who have operated the Family theatre in the same town for some years. This house will continue to operate as usual. The Bulletin joins the industry in wishing the Floyds the best of success with their newest venture..

Johnny Baker, supervisor of service, who was at the Penn when it opened and later went to Kansas City and Houston for Loew when those new houses opened, is back again at the Penn. Later he will go to Indianapolis for the opening of the new Loew house there. Johnny's specialty is installing and training usher staffs in courtesy, seating, etc.

W. Byron McGill visited his folks in Masontown, Pa., over Christmas.

Al Hilger, of the Penn artists staff, visited his folks in Sheffield, Pa., the past week.

The rumor in town has it that John Klappas, assistant to W. R. Allen, publicity director at the Penn, is going to study to play a cornet and if so we pity the advertising staff during these days.

Herman Katz, operator at the Aldine, celebrated a birthday Xmas at which a large party was held at his home Christmas night.

Gerald S. Murphy, assistant manager at the Aldine, went to Youngstown to identify the two men who held up the theatre recently and recognized one of them, with the two now in jail here.

James Balmer is ill at his home with a bad cold. Jimmy is manager of the Grand.

Fred Barton is in town ahead of "Sorrell and Son," which will play the Penn theatre January 2nd.

Among the visitors along film row early in the week were: Louis Stein, Natrona; William Gray, Monongahela; Louis Capruggi, Export; B. E. Cupler, Washington; John Newman, New Castle; Tom Rankin, Bridgeville; John Schultz, Wilson; Nick Anas, Wellsburg.

Everybody at the Pathe Film Exchange has had a hand in trimming the giant Christmas tree placed in the center of the office. It is the largest tree ever trimmed by a local exchange, and presents a beautiful sight. The Pathe made merry at a party held in the office late Friday afternoon, with much exchanging of gifts and partaking of refreshments. Frank Ray saw to it that the crowd was amused by a number of entertainers he brought down from the Elmore theatre, where he is manager.

The United Artists exchange also boasts a tree. Though this one is smaller than that of the Pathe exchange, it is entirely white and is a beautiful symbol of the holiday season.

William G. Smith, manager of the Columbus Picture Corporation's local branch, is recovering slowly from a severe attack of the grip. "Bill" spends several hours at the office a day, but he is far from being in the best of health. His many friends wish that some time in the near future he may again be enjoying his usual vim and vigor.

Howard Dendison, accessory salesman at the Pathe exchange, spent the Christmas holiday at home in Cleveland.

Sales Manager W. W. Black, of Pathe's non-theatrical film department, was a Pittsburgh visitor last Sunday.

Selden Kiralfy, shipper for Columbia Pictures, is a clever buck-and-wing dancer, and billed as Jack Clifford, he appeared on the stage of the Harris theatre one evening last week, taking part in a contest. Selden got a big hand from the crowd and his amibitions to become a professional are stronger than ever before.

Herbert Greenblatt, former local Universal salesman and more recently with the Theatre Ad Mat service of Uniontown, has resigned the latter position, and is visiting Pittsburgh. "Herb" expects to connect with a local film exchange in the near future.

Practically all of the film salesmen are staying in town this week, preparatory to the holidays. As Meyer Goldstein puts it, the boys are all stationed at their offices, waiting for the exhibitors to bring in their Christmas gifts personally.

Miss Zelda Nathonson, formerly employed in the accounting department of the local Pathe branch, has gone to New York, where she has accepted a position in the auditing department of Pathe's home office.

David Victor, manager of the Victor theatre, McKeesport, has returned from a three months' vacation trip to California. Dave was accompanied by his wife, who will be remembered as Miss Sarah Broder.

Canada

THE police authorities at Toronto were rather severe in their attitude toward theatre managers in the holding of New Year's Eve celebrations. The order was issued that all theatres and dance halls were to be closed sharp on the stroke of midnight, December 31, and this order was carried out by the posting of police constables at the amusement centres to see that special shows came to a close at the midnight hour.

A different situation prevailed at Montreal and other cities of Quebec where the midnight shows went into the small hours without restriction. At Hull, Quebec, the performances at the Laurier and Eden theatres did not warm up until 12 P. M. but continued then at lively rate for two hours.

The authorities at Ottawa, Ontario, allowed leeway because of the occasion, with the result that the frolics at the Regent and Imperial theatres were conducted as arranged, the shows continuing until well after the arrival of Sunday.

P. J. Nolan, proprietor of the Rex and Columbia neighborhood houses in Ottawa, Ontario, has announced that he will start the erection of a $100,000 moving picture theatre at Bank Street and Second Avenue, in the high class residential section of the Canadian Capital, operations to be started in the near future. The new house is ot be known as the Avalon.

Mr. Nolan has purchased adjacent sites with a combined frontage of 176 feet for the new house, the cost of the land being $20,000. There is a frontage of 87 feet on Second Avenue and a portion of the property has a depth of 113 feet. The front elevation will be white stucco in California style which will be illuminated by flood lights at night. All seats will be on the one floor and arrangements are being made for a large pipe organ. There will be a fully-equipped stage with orchestra pit.

In addition to the theatre, the new building is to accommodate four badminton courts which will be available to local badminton clubs.

N. L. Nathanson, Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., has sold his Toronto home at 47 Russell Hill Road to Draper Dobie, stock broker, for $55,000. Mr. Nathanson is reported as being the purchaser of the large residence at 153 Lyndhurst Avenue, Toronto, owned by Ralph Connable, for $90,000. This house has 12 large rooms.

United Amusements, Limited, Montreal, Quebec, of which George Nicholas is managing director, has re-opened the Westmount theatre, Montreal, following extensive alterations and redecorations. This is one of 12 large theatres operated by the company in Montreal.

Alderman Ernie Marks of Oshawa, Ontario, one of the theatrical pioneers of Canada, has purchased the Martin theatre at Oshawa, which he has operated for some years. The price is reported at $70,000 and several thousands of dollars will be spent in alterations. Ald. Marks, with his brothers, was among the first showmen in the Dominion, operating "Marks Bros. Shows" many years before the introduction of moving pictures. Although well advanced in years, Ernie Marks is still active and energetic.

The Crescent Palace theatre, 3265 Dundas Street West, Toronto, Ontario, has been purchased by Jessie Rappaport of Toronto, for $38,000, the vendor being Bernard Press. Mrs. Rappaport is well known in local theatre circles.

The orchestra of the Capitol theatre, Vancouver, B. C., of which J. R. Muir is manager, has been increased to 35 pieces and music is being made a special feature in place of vaudeville. Symphony concerts are conducted every Thursday evening as extra attractions.

Edward Gee, known as the "Singing Doorman" of the Uptown theatre, Toronto, one of the largest moving picture palaces in Canada, did his bit during the holiday season by giving a special programme at the Christie Street Hospital, where incapacitated war veterans are spending their days.

Seattle

COMPLETING the formation of their branches in the Pacific Northwest territory, serving Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho and Alaska, H. C. Borger, Western sales director of Tiffany-Stahl, spent the last week in this city and announced the following office staffs:

Seattle will be managed by Fred P. Knight, former assistant manager of D. C. Millward's Western Film Corporation, with Frank Quiett as assistant manager, W. C. Gowen, L. W. Patrick and Jay Gage as sales representatives, and Yvonne Maxwell as cashier.

Portland will be managed by Jimmy Beale, who has just left to organize his exchange and personnel. Millward will preside as Northwest district manager, in charge of both offices, and will also retain his financial interest in Western Film.

Miss Patricia Lynch, daughter of Mrs. Lynch, secretary of the Seattle Film Board of Trade, left last week for Indianapolis, where she will take over the secretary's duties for the Film Board in the Indiana center. Her experience in the local office with her mother has been a deciding factor in her selection for the position in the mid West.

First National last week received its new local exchange manager in the person of Les Davis, a popular Northwest film man of the First National exchange in Portland. Mr. Davis, who came to Portland from Minneapolis only last summer, has already made scores of friends in this territory, and is already "right at home" in his new office. His office in Portland is being filled for the time by W. R. Walsh, assistant manager. J. W. Parry, booker, will be assistant manager of the local exchange.

Manager Robert W. Bender last week presented, as an added musical attraction at his Columbia Theatre, a distinct triumph in the appearance of Vic Meyers and His Columbia Recording Orchestra from the Hotel Butler in Seattle. Meyers and his group, broadcasting artists from two Seattle stations as well as a recording band, were the hit of the M. P. T. O. W. Pot Pourri in November, and presented a twenty-minute program of popular rhythmic selections on the Columbia stage.

L. J. McGinley, formerly connected with the Fox exchange in Seattle and more recently with Paramount in Salt Lake City, returned last week to take up new sales duties with Manager D. J. McNerney's local United Artists exchange.

C. A. Swanson, president of the Star Amusement Company of Everett, last week opened his new Granada Theatre in the neighboring city, featuring Movietone and Vitaphone. This is the first installation of "talkies" in any of the smaller cities in the Pacific Northwest district.

Les Weir, western district sales manager for Pathe, spent a few days here recently with Manager L. A. Samuelson and the sales staff of the local Pathe exchange. Ths was his first visit in his new capacity since his former connections with P. D. C.

Last week was a touch one for two Seattle film salesmen, as it deprived them of their method of transportation. Within six hours, Herbert Hoke, of Paramount and Harry Landstrom of Educational, both reported to police that their cars had been stolen from in front of their homes. Both cars were recovered within two days, but were smashed to a very noticeable extent by the thieves.

Purchase of the entire 49 shares of outstanding stock in the Inland Empire Theatre Company of Walla Walla by Fred B. Rivers, Sr., was announced last week. This move gives entire ownership of the corporation to Mr. Rivers and his son, Eddie, Jr. At present the company owns and operates the Strand Theatre in the Eastern Washington city, and plans have just been announced for the renovating and remodeling of the house into one of the largest theatres in the territory. Eddie, Jr., at present also manages the Granada and Egyptian Theatres in Spokane for Ray Grombacher. The Inland Theatres have just signed a long-time lease on the Strand Theatre premises and adjoining property.

Sale of two smaller houses in the Pacific Northwest has been announced on Film Row. The Palace Theatre in Zillah, Washington, has been sold to Clint Thomas, who now operates the house, and Rowe and Berry are announced as the new owners and operators of the Rex Theatre at Elk River, Idaho.

William Lewis, western representative for the J. E. McAuley Company of Chicago, manufacturers of Peerless reflector lamps, last week closed his local office and will open in San Francisco after January 1, where he will make his headquarters in the future.

Frank Heyfron, formerly associated with a Hollywood studio, arrived here last week to manage the office of the Columbia Exchange in this city, and also act as city sales representative. Mr. Heyfron some time ago was connected with both Realart and Paramount exchanges in this city.

Dave Bershon, recently appointed western sales director of United Artists, spent a short time at the local branch office last week.

Ray Grombacher, prominent Northwest exhibitor and president of the M. P. T. O. W. for 1928, last week closed his Liberty Theatre for a complete remodeling and redecorating job. He expects to reopen early in January with Vitaphone, Movietone, "Grombacher's News Ideas" and an enlarged symphony orchestra under the direction of Sam K. Wineland, formerly of this city.

Police of Seattle last week recovered twenty-two reels of film and an automobile stolen a few days before from one of the film exchanges on the Row. The car and pictures belonged to [illegible] of the Atlas Theatre. The film was found in the home of two suspects.

"Sully" Sullivan, high-powered salesman of Manager Ben Fish's local Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exchange, arrived back in Seattle last week after the thrilling experience of having been one of the passengers on the ill-fated steamer Northwestern that recently went on the rocks off Cape Mudge, Alaska. Sully was en route to the northern territory on a sales tour when the accident occurred, and was brought back on a ship that rescued the passengers and crew of the Northwestern. About sixty prints of film were lost when the ship was abandoned.

Offices of Universal's Northwest Theatrical Enterprises and Universal Chain Theatres Inc., were moved last week from the Securities Building to the Winter Garden Theatre in this city. Jack Schlaifer, head of the group, and his entire office staff will continue their work from the new quarters, which have been fixed up to accommodate them.

Joe Bush, whose Majestic Theatre at Vernonia, Oregon, was burned to the ground last week, has just announced plans for the immediate reconstruction of his house, and is already in the field buying equipment and materials. During the reconstruction work, Mr. Bush is operating his Rose Theatre on a daily program basis.

O. W. Helwig, auditor for the western division of Pathe, returned to his local headquarters last week after a trip to the Portland and Butte exchanges.

New officers of the Pacific Northwest Film Board of Trade were elected at the last regular meeting of that body held in Seattle, Washington, last week, and will take office the first of the year as follows:

Messrs. Fish, Stearn and McNerney were also elected distributor members of the Board of Arbitration for a three-month period.

Chicago

MANAGER ERNEST KRUG, who opened the handsome, new Shore Theatre this week, was saddened by the sudden death of his mother who passed away shortly after the successful premier of the theatre. His many friends in film and exhibitor circles sympathize with him in his loss.

Clyde Elliott has reopened the New Evanston Theatre, Evanston, with a dramatic stock company. No picture will be used in this house.

The Mirror Theatre at Moline, Illinois, owned by I. Brotman and Son, was totally destroyed by fire last week. Whether or not the house will be rebuilt is as yet undetermined.

William Cuddy, formerly publicity director for Saxe Enterprises, is now associated with Great States Theatres, Inc., handling publicity and exploitation for their Rockford, Illinois houses.

The entire executive board of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago is planning to attend the testimonial dinner which will be tendered Chicago's new Health Commissioner Kegel, at the Rainbow Garden on January 12th.

Harry Miller, formerly connected with the Ambassador and Drake Theatres, has leased the Admiral Theatre from the Chicago Title & Trust Company, and will operate it as a de luxe motion picture theatre. The house has been operating for the past two months under receivership.

Nellie Revell, popular publicist who is handling the new United Artists Theatre, is now being assisted by Mr. Castle, who is well known in Chicago motion picture circles as an exploitation and advertising man.

Sam Meyers of the Teatro Del Lago, is credited with a new idea, having started an advertising campaign for his house in Chicago newspapers. This is the first time that a theatre outside the city limits has utilized the metropolitan press for publicity purposes.

The new eighteen hundred seat house which is rapidly nearing completion at Chicago Avenue and Cicero, is expected to be ready for opening next month, but no lessee for this theatre has as yet been secured. The builders are the Roosevelt Finance Company of Chicago.

The return of Jesse Crawford to the Chicago Theatre, as guest organist, will bring many of his admirers to that house within the next few weeks. Mr. Crawford has become a strong drawing card at the Paramount Theatre, New York City, to which he was transferred, at the time of its opening, from the Chicago.

South East

ACTRESSES and actors on the vaudeville program at B. F. Keith's Rialto theatre the last half of the week who came to Louisville in advance of their engagement, helped the Girl Scouts and others arrange boxes of candy, oranges and surprise gifts to be presented children attending the big Times-Courier - Journal - Keith - Albee Christmas party last Saturday morning. The Community Christmas Association announced that about 3,000 tickets were given out.

Nat Williams, of Interstate Enterprises, Inc., Thomasville, Ga., was another Atlantic caller.

Florida

THE big Christmas party given by the Victory, Tampa, to the poor children of the city last Saturday morning, was a big success. Over 1500 children attended and were first treated to a show arranged by the vaudeville acts and comedies. Then the drop was raised and a monster Christmas tree disclosed, with the 2,000 toys which had been collected at the special toy matinees given the previous week, where a toy was all the ticket needed, and which had all been repaired and painted by the Victory staff. The children then filed out and as they passed Santa Claus they received a toy and a package of candy and nuts. Manager George B. Peck and his staff spent several days packing the gifts but feel they were amply repaid for their work by the great pleasure they gave these needy children. The presents that were left were sent to a colored institution for distribution.

John E. Campbell, the movie maker of Port Tampa City, is laid up with a bad cold. "Fine Christmas present I got," says John.

John B. Carroll, general manager of Consolidated Amusements, Tampa, journeyed to Birmingham, where he spent Christmas with the Publix officials, who were there to witness the opening of the new Alabama theatre.

N. V. Darley, manager of the Rivoli in Ybor City, spent the holidays with his brothers in Mobile. He will spend a few days with the exchanges in Atlanta before returning home.

In recognition of the good work performed, John B. Carroll, of the Consolidated Amusements, Tampa, gives a theatre party to the Boy Scouts every now and then. The second party of the year was staged last week and was enjoyed by many.

The Victory, Tampa, advertised a special "Midnight Frolic" for New Year's Eve, with the vaudeville acts putting on special numbers.

The Maceo, in the negro section of Tampa, has leased the theatre to the Negro Veterans of America each Wednesday evening during the winter for boxing matches. Five hot bouts are given and the attendance so far has been very good.

Holiday business in Jacksonville theatres was fair. The Imperial and the Florida, the Arcade and the Palace, all were well-treated by the Christmas patrons.

Jesse L. Clark, manager of the Palace and Temple theatres, Jacksonville, went to Birmingham last week for the opening of the new Alabama theatre. Bolivar Hyde, who has been assistant manager at the Palace since the opening this fall, went to Birmingham Wednesday night to take charge of the Strand and Galax theatres. Mr. Hyde made many friends during his stay in Jacksonville, who are pleased with his promotion. Mr. Clark returned from Birmingham Wednesday.

Mrs. H. W. Schaefer, associate correspondent for the Weekly Film Review, went on vacation last Sunday night, visiting her parents in Union City, Tenn. Her father, A. N. Dickson, is an employee of the Crescent theatre at Union City, one of Tony Sudekum's houses.

The annual Christmas tree staged by Manager Jesse L. Clark at the Palace theatre was held last Monday morning, with a record-breaking number of children and grown-ups in attendance. In the absence of Mr. Clark in Birmingham, Charlie Morrison, popular manager of the Arcade theatre, acted as master of ceremonies.

St. Louis

THE general contract for the construction of a community building to include 1,000-seat motion picture theatre, eight stores, seventeen offices and an assembly hall, to be erected at Acme and W. Florissant avenue, St. Louis, by the G. M. G. Corporation, has been awarded to the William H. & Nelson Cunliff Construction Company.

The theatre has been leased to local theatre men, and an announcement will soon be made of the opening date for the show house.

The building will cost $325,000 complete.

J. Dozier Stone, chief promoter of the new Missouri Theatre in Columbia, Mo., has announced the awarding of the general contract for the construction of the building to the Schultz Construction Company, of Chillicothe, Mo. The contract price was $133,755, and provides that the structure be completed within 180 working days.

The Scram City Theatre in Hillsboro, Ill., owned by Frank Halston, was destroyed by fire of undetermined origin on December 22. The loss was estimated at $10,000, and was but partly insured.

Tom McKean, manager of the St. Louis F. B. O. office, has resigned from that post, and on January 15 will assume his new duties as vice-president and general manager of the Premier Picture Corporation, 3308 Olive street, St. Louis. He has purchased an interest in the Independent exchange. Associated with him are Nat Steinberg, Tommy Tobin and his brother, Claude W. McKean.

Albany

THE Victory theatre in Newton Falls, N. Y., operated by Leonard and Cheney, was burned to the ground one night last week in a fire that caused damage of approximately $30,000 and which destroyed a two-story block which housed the theatre as well as a general store and meat market. The fire originated in the rear of the theatre from some unknown cause. The blaze was fought in zero weather, but the ice and snow on neighboring roofs prevented what might otherwise have been a far more disastrous fire. One of the partners in the Victory theatre is a relative of Amos Leonard, sales manager of the Pathe exchange, in Albany.

Frank Learnan, of Albany, who was first manager of the Strand in Schenectady, and more recently in charge of exploitation for the Farash chain in that city, resigned last week and will undoubtedly enter other lines of endeavor. Mr. Learnan was connected with the State Treasurer's office for many years, leaving some years ago to join the W. W. Farley forces. Mr. Learnan has made a name for himself as a house manager as well as an exploitation manager.

Joe Wallace, manager of Proctor house in Albany, was the host to about 100 men and women at a Christmas party served on the stage following the show. In Troy, Jake Golden, manager of Proctor's Fourth street house, served in a similar capacity.

Edward Urschel, booker at the Boston Pathe exchange, was in Albany for over the holidays and received a warm welcome from the local office.

There is an epidemic of small pox in Canastota, which has resulted in the Avon theatre, operated by the Kallet brothers, being forced to close for the time being.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Farley, of Albany, are making plans to wing their way south in January, and will remain a month or so at Coral Gables.

William Benton, of Saratoga Springs, worked a year in order to secure Sunday movies in Plattsburg, where he has a theatre, but he is now reaping the reward for his efforts. Mr. Benton managed to secure Sunday shows during a part of last summer, when the military training camps were running in Plattsburg, and the type of pictures he showed during that period so impressed the taxpayers of the city that they decided recently to sanction Sunday shows.

It is said that the Stanley company is now endeavoring to sell the four houses they bought in the Pine Hills district of Albany as a site for a theatre. This would indicate that the company has decided to abandon any idea of competing with residential theatres.

The first run houses in Albany appear to be doing a good business these days. Some of the neighborhood houses, however, are having a pretty hard struggle to break even.

Harry Gibbs, special representative for Tiffany, was up from New York last week for a conference with Jack Krauss, the local manager.

In the shifts that have taken place at the Pathe-P-D-C exchange, Al Marchetti is no longer office manager, but is now spending all of his time as booker. Edward Hayes becomes office and general manager of the exchange.

Robbins and Lumberg, of Utica, opened their new house, known as the Uptown theatre, on Thursday evening, Dec. 29th. The house cost about $200,000 and has a seating capacity of 1,600 persons. It is one of the most beautiful residential theatres in New York state. Invitations to the opening were received by many in Albany.

Miss Steinbock, formerly with the F. B. O. exchange, is now at the Pathe office. An inventory of film and poster stocks was taken by the local Pathe exchange on Saturday.

Clarence Gardner, owner of the Pine Hills theatre in Albany, is planning to try out a magician from a nearby town for at least one night in the near future. If this proves successful, Mr. Gardner may supplement his picture program with such acts from time to time.

T. C. Streibert, from the F. B. O. home office in New York city, was in town during the week, conferring with Al Guteck, local manager. Incidentally, Mr. Guteck is one exchange manager in Albany who received no Christmas neckties. He spent the holiday at his former home in Fitchburg, Mass.

Sam Goldstein, of Springfield, Mass., was along film row last week and announced that he had just opened a new theatre in Chicopee. J. E. Jerome, of Mayfield, has just taken over the theatre in that village from L. Armstrong. Mr. Jerome was in Albany last week, booking pictures.

Bill Smalley, of Cooperstown, in Albany during the week, remarked that business simply had to be good with him if he is to pay a $2,000 dentist bill, which he has contracted during the past year.

The most attractive letterhead received at Albany exchange comes from Sue Weller, an exhibitor in Alexandria Bay, whose letterheads are embellished with a border of Thousand Island scenes.

Spats seem to be all the rage along Albany's film row these days. To a group consisting of Fenton Lawlor and Al Guteck, there has now come Nat Levy, latest recruit who claims that Albany winters, simply demand spats.

Jack Campbell, manager of the Griswold in Troy, received a gift box from his employees, which included shirts, ties, fur gloves and other articles of wearing apparel. Mr. Campbell is going after business hard these days and used ten acts of vaudeville, together with pictures, on his holiday bill.

R. C. McClure, who came to Saranac Lake from Texas several months ago and who operates the Queen theatre there, had trouble with his heating system last week and telephoned several of the Albany exchanges. He was able to resume after a day or so.

Members of the theatrical bowling league in Troy, of which William Jarvis is president, will hold their banquet the second week in January. The American theatre team is now in last place.

Nat Levy, Albany manager for Universal, presented his young daughter with a Teddy bear that came from the grab bag at the office, but only after several swaps had been made with other employees.

At Proctor's theatre in Troy the other night, the postal employees of the city arrived in a body and presented Mollie Williams with a huge basket of flowers.

Al Lemay, projectionist at the Lincoln in Troy, is erecting a new home on the outskirts of the city. Mr. Lemay, who was elected financial secretary of the motion picture machine operators' union, for the sixteenth time recently, was presented with a bulldog for Christmas. Harry Brooks was reelected president for the sixteenth time, of the union, while Louis Rinn has been elected secretary and John Ross treasurer.

C. D. LaPointe, of Chatham, and Sam Hochstein, of Hudson, were along the row during the week, booking pictures.

Jake Rosenthal is spending a few days in New York city, looking for novelties which he will give away from time to time at his theatre in Troy. Mr. Rosenthal's bill for turkeys alone during the week preceding Christmas amounted to $107.

Louis Saperstein, manager of the American in Troy, and Ben Stern, manager of the Lincoln, who have never been known to have a match, each received cigar lighters for Christmas from their friends.

Minneapolis

THE number of New Year's Eve midnight performances given in northwest theatres this year were at least double the number given last year, it is estimated. Special shows were provided in many theatres in the larger cities, while in the smaller cities there was usually only one house giving a special performance.

In order to help the sale of Christmas seals in Minneapolis F. & R. gave a special morning matinee at the Lyric at which admission for children from 8 to 16 was one seal.

Changes in location have been undertaken by three Minneapolis film exchanges. F. B. O. has moved to 42 Glenwood (formerly Western) avenue, where P. D. C. was housed before its absorption by Pathe. The First National offices are already located in the new building at 1101 First avenue N., where they will have for their neighbors after the first of the year the Universal branch office.

The Minneapolis Warner branch is to have the addition of E. W. B. Booth to its sales force, according to announcement of Manager Wolf. For the last 14 years Booth has been with Fox at Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

H. A. R. Dutton, president of the National Theatre Supply Company, was a recent visitor in Minneapolis, while on his way from the west coast to Chicago.

Max Stahl left last week for New York to confer with other home office officials of Educational. He is now in temporary charge of the Minneapolis branch office.

Mark Ross, manager for the Minneapolis Universal branch, has been obliged on account of pressure of business to postpone his trip to the west coast.

The Cozy theatre at Grey Eagle, Minn., has been closed by A. O. Luebke but will be opened again after the first of the year by Dean Alderman and Earl Davis.

The Philo and Grand theatres at Chisholm, Minn., are to be extensively altered and renovated as soon as the contractors can get to work, according to the plans of H. Sosnosky, who took over the F. & R. interests in the two houses recently.

Cleveland

THE girls of the Standard Film Service Company, twelve of 'em, held their annual Christmas party this year at Community House. Dinner was served and then bridge followed. Lena Fishman, Lillian Haessly and Lillian Ershler took home the prizes. All of the girls took home souvenirs of the party, however, as comic prizes were provided for each one. The girls meet once a month at their homes for bridge all the year round.

Jack Lawrence has severed his connections with the Standard Film Service Company to be affiliated, according to report, with Columbia Pictures.

H. Ward Johnson, who sold his Liberty Theatre, Geneva, several years ago, is back in the picture business again. He has purchased the Main Theatre, Conneaut, from G. D. Clark. Clark owned the house only about a month.

A. V. Abel, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, New Philadelphia, in association with I. S. Russell, has purchased the Cinderella Theatre at Coshocton.

Ward Scott, local Fox exchange manager, was in New York over New Years. He and Mrs. Scott combined business with pleasure. Mrs. Scott took care of the pleasure part of the trip, and Mr. Scott did the business.

Al Mertz, local FBO exchange manager, is wearing a new desk set. It was a Christmas surprise from his office associates.

A board meeting of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio will be called for some time during the week of January 8th. That's the word that came out of Columbus and the M. P. T. O. headquarters.

The fourth successive Sunday the motion picture theatre owners of Dover have opened their shows, have been arrested, have appeared before the Mayor, paid their fines, and continued their shows. The exhibitors are George Chrest, Roscoe Spidell and E. F. Allman. The Sunday blue law is being enforced in Dover by the church interests. That this law is not popular with the public is demonstrated by the fact that the movie houses have all done big business on the Sundays they have been open. Mayor P. J. Groh tried to effect a reconciliation between the two opposing factions, but without success.

Dick Deutsch's new independent exchange is called the Import Film Company. He has an office in 219 Film Exchange Building. As indicated by the name the Import Film Company will handle foreign-made pictures.

LeMotto Smith and F. A. Kelly, president and general manager, respectively, of the Smith Amusement Company, were in the Film Building last week. They operate houses in Alliance, Warren and Huntington, W. Va.

San Diego

H. L. HARTMAN, manager of the local West Coast houses, was the winner of a $100 gold watch offered for the most publicity secured in any city of the fourth division of the territory covered by the West Coast theatres over a period of six weeks, exploiting the "Greater Movie Season" campaign.

The contract for the new West Coast theatre to be constructed in El Centro, in the Imperial Valley, has been let to a Los Angeles firm at $98,608. In addition to the main theatre building the contract calls for a frame airdrome, with a seating capacity of 1200, while the theatre will seat 1400. The airdrome will be used largely during the hot summer season for the evening shows.

Dwight L. Hill, local manager of the Plaza, Superba, Mission and other houses in the Pacific National Theatres chain, announces that the Vitaphone, which has proven such a success at the Plaza, will be installed at the Superba soon. In addition the Movietone is also to be an added attraction at the latter house. There will be no advance in the admission scale, however.

A house organ, to be a regular feature of the local West Coast theatres, made its appearance in December and is being sent to all patrons upon their request. It carries sixteen pages of reading matter and advertising, and has an attractive cover, designed by a local artist. Announcements are made of the current and future attractions at the New California, Cabrillo and Fairmount, the three houses in the West Coast chain here.

Pat West, well known on Broadway as a comedian and the author of "So's Your Old Man," and other popular numbers, has come to the New California as master of ceremonies, succeeding Milt Franklyn, who planned to spend a vacation in Salt Lake City before assuming new duties in the north.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Breakfast at Sunrise" — First National, Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle

Times: "Frency and sparkling with subtle wit and humor. It's all Connie—spicy, zippy, sophisticated, alluring and daring—the original preferred blonde! A laugh in every sequence—and it's laughter provoked by clever situations and spicy subtitles, too!"

"Breakfast at Sunrise" — First National, Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh

Press: "On screen Constance Talmadge offers 'Breakfast at Sunrise' for those who have a liking for farce comedy of an especially high order."

Sun Telegraph: "Role of girl convincingly played by Constance Talmadge, whose humor is spontaneous. Don Alvarado was effective and good looking."

"Breakfast at Sunrise" — First National, Wisconsin Theatre, Milwaukee

Winconsin News: "Is one of most delightfully light, and entirely refreshing films in which I have seen Constance for a long time. . . . In it, Constance is an adorable vixen, modishly gowned, as usual. . . . Has a dash about her, a sparkle and a hundred vixenish mannerisms that no other actress seems to have."

"Rose of the Golden West"—First National, Riviera Theatre, Omaha

Bee-News: "Mary Astor has a role which fits her type of beauty like a glove. . . . Gilbert Roland does some really fine work. . . . Settings, photography and acting, as well as directing, are above reproach."

"The Crystal Cup"—First National, Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia

Inquirer: "Dorothy Mackaill gives a competent performance, and her mannish clothes and impersonations are extremely clever. Mulhall with his winning personality is well fitted for the part of the young physician, while Fellowes is capable. Original theme and excellent direction of Dillon make picture interesting."

Morning Ledger: "Miss Mackaill has her big chance. Her acting is superb and a finished tapestry of emotionalism—about best thing she has done in many months. Again Mulhall is favored recipient of his fair partner's smiles. While Mulhall plays in support he manages somehow to hold spotlight in his own direction. This team, Mackaill and Mulhall, whether portraying comedy or drama, seems to be one of best bets for moviegoers today. . . . Film is good entertainment if only for mere reason of being 'different.'"

"Moon of Israel"—F B O, Little Theatre, Washington, D. C.

Times: "Is going to make quite an impression in Wasington, judging by crowds which attended opening performance. Has many points of similarity with 'The Ten Commandments,' including the Red Sea sequence, but it seems that 'Moon of Israel' is from a dramatic viewpoint a better show, at least continuity is smoother. 'Moon of Israel' was finished a year before work was started on American movie. Maria Corda portrays inspiring role of Merapi; Adelqui Millar is a striking figure as Prince Sati. Arlette Marchal as Princess Userti gorgeously gowned throughout and handles her bits well. Settings stupendous and impressive."

Evening Star: "Ranks with 'Ben-Hur' in everything. Film so closely identified with the "Ten Commandments,' which it preceded by more than a year, that there is a suspicion that maybe DeMille cut a bit of film here and there. However, close as it may be to later production, 'Moon of Israel' is much better, in this writer's opinion. No glaring exaggeration."

"Wings" — Paramount, Aldine Theatre, Philadelphia

Evening Ledger: "Finest thing of its kind that has been done to date—not forgetting 'What Price Glory' and 'The Big Parade.'"

Public Ledger: "In so far as spectacular is concerned, climax of all previous war pictures was exhibited last night at the Aldine."

Daily News: "Most thrilling spectacular celluloid ribbon of melodrama that is war, thus far recorded through lense of studio motion-picture camera."

Sun: "Mighty film epic of air. Godlike."

Record: "Superb picture. War pictures have been before 'Wings' but none comparable to it in magnificent scope and variety and vividness of photography."

The fame of the Wurlitzer Organ as a musical attraction in the leading motion picture theatres of America has spread to the far corners of the civilized world. As a result the famous Wurlitzer Organ has been installed in many progressive theatres in foreign countries. The list of Wurlitzer installations throughout the country during the past year is evidence of Wurlitzer supremacy. Wurlitzer Organs are world famous—they possess exclusive features which give the organist an instrument of marvelous flexibility and instant responsiveness to the slightest touch.

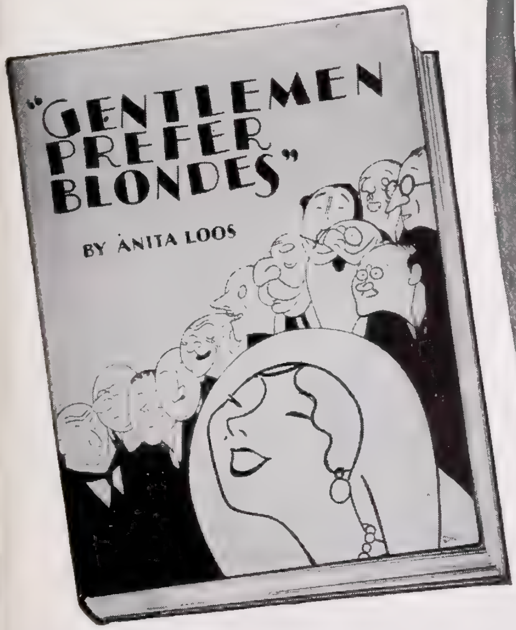
"GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES"

THE LOSER! So hot waxed the competition to play Lorelei that Chester Conklin entered the race.



THE BOOK THAT STARTED IT. Over a million copies sold to date. Translated into every language, including the Scandinavian.

HERE'S LORELEI. The world's most popular blonde. Gold digging heroine of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes". In real life, Ruth Taylor, chosen to play the role after a world-wide inspection of beautiful blondes.

GUS EISMAN. The Button King who "educated" Lorelei. Played by Ford Sterling.

MEN, BEWARE! Lorelei and Dorothy stalking males on the deck of an ocean liner.

MR. SPOFFORD. The millionaire reformer hooked by Lorelei. On the screen Holmes Herbert.

A Paramount Picture

From the famous story by Anita Loos and the play by Anita Loos and John Emerson. Hector Turnbull Production, directed by Malcolm St. Clair.

MALCOLM ST. CLAIR. Director of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" with Anita Loos and Ruth Taylor.

"NOBODY WILL WANT TO MARRY ME!" sobs Lorelei. And another sucker bites the dust.

DIMPLED DYNAMITE. The gimme girls of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes". Warm lips but hearts of ice.

"NICE BUT UNREFINED". So says Lorelei of her girl friend Dorothy (Alice White), brunette in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes".

OLD BUT OH, MY! An eighteen year old mind in a sixty year old chassis—Mrs. Spoffard (Trixie Friganza).

"I WANT TO GO TO PARIS". Mr. Eisman, her "educator," says "No". So she goes to Paris—and how!

SIR FRANCIS BEEKMAN. Loosening him from a diamond tiara was Lorelei's greatest single feat (Mack Swain).

500 LETTERS A DAY. So great is popular interest in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" that Ruth Taylor (Lorelei), previously an unknown, has to wheel her daily mail.

LUCKY AUTHORS. Anita Loos and John Emerson made so much money from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" that they've retired.

UNIVERSAL'S AMAZING 4

On My 22d Anniversary

(No. 568.—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle President of the Universal Pictures Corporation.)

I HAVE SOLD A TREMENDOUS NUMBER OF CONTRACTS ON FOUR OF the biggest pictures of the year—or rather I have given them away.

I'LL ADMIT FRANKLY THAT I DID NOT DO THIS OUT OF THE goodness of my heart. The plain truth is that I did not know how powerful these pictures would be. They were sold before I found out.

THAT'S A BAD THING FOR ME, BUT GREAT FOR YOU—IF YOU HAVE already signed them up. Here they are!

"WE AMERICANS," SUPERVISED BY CARL LAEMMLE, JR., AND directed by Edward Sloman, has turned out to be far greater in every respect than "His People" which was made by the same director. It should have been sold all by itself and exploited like a million dollar negative.

"THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN PARIS," FEATURING GEORGE SIDNEY and J. Farrel MacDonald, with Vera Gordon, Kate Price and Gertrude Astor—great scot, what a cast!—and directed by William Beaudine. This is going to pack the houses of the world.

"LES MISERABLES," VICTOR HUGO'S IMMORTAL MASTERPIECE, THE surprise picture of the year for pulling power, quality and profits. This picture has been making records of box offices look silly in all parts of the world.

"THE CAT AND THE CANARY," STARRING LAURA LA PLANTE AND directed by Paul Leni —a picture which has been raved about by critics to such an extent that the adjectives are completely worn out.

NOW, AS I HAVE SAID, A VAST NUMBER OF CONTRACTS ON these pictures were signed before anyone, including myself, knew that we had the four best pieces of moving picture property in many a season.

IF YOU'VE SIGNED, YOU'RE A LUCKY MAN. IF YOU SIGNED EARLY because you know by experience that you always get something more than your money's worth from Universal, you're a smart man.

ANY ONE OF THESE FOUR PICTURES IS WORTHY OF A SEPARATE selling campaign, but with the large amount of product Universal is producing it is impossible for us to know in advance how much better our pictures are than the selling price would indicate. That's your good fortune.

MAKE THE MOST OF IT.

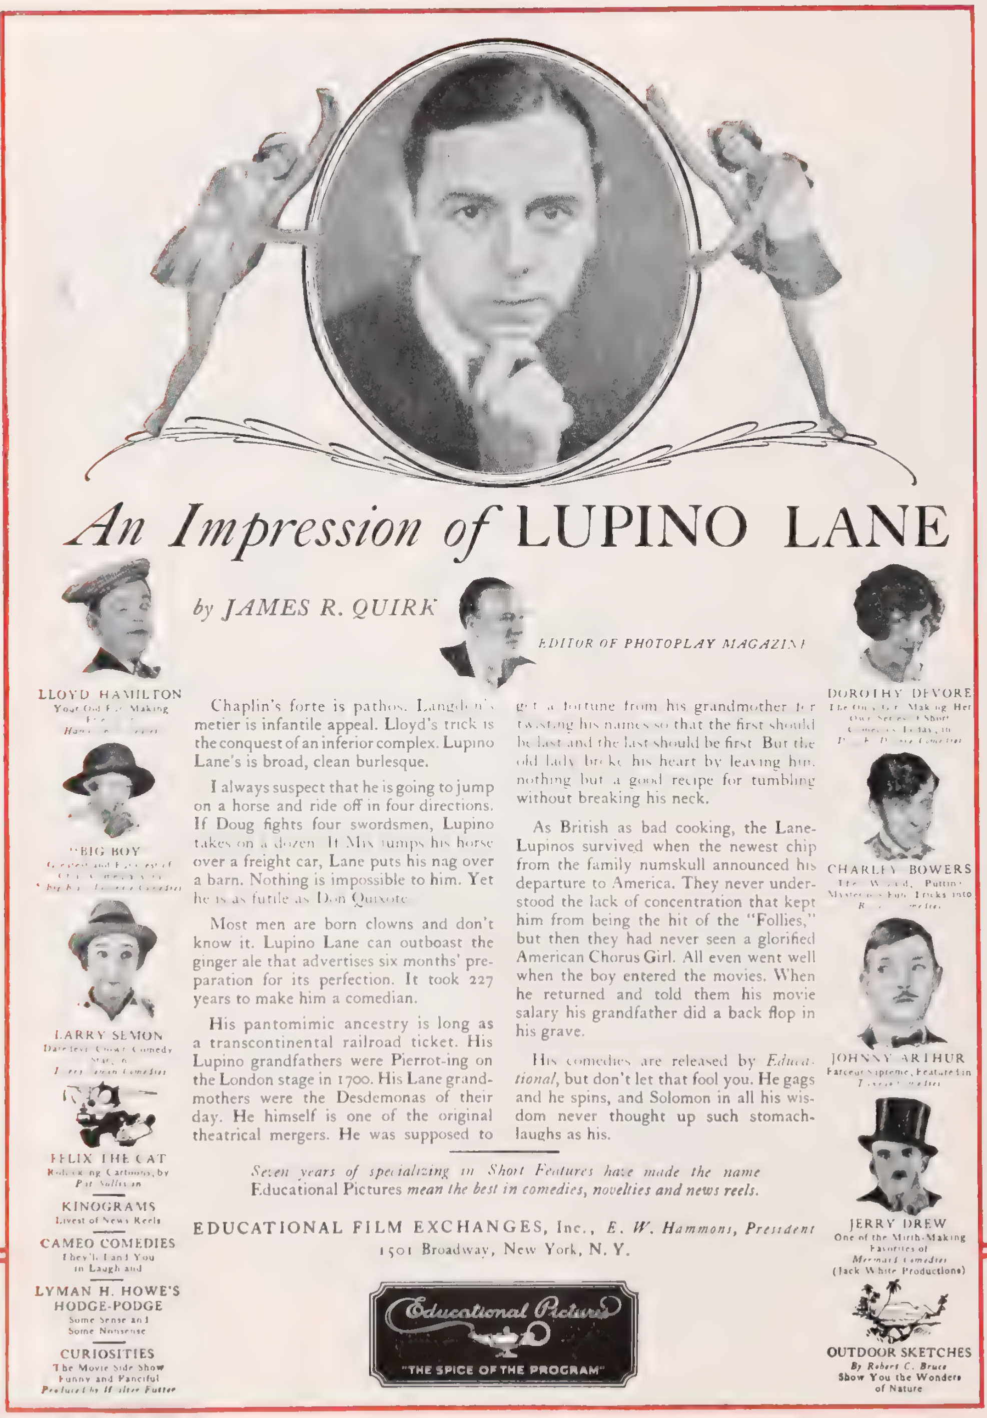
Whetting the Appetite of Consistency is as important in advertising support as it is in entertainment quality. For years Educational's advertising to your patrons has been just as steady and unfailing as the merit of its Short Features—and they have dominated the field without question.



An Impression of LUPINO LANE

by JAMES R. QUIRK

EDITOR OF PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE

Chaplin's forte is pathos. Langdon's metier is infantile appeal. Lloyd's trick is the conquest of an inferior complex. Lupino Lane's is broad, clean burlesque.

I always suspect that he is going to jump on a horse and ride off in four directions. If Doug fights four swordsmen, Lupino takes on a dozen. If Mix jumps his horse over a freight car, Lane puts his nag over a barn. Nothing is impossible to him. Yet he is as futile as Don Quixote.

Most men are born clowns and don't know it. Lupino Lane can outboast the ginger ale that advertises six months' preparation for its perfection. It took 227 years to make him a comedian.

His pantomimic ancestry is long as a transcontinental railroad ticket. His Lupino grandfathers were Pierrot-ing on the London stage in 1700. His Lane grandmothers were the Desdemonas of their day. He himself is one of the original theatrical mergers. He was supposed to get a fortune from his grandmother for twisting his names so that the first should be last and the last should be first. But the old lady broke his heart by leaving him nothing but a good recipe for tumbling without breaking his neck.

As British as bad cooking, the Lane-Lupinos survived when the newest chip from the family numskull announced his departure to America. They never understood the lack of concentration that kept him from being the hit of the "Follies," but then they had never seen a glorified American Chorus Girl. All even went well when the boy entered the movies. When he returned and told them his movie salary his grandfather did a back flop in his grave.

His comedies are released by Educational, but don't let that fool you. He gags and he spins, and Solomon in all his wisdom never thought up such stomach-laughs as his.

An Impression of CHARLEY BOWERS

by JAMES R. QUIRK

EDITOR OF PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE

HIGHBROW critics talk in ornate polysyllables about the ingenuity and art of the German film makers. If they condescended to witness the nonsensical genius of a Charley Bowers comedy they could drool dictionaries.

In the world's most individualistic industry, he is Aladdin and the camera is his lamp. He is a Jack of all trades and a master of one. He can act. He can direct. He can write. He can conceive the most glorious idiocy. He is a MASTER of camera wizardry.

Every short feature bearing his name proves the camera is a monumental liar. He makes hard boiled eggs hatch little Fords, turns time upside down and releases the blessing of laughter. Once in a comedy he drove a herd of elephants and donkeys into the Capitol at Washington. The learned Solons got so excited they demanded an investigation. They had been deceived by trick photography. Charley and the elephants had never been near the District of Coolidge.

I suspect Charley of a conspiracy against the school system. He is a living proof of the bliss of booklessness. All the education he ever received consisted of six months in kindergarten. Then he was kidnapped by a circus. And look at him now. In one of his recent comedies I witnessed a former Biograph director playing an extra bit.

His life has been almost as goofy as his genius. His mother was a French countess, his father an Irish doctor, and Charley was born in Iowa. After that anything was possible.

It happened. At five a tramp circus performer taught him to walk rope. At six the circus kidnapped him. He didn't get home for two years and the shock killed his father.

Before he was nine Charley was supporting his mother. He walked rope, mowed lawns, ran elevators, printed menus, broke broncos, jockeyed horses, packed pork, sketched cartoons, toured vaudeville, directed plays, designed scenery, produced advertising, wrote history, animated one hundred reels of cartoons, worked out the Bowers process, invented a camera and—grew up.

Naturally the impossible is a joke to him. His whole life has been impossible and as a practical joker he is a near-millionaire.

Give this little lad a great big look.

A New Era on the Way

Rapid Developments in "Sound" Movie Field

By William A. Johnston

MONTHS ago—and again the other day in our Highlights of 1927—we ventured the belief that "sound" movies were, and are, the biggest development on the industry's horizon.

Facts are rapidly bearing out the prediction. With amazing rapidity—and within the space of a week—several important announcements are made:

General Electric and the Radio Corporation of America acquire an interest in FBO, with a view to marketing the Kinegraphone, G. E's "sound" picture process.

Educational closes a deal for exclusive use of Vocafilm in connection with its short features and for other uses which are of great importance.

Vitaphone signs a number of well-known screen players for appearances in dramatic playlets and other speaking doles.

In addition, the Fox Movietone activities are going forward, both in the "sound" newsreel, which has been regularly released for several weeks, and in the photoplay field, where the making of full-length productions with sound effects and spoken roles is under way.

The enumeration of these by no means exhausts the list. National Theatre Supply Co. has the Orchestraphone; and there are a number of others.

So we are well on the way to a new era in this industry.

Thus far, chief attention has been centered upon the perfection of the technical devices. This first stage will, we believe, be closely paralleled shortly by another, no less important.

The idea is well expressed by Dr. Lee De Forest, inventor of the Phonofilm, in a recent interview:

"Nineteen twenty-eight will see these various improvements which I have described exploited and demonstrated to the public in many hundreds of theatres scattered throughout the country.

"The chief remaining problems in the talking picture art lie not in the theatre or engineering laboratory, but in the motion picture studio. There scenario writers, producers, artists and cameramen must gradually acquire working knowledge of the new art, and how to take full artistic advantage of the countless and immeasurably rich possibilities which this new art has now brought forth for the entertainment and cultural uplift of the motion picture public".

A newer and richer entertainment, which will not subordinate the motion picture but will make it still more powerful in its appeal, will be provided through the use of the sound devices.

It's up to the production people to work out the details. In time, of course, they will.

We will go further and say that the studios which fully grasp the possibilities of the new era will be the leaders of the industry's tomorrow.

"The Garden of Eden"

Reviewed by Edwin Schallert

LOS ANGELES, January 7—"The Garden of Eden" runs the gamut of farce comedy, and is a highly amusing picture. It is not the sort of film that you might expect from the title, and even the first few sequences are mildly deceptive. It is the Corinne Griffith starring production, made for United Artists, wth John W. Considine as supervisor, and Lewis Milestone as the director. It was adapted from a German stage success.

"The Garden of Eden", referred to in the title, is the name given Monte Carlo, which is the locale for most of the story. A young girl's quest for an operatic career forms the basic substance of the plot, but it is soon forgotten in a series of romantic adventures. These all take place in the European resort, famous for its gambling establishments. Nothing, however, is shown of this side of the life in Monte Carlo.

Toni Lebrun, the niece of a Viennese bakery shop proprietor, wearies of selling rolls and pastries, and steals away from home one night to go on the stage in Budapesth. She lands in a cabaret, and isn't as much of a hit for her voice as she is because of her ankles. She attracts the attention of a rich patron, who attempts to thrust his attention upon her, but is duly saved by the wardrobe mistress.

That worthy takes a great interest in her, and invites her to go on a vacation. It turns out that she is an improverished noblewoman, who saves her annual pension for two or three weeks' enjoyment annually. Under her chaperonage Corinne meets a wealthy guest at the hotel and his nephew, and both propose to her. There are very funny complications resulting.

As the climax the identity of the Baroness and her ward are revealed by wealthy cafe patrons previously introduced. This is on the eve of Toni's wedding. She is marrying the younger of the two men, whom she had met at the hotel. He listens to the revelation, and indicates a desire to sidestep the ceremony. Toni in fury tears off her bridal raiment, throws it on the floor and stamps on it, and then clad only in teddy bears dashes down the stairs into the hotel lobby where a huge crowd is awaiting the arrival of the bride and bridegroom.

The audience literally howled at the climax of this picture on the night of the preview, and there is no question but that Corinne has played the scene with amazing vivacity and conviction.

"The Garden of Eden", as a whole, is gay and clever. Charles Ray is in the picture in a comedy role—one of the best that he has done. Louise Dresser does the Baroness, and Lowell Sherman in the cafe patron.

There is no quarrel to find with the entertainment values of "The Garden of Eden". It promises to be a hit by virtue of its mirthful high spots. One color sequence is introduced to enhance the pictorial effect. Corinne looks unusually attractive.

Banned 2,477 Posters Out of 99,460

Montreal's municipal censor, Martin Singher, inspected 99,460 theatrical posters during 1927 and of this number, 2,477 were condemned as unfit for public display, according to information contained in the censor's report for the past year submitted to Jules Crepeau, director of municipal department of Montreal.

The posters, as a whole, according to the report, were of a higher standard than those of the previous year. The number rejected during 1927 was 1,500 less than in 1926, it was pointed out. The receipts for the examination of the posters during the year amounted to $3,031, which amount was turned over to the city treasury. A recommendation has been made by Mr. Singher that the civic government appoint inspectors to make periodic visits to all local theatres for the purpose of passing on the lobby displays and to see that all posters bear the censor's stamp. An average of 8,300 posters were examined every month during 1927.

Officers of Montana M. P. T. O. Elected

At the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Montana, held last week at the Ansonia Amusement Company's Broadway Theatre in Butte, officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

E. Powers White, of the Strand Theatre, Livingston, president; B. W. Eckhardt, Marlow Theatre, Helena, vice-president; Eugene O'Keefe, Babcock Theatre, Billings, secretary-treasurer; and Merle Davis, Broadway Theatre, Butte, and Albert Nadeau, Sundial Theatre, Anaconda, directors.

Following the day's meeting and the election of officers, the exhibitors of the state were the guests of Manager Davis and the Ansonia Company at a venison dinner, followed by an evening's entertainment.

Film Exports for October Indicate Slight Change

October film exports showed but little change from the preceding month, according to figures just compiled by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., an increase in footage from 25,221,120 to 25,586,617 feet being offset by a decline in value from $670,934 to $670,676.

Exports by classes during the month were as follows: positives, 18,815,776 feet valued at $461,535, against 18,152,033 feet valued at $446,440 in September; negatives, 737,293 feet valued at $83,277, against 718,019 feet valued at $81,427; raw stock, 4,741,655 feet valued at $110,510, against 4,552,204 feet valued at $122,681; and shipments to non-contiguous territories, 1,291,893 feet valued at $15,354, against 1,798,864 feet valued at $20,386.

Big Business???

By Jack Alicoate

(From The Flim Daily, January 12, 1928. Reprinted by Permission)

WAY back in the Spring, when most but not all of the sap was still in the trees, a hardy but mildly alarmed group of pioneers (film, not western) sat around a square table face to face with each other and the gently irritating but poignant reflection that all had drunk far too heavily from the cup of extravagance and that expenses must be curtailed. Wall street was barking. Everybody was getting too much money but the stockholders, those who really owned the company. Something must be done. Old devil banker is cracking the whip. Where shall we cut?

First, the trade papers of course. Never mind the economics, it is at least a gesture. Sure they'll stand for it. Why not? For years they have given us their hat, shirts, coat and pants. Now we'll take away their socks and perhaps, if the winter is mild, we'll grab off their BVD's, too. And so it was decided. The agreement was formed. The "Take All Give Nothing" Committee commenced to function. "We must economize" is the penny wise and pound foolish answer to this economic problem. Now see how it is being done.

Big Business ???

To the exhibitor the ultimate consumer is his public. To the producer the consumer is the exhibitor. During last year a fair estimate of money expended on production —manufactured with the consumer in view—is one hundred and twenty-five million. During the same time the total spent by these selfsame manufacturers in advertising in the recognized trade papers to their buyers was considerably under one per cent. Think of it—and in a business the very essence of which is advertising, publicity and exploitation!

No wonder every salesman, every sales manager and every exchange manager is squawking. No wonder they are being driven as never before. No wonder the past selling season was a flop. The answer is not hard to find. You can't sell goods in this or any other business without advertising. This business should be run in 1928 style. The Civil War is past. Show the above figures to any national advertising expert if you want to hear a hearty laugh. Hurrah for the "Take All Give Nothing" Committee. Three cheers for "Big Business."

Big Business ???

And now, getting back to the agreement, comes another Spring with still three months for the "Take All Give Nothing" Club to go. Some of the boys must have forgotten the password and spent wisely but not too well as the other fellow sees it. Consultations are in order and —bang! the stuffed club falls gently but accurately in several directions. Take a prominent organization with headquarters on Madison Ave., for instance, and see how this highly efficient business principle works out. Here we have a great company, after an average year, now turning out some really fine pictures and being blackjacked by the "Take All Give Nothing" Committee to the point where they are forced to discontinue advertising splendid product, or to do so in an insignificant way. Product that an exhibitor has a right to know about—goodness knows he is getting enough bad ones. In the meantime exhibitors can organize guessing societies to find out what's being produced in Hollywood and distributed from New York. A mighty salute and a sweet, gentle curtesy to "Big Business."

Big Business ???

And what is happening? Most of the advertising departments, faced with the binding decision of the "Take All Give Nothing" Committee, have about used up their allotment of advertising pages. It has been the worst selling year in history. Many pictures are yet to be marketed and many that have been sold have yet to be played. How can we beat the other fellow to it? A great idea. We'll send our trade paper advertising through the mails. But, seems as if all of the boys got this highly original idea at one and the same time. Result, sort of a kidding kidders' game, as it were—thousands upon thousands of pieces of expensive pieces of literature thus finding their way into bigger and better waste paper baskets. Reams of costly copy thrown from the house tops in hopes of finding a landing place. Never mind if this advertising literature hits the mark. Get it into the mails. Hundreds of bags of it. Swamp the exhibitor with it. Probably one piece out of a hundred will be read. Who cares? We won't put it into the trade papers because it will offend the "Take All Give Nothing" Committee. A great big Merry Xmas and a Happy New Year to "Big Business."

Mr. Motion Picture Industry

The time is coming, and it is not far off, when you will need these selfsame trade publications and need them just as badly as you have many times in the past. You are endeavoring to save pennies by blindness and at the same time squander millions in revelry. Cutting down on trade paper advertising is not the answer and you know it. In our modest estimation you, Mr. Motion Picture Industry, with your mad, foolish, reckless extravagance if you don't watch your step and watch it closely, will run yourself into the most severe economic reaction any business has ever known.

We are heartily in accord with any legitimate move that will cut down needless expense. We also believe that the trade papers are the first line of both offense and defense in this great industry. To cut an insignificant few thousand dollars in a full year from your legitimately recognized fourth estate, in the flowing proclamation of economy, borders on the ridiculous. Particularly when it is a known fact that a hundred times this amount is squandered every year by extravagance, incompetent high hats and in other easily-defined ways.

A word gesture here and there cannot replace sound business principles. No one is more blind than he who will not see.

The Film Daily has been part and parcel of this industry since its infancy. It has thousands of readers the world over, and is modestly proud of the confidence reposed in it by its subscribers. It has a duty to perform in giving accurate, unbiased news to its readers and it will continue to do just that for many years to come.

It might be a sweet, spring-like, sentimental thought for this typewriter to pound out "My industry right or wrong but my industry," but by no stretch of the imagination would that lovely refrain change a childish, ridiculous cap and bells policy into even the fly page of that easily procured but seldom read volume called "Big Business."

Fay Wray and Gary Cooper, of Paramount's younger coterie of players, who will be co-featured in forthcoming love dramas. They appear together in "The Legion of the Condemned," and will start their second vehicle sometime in February.

Charlie Chaplin adoringly eyes Merna Kennedy, his titian-haired leading lady, in a scene from "The Circus," the comedian's current release from United Artists.

Rex King, a discovery of Modest Stein, the painter, is a 21-year-old Tennesseean whom Fox is grooming for cowboy roles. He has been riding horses since he was six. "Wild West Romance" will be his first vehicle.

Robert Flaherty, M-G-M director making "Southern Skies," shows Hunt Stromberg, studio executive, the location spot for the picture, while W. S. Van Dyke, his assistant, looks on.

Estelle Taylor talks over some of the future action in "The Whip Woman" with Director Joseph C. Boyle, in the center, and Forrest Halsey between scenes of the First National picture.

Educational has signed Ruby McCoy, red-haired winner of many beauty contests in Los Angeles, to a contract whereby she will be seen as leading lady in many new Educational comedies.

Henry Irving Dodge, author of the "Skinner" stories, points out to Bryant Washburn, left, and Director Lynn Shores, right, a few of the details of his story, "Skinner's Big Idea," which they are making for F B O.

An unusually good photo of Marian Nixon, that reveals her delicacy of features. Her latest screen appearance is in "The Four Flusher." She has also been announced for "Thoroughbreds."

REFERRING again to the much-discussed subject of "presentations," and the attention it is getting in the newspapers:

Nelson B. Bell devoted an extensive double column comment to "presentations" in the Washington Post the other day. Mr. Bell built his remarks around the exclusive George Kleine interview printed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

AFTER quoting the Kleine interview, Mr. Bell continues: "With most of the statements which spring from Mr. Kleine's decades of active experience in the films we find it easily possible to agree. Especially that sapient paragraph which begins. 'The performances are entertainments of seeming popularity, but they are not motion picture shows.' The 'seemingly popularity' of the present type of program in the palaces of the cinema is the natural and invitable outgrowth on the part of the Wall Street banker gentlemen, to whom earlier reference has been made, that the legal rate be returned upon the loans they have made for the erection of the 'million dollar theatres,' so poignantly lamented by Mr. Kleine. Something had to be done.

"But 'million dollar theatre' in its modest understatement of the fact seems strangely out of tune with the other trenchant pronouncements of the seer who foresees the imminent collapse of the mighty structure of the movies. Many times a million dollars have found their way into the ornate temples of the shadow art these latter days. A million builds only a fair neighborhood house, serving the thrifty home bodies with second runs.

"And that leads to one of the prime elements in the readjustment of the present chaotic condition that is bound to come. There are extant amazing statistics to prove with what startling rapidity the small town theatres adjacent to trading centers easily accessible by automobile and bus are silently passing into the limbo of defunct and forgotten things. The final outcome, I believe, will be as predicted to this commentator last spring by Richard A. Roland, vice-president and general manager of First National: a few years from now there will be only half as many motion pictures houses as there are now, but they will all be twice as large, twice as beautiful and twice as enjoyable as the ones that will have been rendered hors de combat.

"Now as to the bursting of the giant celluloid bubble, we timorously prophesy that the explosion will not occur. Rather, there will be consummated a coalition of the powers controlling picture production, distribution and exhibition with those in command of the allied arts of the theatre, of which faint subterranean rumblings are even now beginning to manifest themselves to the alert and eager ear.

"There will be arrived at, perhaps not immediately, but before it is too late, a working agreement among those ruling the destinies of the various branches of the American theatre, whereby the old lines of demarcation again will be gently but effectually redrawn. Vaudeville once more will be vaudeville, operetta will be operetta, jazz bands will not be 'atmosphere' for pictures and tap dancers will not introduce the news reel.

"In the meantime, if it is possible to purchase the outstanding features of all these agreeable diversions rolled into one program bartered at a top price considerably under a dollar, why not do it? It never could be done before and perhaps never will be possible again."

ONE of the wisest of all the opinions given by members of the industry on this same much-mooted "presentation" problem comes from R. H. Cochrane, of Universal, as quoted in Film Daily.

"The average presentation is like a live wire—after you once get hold of it, it's darned hard to let go," said Mr. Cochrane. "Many a theatre operator today would willingly give up his last shirt if he could find a way to drop presentations gracefully. He is afraid to confess failure, so he goes on taking hard ones on the point of the chin week after week.

"Presentations are being overplayed, of course."

MR. COCHRANE continues: "Placing the feature second in importance is a good policy if it pays and a bad one if it doesn't. Local conditions govern this entirely.

"I believe that when a picture is good, the public prefers it to any other form of entertainment; but when it is weak, it is good business on the part of the exhibitor to bolster it up with whatever he can get.

"As for what means most at the box-office, that is not important. The important problem is: 'Which policy brings the most profit? A mixed policy might bring greater crowds, but if its cost eats up the profits, it is nothing short of asinine to pursue it. Today some of the theatres which are doing the greatest gross at the box-office are also showing the greatest amount of red ink in their statements. Extravagant presentations are the cause. Pride in doing a big gross and fear of admitting failure are damaging many a house today. If such theatres were operated solely on the basis of the best possible net profit, there would be smiles where now there are headaches."

BROADWAY theatregoers said "at last"—and meant it —when Charlie Chaplin's "The Circus" opened its current engagement at the Strand last Saturday. Managing Director Joseph Plunkett of the Strand we can well imagine as delivering himself of an equally fervent utterance of thanks that a long expected day had arrived and there was no need to scurry about and find "names" to put on a stage bill for purposes of bolstering the "draw." Equipped with a neatly contrived presentation—including a short prologue—which you don't know much about until after you get inside the theatre, "The Circus" with the name "Charles Chaplin" above it is keeping the ticket machines clicking—and how!

Chaplin, absent from the screen a long while, steps back into stride without sign or suggestion of rustiness in his work. Indeed, "The Circus" is a real "come back" in which the picturegoers are afforded a view of the Chaplin whom they know and like best—the superb clown, gifted with a marvelous sense of dramatic values and an eloquence in pantomime which has placed him in the shrine which is all his own in the theatre.

AT times, it is evident that what he has done in "The Circus" is to place in a new environment and reveal in a more finished and telling manner one of his most memorable former works—"The Tramp." A talent for clowning is substituted for musical gifts, and the gypsy wagon becomes a circus wagon. Such thoughts occur most strongly during the scenes between the tramp clown and the trapeze performer outside the latter's wagon home, and take form as a final impression when the closing scenes show Chaplin shuffling off away from the camera and the girl, whose love for a handsome circus trouper has reached a happy issue, thanks to the unselfish conniving of the tramp.

To one spectator, at least, "The Circus" is more successful in achieving an undercurrent of pathos than "The Gold Rush," for all the latter's self-conscious and obvious efforts in that direction. In "The Circus" Chaplin is less at pains to live up to a quality of artful seriousness in showing a poignant side—a quality which the commentators, who, by the way, discovered him long after the rank and file of the work-a-day people had, insisted was the secret of his art. The result is a delightful, sensitive, at times uproarious and always vital portrayal in which the delicate shades as well as the broad strokes —some of them are as broad as custard-pie tossing—have greater effectiveness, due to the fact that Chaplin is again Chaplin, following the instincts and notions of one better equipped artistically than the commentators—and that's Chaplin himself.

"THE CIRCUS" may not be another "The Kid," but 'twill serve most handsomely every end and purpose of the theatre manager and the theatre public.

In testimony of this we have the report from the Strand's management that "The Circus" has smashed the week-end record for that house held by "The Gold Rush." The figures for the first week end were announced as $36,735 in 19 shows. The Friday midnight premiere drew $5,600 with a $3.30 top. Saturday, January 7th, the day's receipts amounted to $15,750 and Sunday, January 8th, the take was $15,385.

A COMPARISON of the pictures of three nations running in the same city at the same time:

"Casanova," a French picture, ran ten weeks in Paris; "Ben Hur," an American picture, on December 17th was still running, at that time being in its thirty-sixth week; "Metropolis," a German picture, was also running at that time, being in its tenth week.

REPORTS from at least three sections of this country indicate that the older neighborhood theatres of medium seating capacity, those of ten or eleven hundred, face a situation today which may in the near future make them more suitable from an investment standpoint as garages or warehouses than for motion picture theatres. Reasons advanced for this older and somewhat antiquated type of house going into the "red" and eventually closing are that it is impossible for them to compete with the modern de luxe neighborhood and the big downtown theatres.

This week a report comes that from five to six medium sized houses in the lower East Side section of New York City are to be turned back to the landlords by a chain theatre operating company. Lack of trade is the largest contributing cause to this move although it will be recalled that the lower East Side has long said to have been overseated. Also it is said, in this case, that the owners will at least for the present continue to operate them as motion picture theatres. Because of the short trip from this section of the city to the Rialto it is an undisputed fact that the big Broadway houses, with their elaborate programs and different atmosphere, are drawing away a considerable amount of neighborhood trade.

TOO much competition, a lack of keeping up with the trend of times and being forced to accept subsequent runs are the reasons given for an eleven hundred seat theatre in a Pennsylvania key city going into the "red" each week. Here, also, the big downtown theatres are the ones reported to be getting the cream of the trade and the correspondent who sent this report ventures that "the same thing is going on in every metropolitan city in the country where at least one or more ten or eleven hundred seat houses—playing a fair quality of pictures attempt to compete with the big de luxe shows—and it can't be done."

A DIFFERENT phase of the neighborhood theatre situation exists in Cleveland where there is an exhibitor who has apparently solved his present trade problem.

A. E. Ptak, owner and manager of the Lyceum theatre, is one of the first exhibitors in Cleveland to abandon the combination vaudeville and motion picture program and go back to a straight picture policy. Ptak says the change has not hurt him in the least. In fact, he says, he has raised the standard of his shows by the change. The Lyceum is a neighborhood house. The type of vaudeville he can secure for this house, he says, is not on a par to the type of features he shows on the screen. So, on the whole, the vaudeville has lowered his standard of exhibition. The combination programs brought a rougher class of people to his house, he claims, than he is getting now by playing only high class screen attractions. The patrons he lost by the change, according to Ptak, he has gained in new patrons who want straight picture fare.

REVIEWERS of short subjects either affect or are of a cynical turn of mind and much inclined to be blase when they are viewing comedies "cold" in a projection room. It is a rare occurrence when a peep is heard from one of them as the pictures are being projected. It was most astounding, therefore, when at a showing last week of a trio of Roach-M-G-M comedies the usual silent projection room was in a continuous uproar. There were but a half dozen reviewers both male and female, in the room, but their laughs were as continuous and hearty as is heard from a whole theatreful at the usual comedy.

The pictures in question were all the product of Hal Roach, distributed through M-G-M and their titles are "Spook Spoofing," an Our Gang comedy; "All For Nothing," with Charley Chase as the star, and "Pass the Gravy," with Max Davidson.

Educational Acquires Vocafilm

Synchronization Device Will Be Placed on Market Through Company Exchanges in Near Future

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and David R. Hochreich, president of the Vocafilm Corporation of America, have issued a joint announcement that Educational has acquired the rights to Vocafilm, a device for the synchronization of pictures and sound. Marketing of the machine and product will begin through the Educational exchanges in the near future.

Vocafilm was developed under license of a number of patents issued in 1924 and perfected by a staff including some of the best known technical experts in America. Its sponsors claim, among its other attractions, that it is fool-proof, remarkably simple in its handling, and that its price will be well within the reach of every exhibitor. It is claimed that not only will the original cost of Vocafilm be the lowest of any similar device on the market, but that the cost of upkeep will be so low as to be practically negligible. No charges are to be made for regular servicing of the Vocafilm apparatus, and no seat tax or added fees of any description are involved.

Details of Educational's schedule of releases in connection with Vocafilm will be made known probably within the next couple of weeks. Special Vocafilm acts and musical numbers will be released on a regular schedule, and it is likely, also, that within a very short time a number of Educational's comedy and novelty short features will carry Vocafilm accompaniments.

Although the Vocafilm accompaniments will be confined to Educational pictures in the short feature field, they will be available to producers of full feature length subjects. In fact, Vocafilm records are now in preparation in connection with some popular current features.

E. W. Hammons

Vocafilm embraces the use of the standard motion picture projection machine, and of standard motion picture film, together with a sound record, the mechanism controlling the sound record being attached to the projection machine with a simple device, both being so adjusted mechanically that the picture is shown and the sound reproduced in perfect synchronization. The sound is then passed through amplifiers and to a loud speaker in front of the screen. The entire apparatus can be installed quickly and easily, and one day of instruction and operation is said to be enough to enable any motion picture operator to handle it with ease. According to the announcement, no special technical service or extra service of any kind is required in the booth.

In discussing Vocafilm, President Hammons of Educational said:

"The smallest as well as the largest theatres in the land may now offer their patrons music and sound synchronized with pictures. All plans have been completed for the easy and rapid installation of Vocafilm in theatres of all sizes and types, at a most reasonable price and on terms acceptable to any theatre owner.

"The low initial cost of Vocafilm, the simplicity and low cost of operation and maintenance, and the many protective devices employed to prevent any interruption to the program, together with the perfect harmony between pictures and sound and the tone quality attained, are outstanding features of Vocafilm. In quality of tone and simplicity of operation, we believe Vocafilm will be a revelation to the industry, while the low cost is certain to prove a big surprise to every exhibitor. We have made the cost so low that thousands of theatres everywhere will now be able to capitalize on the public's demand for synchronized pictures and sound without raising the regular admission price.

"The entire situation is so reasonable and practical that it is certain to mean the installation of Vocafilm in innumerable theatres during the next year or two. Terms of payment will be most reasonable. There will be no service or maintenance charge of any nature. And no expert technicians are required for Vocafilm, the regular theatre operator being entirely sufficient.

"Production arrangements have been perfected and the producers are now in a position to supply the Vocafilm outfits without limit as to numbers. A completely equipped studio will permit the continuation of production of pictures and picture 'acts' on a regular schedule. An unusually competent staff of engineers and technicians are handling the technical side of Vocafilm."

Vitaphone Will Make Playlets

Stars Are Signed for Speaking Parts in Stories That Will Be Presented on Theatre Screens

AN entirely new departure for Vitaphone is announced by officials of that company in that they have signed up a host of film stars and other attractions that will appear regularly in a number of spoken playlets for reproduction on the screens of motion picture houses. This innovation, it is predicted by executives of Vitaphone, will revolutionize the screen industry.

Among the well known stars and featured players who have signed Vitaphone contracts and will be both seen and heard on the screen through the synchronization device are: Bessie Love, Irene Rich, May McAvoy, Hobart Bosworth, Conrad Nagel, Clyde Cook, Montague Love, John Miljan, Mitchell Lewis and Rin-Tin-Tin.

In addition to the foregoing it was also announced that the Florentine Choir, the Notre Dame Glee Club and Abe Lyman's Band had been placed under contract to make Vitaphone appearances.

The new playlets will give many of the motion picture stars their first opportunity to prove that they can speak lines as well as they can act for the screen. A dramatic playlet is now being prepared for Bessie Love, and she will start work in it in the immediate future. She welcomes the opportunity to reveal her talent in the spoken drama.

Hobart Bosworth has long been noted as an interpreter of roles intensely dramatic. In the Vitaphone presentation he will have the leading role in a one-act play titled, "A Man of Peace," by Joseph Jackson. He will be directed by Bryan Foy.

Four featured players of the Warner Bros. company—Irene Rich, May McAvoy, Conrad Nagel and John Miljan—will make their debut in the new art. Irene Rich will be seen in a playlet of great power, and critics who witnessed the preview of "The Beast" declared she had exceeded their fondest expectations. The playlet was written by Barry Townley, who is a member of the cast. The star will also be supported by John Miljan.

Receivers Appointed for Aschers Theatres in Chicago

THE Chicago Title and Trust Company and General Abel Davis have been appointed receivers for Aschers Theatrical Enterprises of Chicago, Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson having issued the order on January 9th. Liabilities were stated to amount to $3,500,000. Attorneys reported to the Court that the assets of Aschers Theatrical Enterprises exceeded the liabilities, but were frozen, the concern being unable to meet its obligations in cash.

The bill asking for the receivership was filed by attorneys acting on behalf of Miss R. A. Davis, who, it is alleged, owned $20,000 worth of stock in the company. The theatres owned, operated or leased by Aschers at the time the receivership was ordered, include the Portage, Park, Terminal, Sheridan, Commercial, Midwest, and Crown, and the Merrill building in Milwaukee.

Aschers Theatrical Enterprises was one of the largest and oldest motion picture theatre operating companies of Chicago and at one time not only controlled a string of seventeen theatres in Chicago but had theatres in Cincinnati, Dayton, Milwaukee and Peoria and other cities. The out-of-town theatres were disposed of sometime ago, and within the past year and a half the majority of their Chicago theatres were disposed of, bringing the number operated down to six.

Three weeks ago it was reported that Fox Film Corporation, which for the past two years had a large investment in Aschers Enterprises, had taken over control of the firm and that the Fox interests had elected Clyde Eckhardt as president of Aschers Enterprises, Nathan Ascher remaining with the company as treasurer. While the news of the receivership comes as a surprise to Chicago film and theatre men it has been a matter of rumor that many of the Aschers theatres have been losing ventures for several years past and that the firm faced financial difficulties.

Exhibitor Bodies Back Brookart Bill

State Theatre Owners Call Special Meetings for Discussion of Measure

INDEPENDENT exhibitor organizations in all parts of the United States are rallying to the support of the Brookhart measure, recently introduced in Congress, which would make illegal block and blind booking and the arbitrary allocation of product. Meetings of the different organizations have been called for discussion of the measure and to decide upon definite steps to be taken.

The Cleveland Motion Picture exhibitors Association held a special meeting of the entire body on Thursday, January 5th, at which time the Brookhart Bill was unanimously approved. This bill was discussed in detail by the officers and members of the organization. All members were urged to write letters to their Senators and Congressmen endorsing the bill. They also agreed to run a trailer on their screens acquainting the public with the nature of the bill, its importance to the independent theatre owner, and its significance to the movie-going public.

William M. James, president of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, and P. J. Wood, state secretary, attended the meeting. They called a meeting of the executive board of the state organization for further discussion of the Brookhart Bill.

Luncheon was served in the association headquarters to a large gathering of exhibitors, following which came the business

From Minneapolis comes the word that the bill would be up for consideration before a meeting of the Twin City members of the Northwest exhibitor organization. The board of directors of the association is composed largely of Twin City members, and their action would be sufficient to put through any kind of resolution they might deem advisable. A canvass of several members of the board indicated favorable action on the measure and the appointment of a special committee to organize a systematic campaign for the passage of the bill.

The Ohio exhibitors also called a meeting for late this week for discussion of the matter and to make recommendations both on the Brookhart Bill and for proposed amendments to the standard exhibition contract.

Exhibitors Defy Blues and Open on Sunday

Again opening their theatres shortly after noon and submitting to arrest a few minutes later for running their houses on a Sunday, George Chrest, Roscoe Spidell and A. F. Allman, exhibitors at Dover, Ohio, continued early this week to be the chief figures in the blue law battle that has been raging in Dover for several months. The three exhibitors furnished bonds of appearance before Mayor P. J. Groh and continued showing pictures. This is a repetition of what has happened for five successive Sundays.

Mayor Groh is apparently in favor of motion pictures on Sunday, but was unsuccessful several weeks ago in effecting a compromise with the blues, who are led principally by church leaders. The latest move of the anto-movie forces was to hale the exhibitors before a Justice of the Peace on the charge of being habitual offenders. Hearings of these cases are to be conducted soon.

Texas Towns Launch Drive Against Blues

Temple, Texas, has launched a campaign for the Sunday show, a majority of the townsmen endorsing the movement and patronising the showings. One of the leading churches strongly opposes the drive, voicing its resolution of protest in the form of a paid ad in the Temple paper.

The Dent Theatres, meanwhile, continues to open a number of its houses on a Sunday and the East Texas theatres continue to be successful in operating on the Sabbath in the towns of Lufkin and Nacogdoches. East Texas has been running Sunday shows for years in Orange, Beaumont and Port Arthur.

Judge Permits Theatre Firm to Appeal Decision

Federal Judge William A. Cant, Minneapolis, this week granted a stay to February 10 to the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate to permit an appeal being taken from his recent decision. This decision required the theatre concern to relinquish several hundred dollars to stockholders of the Miles Theatre Co., formerly operators of the New Garrick theatre. Pierce Butler, Jr., council for the concern, will prepare an appeal to the United States district court asking for a reversal of the Cant decision.

Tiffany-Stahl Entering Theatre Field, Rumor

A WELL-FOUNDED rumor is to the effect that Tiffany-Stahl Productions, Inc., is to enter the theatre field in this territory, with the operation of their own houses. It is said that Tiffany-Stahl is behind the expansion policy announced recently by the Washington Theatre Enterprises, Inc., who not so long ago stated that they will erect two large theatres in Portland, as well as in Vancouver, B. C., Denver and Salt Lake City. The Washington Theatre Enterprises, are at present erecting a large first-run house in Seattle, scheduled for early February opening, as well as one in Astoria, Ore., which will throw its doors open around the middle of January.

Tiffany is linked with this concern, inasmuch as the theatre outfit, has purchased the entire block of pictures for their houses, as well as giving the picture concern, the break on all future bookings. The same report also intimates that Harry C. Arthur, Jr., now general manager of the Southern Division for West Coast Theatres, Inc., is to be in charge of all Tiffany's theatre's interests.

No comment was obtained at the Tiffany-Stahl office in New York as to the truth of the rumor.

Copyright Bill Again Introduced in Congress

THE copyright legislation which was before Congress last session was reintroduced in the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., January 9 by Congressman Vestal of Indiana, and has been referred to the committee on patents, before which long hearings were held last year.

The bill defines copyright as the exclusive right to copy, print, publish, produce, reproduce, perform, render, exhibit or transmit the copyright work in any form, by any means, including the making of motion pictures, or to broadcast or perform publicly such work. Under the bill copyright would be for the life of the author, if living, and for a period of 50 years after his death, in the case of an individual, and where not an individual, for a period of 50 years.

Infringers of copyright would be subject to injunction restraining the infringement and payment of such damages to the copyright owner as he may have suffered or, at the option of the copyright owner, such statutory damages as the court may require but in such case not to exceed $5,000, at rates set forth in the bill, which, in the case of an unaware infringement of an undramatized or nondramatic work by motion pictures, shall not exceed $100 and, in the case of unaware infringement of dramatic work shall be not less than $250 nor more than $5,000.

Robs Manager and Safe of Winnipeg House

Two bandits held up George F. Law, the manager of the Winnipeg Theatre, one of Universal Films' theatres in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and at the point of their revolvers got away with over $1,000 in cash belonging to the theatre, also securing $100 and jewelry from Law, who was bound and gagged during the operation. The robbery took place while the theatre was crowded for a performance, the thieves successfully making their exit.

Other recent theatre robberies in Canada include the hold-up of James Adams, manager of Loew's Theatre, Montreal, who was robbed of $7,000; the robbery of the box office of the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, where over $800 were obtained; the robbing of Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Garfield at the Rialto Theatre, Montreal, the thefts from the Laurier and Capitol theatres in Hull, Quebec, and the Alhambra in Toronto.

Six New Suburban Houses for Toronto

Building reports for 1927 in Canada indicate that there was considerable theatre construction. A report issued by the City Architect's office at Toronto, Ontario, can be taken as an example of this activity in numerous Canadian cities and towns. This shows that six handsome suburban theatres were erected in Toronto during the past year, the aggregate cost, exclusive of sites, being $271,000. Permits were issued for extensive alterations at 10 Toronto theatres during 1927, the operations costing $21,325 all told.

During the year one large Toronto house was permanently closed, this being the Grand Theatre.

No Merger Plans by West Coast Franklin Says

Says Development of Circuit as is Will Engage Full Attention of His Organization

NO merger of the Stanley Company's and West Coast's theatre interests is being considered by officials of the latter company, Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager, who arrived in New York this week, declared in a statement to MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Mr. Franklin was equally emphatic in disposing of other rumors which persistently have mentioned West Coast in connection with consolidations when he said that West Coast has determined to confine its development to the territories in which it already operates, stating that that was sufficiently far flung at present to engage the executive and administrative resources of a huge organization.

His visit to New York, which was the basis for more rumors regarding mergers, Mr. Franklin said, had no purpose beyond that of a periodical trip such as he has previously made and will make from time to time again. He stopped over in Chicago, he said, to look over matters concerning the recent acquisition by West Coast of the Saxe theatres in Milwaukee and other Wisconsin towns.

This latter group of theatres will be operated as a subsidiary to be known as Midwesco Theatres.

No plans now under consideration, Franklin stated, are concerned with further acquisitions by West Coast through mergers or consolidations. "We have considered the various factors involved," he said, "and have decided to direct our entire energies and resources toward the development of our circuit as presently constituted. There will be no merger with Stanley as far as West Coast is concerned. Our field of operations is now so wide that there is a huge undertaking ahead for us to realize a growth and development of our present operations, which, in itself, will represent an expansion of large proportions. Theatre operation is an enterprise requiring a close contact between the various branches of a circuit organization, and on that account it is within the possibilities even for a large organization to over-extend its activities by large and rapid increase of the territory it covers."

Jefferson in Hamilton, O., Destroyed by Fire

The Jefferson Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, was totally destroyed by fire during the past week. The fire occurred at 6:30 A. M. following an explosion believed to have originated in the boiler room. When the fire men arrived the building was a mass of seething flames and beyond the possibility of redemption. The fire men confined their efforts to saving neighboring structures. The loss, partially covered by insurance, is estimated at $225,000.

The Jefferson was built in 1903 with funds raised by popular subscription and was known as a community theatre. Upon the installation of Tom A. Smith, now dead, as manager, the house became known as Smith's Theatre, under which name it operated until in 1924 it was acquired by the Jewel Photoplay Company, and given back its former name as the result of a popular vote.

President Schwalm of the Jewel Photoplay Company has announced that a new theatre will be constructed on the site.

Chicago Labor Trouble Settled by New Wage Agreement

A NEW wage and working agreement was entered into between the exhibitors association of Chicago and the Chicago moving picture operators on Tuesday afternoon. Following a long series of conferences, participated in by President Jack Miller, Ludwig Seigel, Frank Schaefer, John Schoenstadt, J. Coston, Louis Marks, Joseph Pastor and Aaron Saperstein, representing the exhibitors on the one hand, and Tom Reynolds and Tom Maloy, representing the operators on the other.

The new contract covers a two-year period and provides for a five per cent increase effective immediately, and a second similar increase which will become effective January 11th, 1929.

The demand as presented by union officials when the conference started included a 25 per cent wage increase and a six-day week with seven days' pay. The second demand was soon withdrawn but the conferees were deadlocked several days over the matter of wage increase.

The Chicago moving picture operators union, one of the strongest organizations of its kind in the country, already had one of the highest wage scales, the minimum pay for an operator being $62.50 per week and running as high as $135 for operators in some of the larger de luxe houses.

The signing of a two-year agreement is looked upon favorably by exhibitors, as it assures uninterrupted operation of their theatres for that period as far as the operators are concerned.

Censorship Repeal Bill Looms For Session At Albany

THE repeal of motion picture censorship looms as one of the big controversial issues that will characterize the present session of the New York State Legislature. Maurice Bloch, of New York city, Democratic leader in the lower house, announced this week that a censorship repeal bill will be introduced at once, probably by Assemblyman Louis Cuvillier, of New York City, one of the old timers in the Legislature and well versed in adroit methods.

The bill will be practically identical with the Hackenburg measure of a year ago and will call for the repeal of the present law on July 1 next, with either the Secretary of State or the State Comptroller design-Conference, have made the following joint announcement:

The announcement made by Mr. Bloch came as a complete surprise to the State Capitol. Owing to the fact that previous attempts toward repealing the obnoxious law have met with defeat and also due to the fact that of late the exhibitors of New York state had shown little apparent interest in any repeal measures, it was generally expected that the present session would pass without any move along repeal lines.

The annual message of Governor Alfred E. Smith, however, changed the attitude somewhat, calling for the repeal of censorship as it did, and this no doubt added impetus to Mr. Bloch's desires.

Kinegraphone Is Ready for Marketing

First Step of Electric and Radio Companies in F B O Deal Ready to be Launched

THE new combination by which the General Electric Company, the Radio Corporation of America and Westinghouse Electric Company purchased an interest in F B O will take as its first step the marketing of the Kinegraphone, the talking film device developed by engineers of the General Electric Company.

The Kinegraphone is announced as completed and ready for the market. It is claimed that the machine has been perfected to a high state of efficiency and that it is set now for the production of talking motion pictures. The F B O producers are expected to begin an immediate study of the new process so that no time will be lost on getting the product of the company on the screens of the motion pictures and elsewhere that the device is to be disposed of.

The new machine is operated on principles similar to Movietone and Phonofilm. It was successfully demonstrated on October 21st at West Orange, when Thomas A. Edison heard and saw himself delivering an interview.

The new process, like others of the type, necessitates but slight changes in standard projectors, since it involves only the addition of a sound-reproducing attachment and a loud speaker suitable for auditorium use. Both the picture and the sound are recorded on the same film, the film being of standard width.

Along the left margin of the film is a strip, a small fraction of an inch wide, on which is a serrated pattern which corresponds to the frequencies and intensities of the sounds recorded. It is this pattern which produces the sound. The film is passed through the reproducer at constant speed, and as this sound record passes rapidly before a tiny slit in an optical system, the amount of light is varied. The ever-changing amount of light is received by a photo-electric cell—the electric eye—which is extremely sensitive to any change in the amount of light striking it. The more light received, the more current it will permit to pass through its circuit. This current is amplified and changed from electrical to audible energy by an amplifier and speaker.

To project the pictures, synchronized with sound, a standard projection is used. Since the picture and sound records are printed side by side on the film, it follows that the two must be properly timed or synchronized, at all times—it is not possible for the picture to break and the sound to continue, or for the sound to stop and the picture to continue. There are three principal elements in the apparatus, including a standard picture camera, a sound recorder and a standard projector with a sound reproducing attachment, all driven by synchronous motors. The pictures themselves are made in the usual way on standard film.

National Board of Review Dinner on January 28

The National Board of Review will hold its annual luncheon at the Woldorf Astoria Hotel in New York on January 28th. A two days' conference, to precede the affair, will be attended by delegates from the better films groups and motion picture study clubs from over 25 states, besides representatives from national organizations, including state chairmen of Motion Pictures of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and Better Films Chairmen of the Daughters of the American Revolution. A number of addresses will feature the conference, the main topic to be discussed to concern the understanding and interpretation of films according to present day standards.

Among the speakers will be Dr. Walter Pettit, New York School of Social Work; Professor Leroy E. Bowman, Columbia University; Dr. John Herman Randall, World Unity Magazine; Clarence E. Perry, Russell Sage Foundation; Dr. Joseph J. Weber, Eastman Kodak Co.; Dr. J. F. Montague, Bellevue Hospital; Alexander Bakhy, author of "Problems of the Artistic Cinema"; James O. Spearing, former motion picture critic of the New York Times; Frederick Wynney-Jones, of Ufa; and Mrs. Florence Strauss, scenario editor of First National.

Texas M. P. T. O. Will Fight Tent Shows

The M. P. T. O. of Texas will hold the first of its sectional meetings at Longview under the auspices of the East Texas Chamber of Commerce. One of the chief topics that will be discussed will be the evil of the tent show, which the East Texas Chamber of Commerce has been endeavoring to stamp out.

All theatre owners have been asked to bring with them to the meeting the secretary or manager of his local chamber of commerce so that the support of business men can be enlisted in the campaign against the tent shows.

Freihofer Will Build 5 New Frankford Houses

As an outgrowth of the Stanley Company's invasion of Frankford, Pa., which has been the stronghold of William Freihofer, who operates an important chain of theatres in the city, Mr. Freihofer has made known his intention to build five new houses throughout the city, the first of which will be in the 6700 block on North Broad Street, a site which he has held for some years. This theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,500. Plans have been drawn by Hodgens and Hill. Other reported locations for theatres are in West and South Philadelphia.

Pictures and Drama at Greenwich Village

MOTION Pictures will provide one of the units of leading importance on programs to be presented under a new application of the Little Theatre Movement at the Greenwich Village Theatre on Sheridan Square, New York. It will be run on a subscription basis.

Announcement of this movement was made last Wednesday by N. Brewster Morse, lessee and manager, and Douglas Wood, the general director. The Greenwich Village, formerly devoted to dramatic offerings, is being remodeled and redecorated and is to reopen February 12. It is the purpose of the sponsors of the movement to offer features of music, short dramatic works and motion pictures. The musical programs will be arranged by W. Franke Harling, composer of "Deep River" and other musical works, and there are to be exhibits of paintings and sculpture arranged by Mrs. Marie Sterner. The art exhibits will be made in the lounge of the theatre.

300,000 Film Shares to Reach Market Soon

WITH a public offering of a new issue of 300,000 shares of $2 cumulative participating preferred stock underwritten by Hornblower and Weeks, Cassatt and Company of Philadelphia and Dominick and Dominick, financing by the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., is expected to reach the market soon.

Consolidated Film Industries Inc., was organized by Delaware to succeed a company of the same name incorporated in 1924 for the developing of motion-picture negatives and printing and delivering positives as instructed by the motion picture producer and distributor.

The company is the largest purchaser of motion-picture film in the world and operates six plants, in New York, New Jersey and California. It does laboratory work for the First National, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists, International News Reel, Paramount-Famous-Lasky and many other producing companies.

Management and control of the new company will continue in the hands of those responsible for its present position in the industry. The sales of the predecessor company for the first ten months of 1927 aggregated $6,441,775, against a total of $7,641,879 for the full year 1926.

Ned Marin Goes to Coast as Unit Manager

Ned Marin, for almost a year assistant to Richard A. Rowland, general and production manager of First National, left for the Coast last week to become manager of a production unit. The new assignment was announced at a farewell luncheon given last Thursday in Mr. Marin's honor at the Hotel Roosevelt.

At the luncheon, Clifford B. Hawley, president, spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Marin as did Mr. Rowland, Ned Depinet, Samuel Spring, Tom Spry and others of his associates at the New York office. Among others who attended the luncheon were: A. W. Smith, Jr., W. E. Callaway, H. W. Adams, Jerome Beatty, C. F. Chandler, William P. Mullen, Mrs. Florence Strauss, Miss Julie Pocock, H. A. Bandy, Ralph W. Brown, S. Charles Einfeld, Walter Eberhardt, J. Loeb, A. Barlow, Walter Lindlar, Charles Kemke, Charles Baily, Joe Kelly, S. Shernow, C. C. Daneny, Lynde Denig, James Cunniff and Jules Levy.

Theatre Building Laws of Reading More Drastic

Regulations for building or altering thetres in Reading, Penn., will be more drastic under the terms of a city ordinance which became effective December 24. These new regulations are part of a new building code the city has adopted, four newspaper columns of which are devoted to theatres. Embodied in the rules for theatres are the requirements for motion picture booths that are contained in the regulations recently promulgated by the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry. It is thought probable that the Reading ordinance will be adopted as a model that other cities of Pennsylvania will follow.

Wall Street Grows As Factor in Industry

Important Transactions of Past Year Indicate New Trend of Banking Interests

THE closing of 1927 showed Wall Street to be becoming more and more a factor in the motion picture industry. A number of outstanding events along financial lines during the year revealed a close contact between the large financial institutions and leading companies in the picture industry.

Among the important events enumerated was the election of Clifford B. Hawley to the presidency of First National. Mr. Hawley is a partner of Edward B. Smith and Company. He, with Joseph P. Kennedy, president of F B O, are powers in the financial district and their influence is bound to react to the benefit of the companies.

Wall Street interests also participated in the recapitalization of Pathe Exchange, through Blair & Company and other bankers. Pathe's position in the distribution field was materially strengthened by this close tieup with the Keith and Orpheum circuits.

Prominent Wall street figures, together with London and Canadian banking groups, were also prominently identified with the recent alignment of First National and British film interests, which will have a material effect on the foreign market.

A syndicate headed by Dillon, Read & Company was responsible for the sale of 150,000 shares of Loew's theatre chain, which made possible the expansion of that company. A number of other companies, including the Stanley Company of America, financed expansion programs by the offering of additional stock to their shareholders, with such offerings underwritten by their bankers.

Banking interests also arranged for the financing of many other projects advanced by leading producing, distributing and exhibitor organizations. Among those that might be mentioned were the sale of Paramount Famous Players bonds, Universal Pictures bonds, bonds of the Roxy Theatre, United Artists Theatre Circuit stock and Saenger Theatre bonds.

These leading transactions are recorded as follows: Para-Famous Players, $16,000,000 6 per cent bonds; Loew's, $15,000,000 preferred stock; B. F. Keith Corp., $10,000,000 preferred stock; Universal Pictures, $2,500,000 6 per cent bonds; Fox Detroit Theatre building, $6,400,000 6 per cent bonds; Roxy Theatre, $2,500,000 6½ per cent bonds; Pathe Exchange, $6,000,000 7 per cent bonds; U. A. Theatre Circuit, $1,500,000 common stock; Saenger Theatres, $800,000 6½ per cent bonds.

Capital Carolina Theatres, Inc., Will Be Increased

The recently completed reorganization of the Carolina Theatre, Inc., Charlotte, will be followed soon by increasing the outstanding capital from $300,000 to $500,000, according to an announcement last week from F. J. Turner, of Charlotte, general manager and brother of E. D. Turner who recently resigned as president of the company and now is considering organizing another chain of theatres. J. I. Thompson, of Pittsburgh, a financier, succeeds Mr. Turner as president of the company.

Ground now is being cleared at Lincolnton for the construction of a new $100,000 theatre, the next project in this company's program of expansion, said Mr. Turner.

Arch Selwyn Plans Motion Picture Chain for Continent

ARCH SELWYN has completed plans whereby he, with other interests, will erect a new chain of motion picture houses on the Continent. He plans cinema palaces in twelve key cities in England and one in Paris. Selwyn, in association with Charles B. Cochran, had already announced the proposed building of the largest motion picture theatre in the world in London.

George B. McClellan and Amery Parkes are associated with Selwyn in the theatres to be built in England and Paris. Both are well known in the British metropolis, Parkes being a leading solicitor who has figured prominently in handling the financial details of all big cinema deals in Great Britain.

The new corporation directed by Selwyn has already purchased theatres in twelve British cities. These are now being used as music halls and, according to plans, will be torn down to make way for the chain of modern motion picture theatres. The sites occupied by the music halls, according to Selwyn, are the most important theatrical locations in Great Britain. They are in Leeds, Liverpool, Newcastle, Brighton, Southampton, Dublin, Glasgow, Manchester, Golders Green, Dover and Blackpool. The Paris house will be located on the site of the Alhambra Theatre on the Boulevard Italian.

Milwaukee Theatre Projects for Year Total $7,000,000

A SURVEY of projected theatres in Milwaukee during 1927 shows an amount of approximately $7,000,000 involved. This includes sixteen theatres with a combined seating capacity of 18,200. But one of these houses is in the downtown district, the others being neighborhood houses. The one downtown house is the Majestic, a junior Orpheum theatre.

Three of the houses were of the Saxe circuit, now operated by Midwesco. They represent an investment of $2,750,000. The Milwaukee Theatre Circuit added one house to its chain and another is contemplated.

The balance of the houses were outside of the chain interests and some of them were only remodeled or enlarged. In addition to the foregoing other houses involving an expenditure of between $1,500,000 and $2,000,000 were projected during the year but have not yet materialized.

New St. Louis Theatres

Two Large Houses Are Rumored Contemplated for the Orpheum and Skouras Interests

TWO additional large motion picture theatres are contemplated for St. Louis, according to reports emanating from that city. The rumor is to the effect that they are to be projected in the interests of Skouras Enterprises and the Orpheum-Keith and Albee circuits. A definite announcement regarding them is anticipated within the next two or three weeks.

One site that has focused attention with regard to the new houses is the northwest corner of Ninth and Locust streets, which is now occupied by the Board of Education office building. This corner is said to be under consideration by the Skouras Enterprises for a towering hotel and theatre project. The site is regarded as essentially ideal for a structure of that type. It is one block south of the Statler Hotel, and but two blocks west of Skouras Brothers' Ambassador Theatre.

Plans are also expected to materialize shortly for a new theatre with a seating capacity of from 4,000 to 5,000 seats for the recently merged Orpheum-Keith and Albee interests. In this connection several sites along Washington Avenue have been considered. The promoters of this project have also considered the Board of Education building site.

Local interests plan to erect the theatre, probably in conjunction with a large hotel, and would lease the theatre to the Orpheum-Keith and Albee combination for a motion picture and vaudeville show.

While confirmation is lacking, it is understood in inner realty circles that the Orpheum organization had secured an option on the key ground to a prominent Washington Avenue corner as the first step toward assembling a site for the theatre project.

With William Fox' 5,000-seat at Grand and Washington boulevard now under construction St. Louis will have plenty of theatre seats to fill under the circumstances, and an additional 8,000 to $10,000 seats in the down-town district will cause more than one motion picture and theatrical man a few gray hairs.

Far East Fund Refused

House Appropriations Committee Kill Proposal for Special Motion Picture Representative

CRITICISING the efforts of individual industries to secure the appointment in the Department of Commerce of special commodity trade commissioners, the House appropriations committee last week, in presenting its report on the department's money bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1, next, refused to include specifically a fund for the motion picture trade commissioner in the Far East, for which an appeal was made when the bill was under consideration by Burt New, Washington representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The general personnel of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is so organized as to do this work without the appointment of specialists, it was suggested by the committee. "The committee," it was declared in the report, "is of the opinion that it is not within the fundamental idea of the scope of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to single out any specific commodity for any set or group of manufacturers and direct its attention to it, but, rather, to carry out the intent of the law laying down the powers and duties of the department 'to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce * * * of the United States,' and not a particular commodity, section or locality. Consequently, it has not included in the bill any amount covering the numerous requests for such types of foreign trade representatives."

While the committee refused specifically to sanction the proposal for a film trade commissioner, the funds for the bureau were materially increased over the present appropriation, and it is probable, if no specific reference to the matter is inserted in the bill by amendment before its adoption, that the officials of the bureau, in allocating the increase to various activities, will make provision for protection of the American film industry in the Far East, particularly as American films have been found to be powerful propaganda for the sale of other American commodities in every country where they have been shown.

Montreal Tax Revenue Indicates Increase

The civic administration of Montreal, Quebec, received revenue amounting to $813,979 from the civic amusement tax during the 12 months of 1927, this total being an increase of $33,744 over the previous year, according to the official figures announced by Alfred Bienvenu, director of licenses. The amusement tax returns for 1927 were greater than those of 1925, two years ago, by $141,787.

The increase during the past year was more or less of a surprise because of Public Buildings Safety Commission had closed 12 local moving picture houses following the Laurier Palace Theatre disaster in January, 1927. Seven of these theatres were refused licenses forever while five others wer permitted to reopen after extensive alterations. Attendance at all Montreal theatres was visibly affected after the fire but conditions returned to normal quickly.

New York Establishing Motion Picture Library

The New York Public Library is establishing, through the cooperation of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., a motion picture library which, it is said, will be of interest to the public and the theatrical world as well.

The library has already in use almost every book that deals with the movies. One feature of the library will be the filing away in permanent form of press books, publicity stills and advertising matter of the important photoplays that are being made or have been made recently. An effort is being made to salvage as much as possible of the press books and advertising material of early pictures that won some distinction.

M-G-M Shorts Will Be Broadcasted to Blind

STATION WPAP on January 18 will inaugurate the broadcasting of motion pictures for the blind. The radio station recently relayed the music of "Love" over the air from the Embassy Theatre in New York. From 5 to 6 P. M. a program especially chosen for the children at the Catholic Institute for the Blind in the Bronx, New York, will be described by N. T. Granlund, radio announcer, as it is unreeled on a screen in the Loew building. The program will consists of "The Flag," a two-reel Technicolor film, and "The Old Wallop," an "Our Gang" comedy.

The children at the Institute for the Blind will be gathered together in one room before a loud speaker and the broadcasting will be accepted by the school authorities as in the nature of a classroom exercise. It is hoped to make a program of this type a weekly feature of WPAP.

John J. McGuirk, President of the Stanley Co. of America

Typhoid Kills Universal's Cuban Manager

Following an illness of 60 days, Roque Carramiana, Cuban manager for Universal Pictures Corporation, died January 6 from typhoid fever. He was 36 years old and leaves a wife and small son.

Carramiana was born in Chile. He joined the Laemmle forces in July, 1926, in Brazil, where he had been a salesman. After a period of training in the film business in Universal's Brazilian exchange system he was transferred to Porto Rico as assistant manager. Last April he went to Cuba as acting manager, soon becoming full-fledged manager.

Last December Jack Hayes, former Universal manager in Mexico, assumed Carramiana's place. He remains there for the present.

Milder New Central Sales Manager for Warners

The new post of Central Sales Manager for Warner Bros. has been assumed by Max Milder, who will make his headquarters at the home office. He has been associated with motion picture activities for 20 years, his connections having included General Films, Fox, Selznick and others. Before joining Warner Bros. he was film purchaser for the Schine Enterprises.

Mr. Milder will have Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Pittsburgh and St. Louis under his supervision.

Swanson Film Premiered at Washington Theatre

United Artists' release, "Sadie Thompson," which is Gloria Swanson's second independent production for the company, had its premiere last Sunday, January 8, at the Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C.

It will come to the United Artists-Rivoli Theatre in New York, according to United Artists, in the first week of February.

Prospective Stars Named

Jesse Lasky Selects Eleven Paramount Players Who May Shine During Coming Year

JESSE L. LASKY has named the Paramount stars of to-morrow for the year 1928. They are eleven in number and include five girls and six young men who will be given every opportunity during the coming year to achieve greater success than was theirs during the past year.

The eleven favored ones are, Ruth Taylor, Louise Brooks, Nancy Carroll, who will divide her time with Fox; Mary Brian, Fay Wray, Gary Cooper, James Hall, Richard Arlen, Charles Rogers, Lane Chandler and Jack Luden.

Ruth Taylor is the Lorelei Lee of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Following a personal appearance tour with this picture she will be co-featured with Louise Brooks in a series of gold-digger comedies.

Nancy Carroll is at present working in the production of Anne Nichols' "Abie's Irish Rose." Mary Brian has been appearing in featured roles in Paramount pictures for the past two years. She is now being seen to advantage in "Two Flaming Youths," the W. F. Fields-Chester Conklin comedy. Fay Wray has also figured with more or less prominence in a number of Paramount productions. She has a featured role in "The Legion of the Condemned," which is now in production.

Gary Cooper has appeared as one of the new team of "glorious young lovers," the other member of which is Miss Wray. James Hall has been seen in support of many of Paramount's most popular stars. Richard Arlen and Charles Rogers both gained some fame in the production of "Wings" and much is expected of them during the coming season. Lane Chandler and Jack Luden have achieved considerable prominence through their excellent work in a number of Paramount's 1927-28 pictures.

McGuirk Rumor Denied

Stanley Company Emphatic With Statement President Will Not Tender Resignation

AN article published in a regional trade paper to the effect that John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company of America, would possibly step out of his position at the annual meeting of the stockholders to be held in July has aroused the ire and called forth an emphatic denial by the officers of the company.

The falling quotations of the Stanley Company stock on the Philadelphia Exchange resulted in rumors to the effect that there was some dissension among the officers and directorate of the company. Irving D. Rossheim, who is the present treasurer of the company, Morris Wolf, a prominent attorney and counsel for the Stanley Company, and its secretary, together with Judge Horace Stern, of the Common Pleas Court, have been mentioned as probable successors to McGuirk.

Members of the Board of Directors have taken occasion to make a statement to the effect that Mr. McGuirk will unquestionably continue the office of president and that any rumors or statements to the contrary are ill founded and absolutely unauthorized. Mr. Rossheim made a statement to the Philadelphia press emphatically denying that there was any probability of a change in the personnel of officers.

McGuirk, in a recent statement to stockholders, declared that the full benefits of the ten million dollars expended in an expansion policy during 1927 will be realized during the coming year. He said the fact that more than ten million dollars of the company's funds appropriated for expansion purposes during 1927 and largely unproductive during that year, will be reflected in the operating profits for 1928, which, needless to say, should be very much improved.

Chicago Is Officially Named For Contract Meetings

R. F. WOODHULL, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America who was the Chairman of the Unaffiliated Exhibitor Delegates to the recent Trade Practice Conference held under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission, and Robert H. Cochrane, who was the Chairman of the representatives of the Distributors at the Conference have made the following joint announcement:

"After obtaining the consensus of opinion of the members of the Committee appointed under the resolution adopted by the several groups represented at the Trade Practice Conference of the motion picture industry held last October before Hon. Abram F. Myers, Federal Trade Commissioner, to study the provisions of the Standard Exhibition Contract and the Rules and Regulations Relating to Arbitration provided for therein, and to develop improvements in such contract and rules, Chicago has been selected as the place of the meetings of the Committee which will be held beginning on January 31, 1928."

U. S. Setback in Germany

Marked Decline Is Noted Since 1926, With German Percentages on Increase

By HEINRICH FRAENKEL

Berlin Correspondent, Motion Picture News

MORE than 500 full length features passed German censors in the course of the old year, almost exactly as many as the 515 features of 1926. Altogether, there have been, as foreshadowed in MOTION PICTURE NEWS many months ago, far more pictures than the market could digest without trouble. That trouble we are now experiencing, and the drastic new import regulations are nothing but an unavoidable medicine to cure overfeeding with quantity rather than quality.

The following list reveals details about German and foreign features handled on the German market in 1927:

Month	Germany	U. S.	Other Countries	Germany's Share in Percentage
January	17	17	7	41
February	26	22	14	42
March	16	34	10	27
April	16	13	2	52
May	11	9	7	41
June	13	10	2	52
July	25	8	2	71
August	26	13	8	56
September ...	21	11	9	51
October	19	14	4	51
November ...	25	25	13	40
December ...	17	11	6	50
1927	232	187	84	46
1926	202	229	84	39

These figures clearly prove to what considerable extent the American share in the German market has declined, since 1926, when the American full length features were superseding the German ones, and almost equalling 50 per cent of the whole market supply.

I purposely stress the word "full length." For, as far as short features are concerned, America is still, as always, supplying more than 90 per cent of the German market's demands. So unchallenged is American leadership in that particular sphere of production that, failing almost any home competition on those lines, foreign imports of short features have never been restricted, and probably never will; "foreign," in this case, being almost exactly synonymous to "American."

Some weeks ago, dealing with the details of the new German import situation, I emphasized the fact that a numerical decline of American business in Germany need not necessarily mean a decline of the actual volume of business done on the German market. On the contrary, it stands to reason that fewer pictures (as a matter of fact just as many as the market can safely digest), and the resulting restriction on digest) and the resulting restriction on proper exploitation and altogether much better revenue on each individual picture.

Another "silver lining" can be seen in the fact that the German exhibiting business is steadily increasing, in quantity as well as in quality of houses. At the end of 1925, there were 3,600 theatres, with a total capacity of 1,275,000; end of 1926, there were 3,900, with a capacity of 1,400,000; and at present there are 4,300, with a capacity of 1,600,000. This means, within three years, an increase by 19 per cent in number and by 25 per cent in capacity. In other words, more theatres, and, especially, bigger houses.

Morris Gest to Present Griffith Film in N. Y.

MORRIS GEST, whose affiliation with Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, was announced some time ago, this week began active preparation for the presentation to New York audiences of David Wark Griffith's new United Artists' production, "Drums of Love," which will have its premiere at the Liberty Theatre on the evening of Tuesday, January 24. This is the second time Gest and Griffith have been associated as the former presented several years ago Griffith's "Hearts of the World."

It had originally been Mr. Gest's plan to start work with United Artists as producer of "The Darling of the Gods," which will be the first of a series of Gest productions, but the preliminary preparations necessary for the production have delayed the starting of the work until late in the spring.

Sierra Lays Plans for 1928 Program

The production and distribution program of Sierra Picture will be an elaborate one, promises Dale Henshaw, president of the independent company. Four specials are planned for production; they will, it is said, be directed by well-known directors and contain all-star casts.

The first special listed by Sierra for 1928 is "The Port of Missing Children," a story by Phillip Schuyler about birth control; L. Case Russell is making the adaptation and continuity and the cast is being selected. In addition to the four special pictures, Sierra will present several series of comedies and dramas besides a quantity of other short subjects. Mr. Henshaw is now working on the Coast in collaboration with H. B. Carpenter, vice-president of Sierra in charge of production. They will release detailed information concerning their plans within the next ten days.

Murnau Begins Work on "The Four Devils"

F. W. Murnau began work this week upon the actual production of his second directorial effort for Fox Films, "The Four Devils." Janet Gaynor has the leading role, the salary differences between her and the company having been settled amicably.

"The Four Devils" will be produced in two distinct sequences. In the first part will appear Phillipe De Lacey, Claire McDowell, Farrell Macdonald, Anders Randolph, Dawn O'Day, Anita Frenault, Wesley Lake and Jack Parker. The cast that will appear in the second part has been announced previously.

Huge Raw Film Trust Formed in Germany

OUR Berlin Correspondent reports a highly important deal, whereby "J. G. Farben" have acquired the majority of the "Lignose" shares. J. G. Farben is, of course, the huge German dye stuff trust controlling Agfa, (as a matter of fact, the biggest industrial concern in Europe). The amalgamation between the Agfa and Lignose raw stock interests is obviously meant as a countermove against the recent Kodak-Pathe deal. J. G. Farben being a considerable shareholder in Terra Films and Lignose one of the principal creditors of Phoebus as well as a large sharehloder in Ufa, there are naturally many rumors regarding the liquidation of Phoebus to the benefit of one or the other of the two companies.

Phoebus, it will be remembered, is in serious financial difficulties, more than 1½ million dollars advanced by the War Ministry having been squandered. Speculation is ripe as to who will acquire the company's circuit of more than 30 houses all over Germany, including the Capitol and two other Berlin first run houses. It has not been denied that Universal has been dickering for the Capitol. It seems to be much more likely, however, that a German company, probably Terra, will snatch the valuable asset.

Foreign-Born Students to Aid Reviewing Board

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has completed arrangements to have the students of International House, a community center in New York for young men and women representing 60 different races and nationalities from different parts of the world, serve regularly on its review committees. In reviewing films as members of the National Board of Review these students will report any serious distortions or misrepresentations of nationalities in pictures whose scenes are laid in foreign countries with which they are familiar. Any errors that they may discover will be reported to producers for immediate correction wherever is possible.

The Board has taken this step in answer to the criticism that films misrepresent national lives and manners of foreign countries to American audiences.

Five Beginners With Fox Again With Company

William Farnum, Estelle Taylor, William Russell, Tom Santschi and Raoul Walsh, who in the early days of their respective careers worked with Fox Films, are to be seen at the present time working at the motion picture studio at Fox Hills.

Farnum, who five years ago retired from the screen, worked on the stage and then suffered a severe breakdown, is portraying the leading role in "Hangman's House." Russell, who starred in muscular roles some years ago, is being featured in a principal role in "The Escape." Walsh about ten years ago directed "The Honor System" for Fox, and is now working on "The Red Dancer of Moscow." Santschi last appeared in a Fox production in "Three Bad Men." Miss Taylor scored her first screen success in "Monte Cristo."

Pathe-Bray Canyon Unit Welcomed to Hollywood

The Pathe-Bray Colorado River expedition ended its month's trip down the Colorado and returned to Hollywood recently with the producton unit of the picture "The Bride of the Colorado," which Pathe will release. Upon arriving in Hollywood a reception was tendered the members of the picture company, which included the 13 men who were reported missing for several days. These 13 after their narrow escape from disaster were replaced by a relief crew who manned the boats through the remainder of the trip down the river until Needles, California, was reached.

Wives of the expedition members, officials of the Explorers Club and army signal corp attaches welcomed the party at the station. A huge reception followed at the Bray Production company headquarters at the Metropolitan studio. Host and hostess to the homecomers were Phil Ryan, general manager of Metropolitan studios, and Jeanette Loff, Pathe-De Mille candidate for 1928 baby stars.

"Patriot" Starts Off Paramount Production

"The Patriot," an Emil Jannings vehicle being directed by Ernst Lubitsch, was the first picture to start off the production program of Paramount for 1928 at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. A strong cast is supporting the German star in this story of Russia during the eighteenth century.

Four other pictures in production at the company's studio are "Abie's Irish Rose," "Red Hair," "Partners in Crime" and "The Show Down." Eleven other films are being prepared for release. Four of these are considered by Paramount as among their most important pictures for the year. They are "Speedy," "The Wedding March," "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and "The Pioneer Scout."

Others now being edited are: "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "The Last Command," "Under the Tonto Rim," "Sporting Goods," "Feel My Pulse," and "Doomsday."

Title of Jolson's Next Changed to "The Clown"

Al Jolson's second screen vehicle which the Warners will film with the Vitaphone will be called "The Clown" instead of "Pagliacci, the Clown." Script men are already busy with the treatment of the story, which will be the first screen transcription of the Leoncavello opera, "Pagliacci." Jolson will report for work at the Warner studio shortly after the plant opens for activity about the end of February.

"Wife's Relations" Second Columbia January Release

Following "That Certain Thing" will be another comedy, "The Wife's Relations," as Columbia Pictures' second release for the month of January. The picture is a farce of marital difficulties, and stars Shirley Mason. It marks the first effort of George B. Seitz in the field of comedy since he joined Columbia.

Sunday Closing Laws Develop Hot Debate in Iowa

SUNDAY closing laws continue to agitate Iowa theatre owners, though a majority of the cases have brought victories to the exhibitors. An interesting battle was waged recently at the polls in Perry to raise the Sunday closing ban which had been imposed by vote three years ago.

Youngclass and Latta, who recently took the management of the two theatres at Perry, won out in the appeal for permission to show on Sunday, though the battle proved hotter than either side really desired.

At Wauken, Iowa, in the northeastern territory, a Sunday closing debate is now in progress. Manager Cota, of the theatre at Wauken, has presented a petition signed by 108 business houses, asking for a Sunday show. The opposition to the question have presented the council with an appeal to prohibit the showing of pictures on Sunday. The matter will probably be presented to the vote of the people.

Poli Transfer Due Soon

Shoolman Scheduled to Take Over Circuit Some Time During Coming Month

MAX SHOOLMAN will take over the Poli Circuit of theatres in New England some time during the current month. This statement is made by an official closely associated with Shoolman and is made with positiveness.

Shoolman has until the last day of January to take over the theatres. Originally it had been said that the transfer was to take place on or about January 1, 1928. It develops that the agreement to buy stipulates that the theatres are to be taken over sometime during the month of January 1928.

It is believed that within a very few days, the date for the actual transfer of the theatres will be definitely set.

It is amusing to those who know Shoolman and his extensive activities in New England to hear rumors that the Poli transaction may be having trouble in being financed. Shoolman made a deposit of half a million to bind the bargain. Whatever the purchase price, which has been rumored at various amounts in the vicinity of twenty millions, actual cash involved will be considerably less, probably not more than three millions.

Since the Poli deal has been pending, Shoolman has become identified with another project, not theatrical, involving twenty millions more. Had he been pressed for funds in the Poli deal, it is highly improbable that he would be launching additional large enterprises.

Rumors that resignations of some of the Poli managers have placed resignations in the hands of Schoolman, so that he may start control of the theatres with his own staff, are denied by one close to Shoolman. He states that no such resignations have been tendered, nor are they desired. If they have been tendered Mr. Poli, no notice of such action has been given the Shoolman offices.

Incorporation of the holding company for the Poli Circuit has been completed by Shoolman. A Massachusetts corporation has been formed, the Poli Theatres & Realty Co., Boston, with principal office in New Haven, with 1,000 shares of capital stock without par value. Incorporators are Max Shoolman of Boston and Brookline, Herman A. Mintz of Boston and Sharon, and Andrew A. Stone of Brockton, Mass. Articles of incorporation were approved last week by the commissioner of corporations.

Future plans of Mr. Poli are somewhat in doubt. It has been stated in newspapers in New Haven and elsewhere that he planned to take an extensive vacation in Italy.

Arbuckle to Return to Screen; Seeks Story

ROSCOE "FATTY" ARBUCKLE, screen comic who has been touring the Loew vaudeville circuit, is looking for a suitable comedy story on which he plans to start work shortly after May 15. The comedian, according to Sidney Cohen, his manager, will pay $5,000 for a satisfactory vehicle. When Arbuckle concludes his vaudeville engagement he will begin working in California on the comedy, it is announced.

Eight Subjects on Week's Program on Pathe Shorts

A Mack Sennett comedy, an Aesop fable and a Topics of the Day number supply the comedy of the group of eight short subjects scheduled by Pathe for release during the week of January 22. The other subjects of the program are: "Family Frolics," a new Grantland Rice Sportlight; "The Barrage," second chapter of the serial, "The Man Without a Face;" Pathe Review, No. 4, and Pathe News, Nos. 10 and 11.

The Sennett comedy is "The Beach Club," co-starring Billy Bevan and Madeline Hurlock, directed by Harry Edwards under the supervision of J. A. Waldron. The Sportlight issue deals with the golf champion and his family, Eddie Driggs, Metropolitan golf champion, with his father and son playing the game; Helen Meany and other members of her family who also take to the water. Pathe Review presents; "On the Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "Yes, Sir! That's My Baby" and "The Land of the Firewalkers," the concluding number of the Fiji Islanders.

Estimates Upkeep of 2,950-Seat Theatre

IN a pamphlet issued in connection with the sale of stock of the Oriental Theatre, opened recently on West Adams Avenue in Detroit, Mich., the theatre's total weekly expense, excluding the $5,893 rental, is estimated. The house, seating 2,950, should do around $40,000 per week or $2,000,000 a year. Based on a 65 per cent capacity average, the estimated total receipts would be $1,323,067.

The expenses for a house of this size are estimated as follows:

Manager and office salaries	$211.75
Stage	286.00
Organist and orchestra	717.00
Operators	133.00
Doormen, ushers	156.00
Firemen and Porter	50.00
Vaudeville	2,650.00
Pictures	550.00
Advertising	750.00
Light, heat and power	250.00
Programs	25.00
Office expenses	14.50
Miscellaneous	100.00

Unique Los Angeles Premiere for "Wings"

A premiere unique in several respects is planned by the Paramount roadshow department for the Paramount special, "Wings," when it opens for an indefinite run at the Biltmore Theatre in Los Angeles beginning on January 15. According to the plans of A. Griffith Grey, in charge of the Paramount road shows, "Wings" will be the first picture ever to be presented in Los Angeles at $2.20 top (all others have been scaled up to $1.65). Mr. Grey declares that none of the customary ballyhoo will mark the premiere, which will also be lacking in the usual Kleigl lights and invitations to celebrities. A number of stars are expected, he says, but they will have to pay admission to see the production.

Four members of the Paramount roadshow department have departed from the New York office for Los Angeles. They bear with them a carload of special equipment. They are: Luigi de Francesco, general musical conductor; Harry Jackson, manager; Al Lee, special projectionist and Magnascope manipulator, and Engineer Melroy of the General Electric Company, who will install the airplane sound effects.

Educational Sets 11 Shorts for February

Eleven short subjects, comedies and novelties, have been scheduled by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for release during February. There will be six two-reelers, three one reel comedies, two animated cartoons and scenic and novelty shorts besides the bi-weekly releases of the Kinograms News Reel.

On Sunday February 5, will be released: "Always a Gentleman," a Lloyd Hamilton comedy directed by Norman Taurog; "Felix the Cat in the Oily Bird," a Sullivan cartoon; "Rubbernecking," a Curiosities subject, and "Star Shots," a Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge release. On February 12 the Educational exchanges will begin distributing "Sword Points," a Lupino Lane comedy directed by Mark Sandrich; "A Mysterious Night," a Monte Collins comedy, and "A Simple Sap," a comedy vehicle for Larry Semon.

Coming on February 19 will be: "Felix the Cat in "Ohm, Sweet Ohm," another Sullivan cartoon; "Say Ah-h," Charley Powers' second trick comedy for Educational which H. L. Muller directed; "Chilly Days," a "Big Boy" comedy directed by Charles Lamont. February 26 will bring "Builders of Bridges—When Twilight Comes," a Bruce Outdoor Sketch; "His Maiden Voyage," featuring George Davis, and "Pretty Baby," in which Monte Collins stars.

The release date of a new Cameo comedy, "Running Ragged," is January 29.

Court Upholds Use of "Her Wild Oat" Title

Judge Goddard of the United States District Court on January 6 dismissed the request for an injunction restraining First National from using "Her Wild Oat" as a title for one of its current releases. The request for the injunction was made by Samuel Cummings and Public Welfare Pictures Corporation.

The Judge gave it as his opinion that the title of "Her Wild Oat" in no way conflicts with that of the plaintiffs, who released in 1920 a picture bearing the title of "Some Wild Oats." The latter picture was of an educational character and designed for audiences interested in hygienic education.

Hays, Podell and Shulman represented the plaintiffs. Ralph W. Brown, assistant general counsel of First National, argued the case for the defendants.

Story of "Honor Bound" Author's Own Experience

Just as he did some years ago when he filmed "The Honor System," a picture of prison life, William Fox will present the story of the men who spend their time behind prison bars—this time in "Honor Bound," a vehicle for George O'Brien, Estelle Taylor and Tom Santschi whose story has had incorporated into it the first hand experience of the director and author, who both spent three weeks working with Alabama chain gangs of prisoners who have been farmed out for hard labor.

Albert E. Green is the director of the story by Jack Bethea, a member of the staff of the Birmingham, Alabama, News, from whom Fox purchased the story prior to its publication. Players lately added to the cast are Sam De Grasse, Frank K. Cooley, Al Hart and Harry Gripp.

Commission Will Act in Paramount Case

IN reply to his inquiry as to whether anything is being done in the Paramount case, the Federal Trade Commission advised Representative Clarence MacGregor of New York that it will take action in the near future. The Congressman was told that the Commission still has before it a plan for "compliance with its order as submitted."

The proposal by Paramount has been before the Commission for about three months, having been submitted shortly after the Trade Conference held in New York last October. The Commission's order was issued on July 9, 1927.

First National Starts Two New Pictures

Two new pictures, "Harold Teen" and a Maynard Western were started this week at the Burbank studio of First National.

Mervyn Le Roy is directing "Harold Teen," which Allan Dwan is producing. Albert Rogell is directing the western, which has Tarzan, the horse, in support.

Last week the studio began work on a new Johnny Hines comedy; a new comedy featuring Charlie Murray, and "Lady Be Good," co-starring Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. The new Billie Dove vehicle, "The Heart of a Follies Girl," was started December 29. Other productions in filming are "Lilac Time," now in its third week; "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," "Burning Daylight," and "The Headliner" (tentative).

Gotham Units Back Again at Universal City

His latest Gotham production finished, Sam Sax, president of Lumas Film Corporation and Gotham Productions, has transferred his entire production units from the Tec-Art Studios to Universal City. The Gotham crew functioned during the season of 1926-27 at the Universal City plant, so the change of location is a home coming. Last summer the company moved its units to the Fine Arts Studios, but, owing to the sale of the property, a move was made temporarily to the Tec-Art Studios.

The transfer of equipment is being effected during the slight lull in production resulting from Mr. Sax' visit to New York. Upon his return to the Coast, about the latter part of January, production will be resumed immediately.

Columbia Acquires Shorts for Regional Distribution

Columbia Pictures, in the territories of Minneapolis, Omaha and Des Moines, is distributing 48 two-reel comedies, a 10-chapter serial and a number of one-reel novelties, in addition to its regular releases, the Screen Snapshots, which have been in existence for over eight years.

The new short subjects on the Columbia list are: twelve two-reel Charlie Chaplin revivals; six Winnie Winkle two-reel comedies; six Hairbreadth Harry; Izzy and Lizzy and Snub Pollard comedies. Three series of eight two-reelers will also be available in Barnyard Animals; Lucy Strike, Novelty Brand, and the Aubrey Group. The one reelers will be slapstick comedies bearing the brand name of Crackerjacks.

Ferenc Molnar Will Write for Paramount

Ferenc Molnar, the Hungarian playwright, will write a series of motion picture stories for Paramount. The deal was closed this week by telegraph from the Hollywood studios. It is reported that the playwright has begun his first story with a view of having Adolph Menjou as its star.

Molnar, now in New York, is the author of "The Goat Song," "The Play's the Thing" and "The Guardsman."

In and Out of Town

ED. J. SMITH, general sales manager of Tiffany-Stahl Productions, left last Friday on a quick trip through the middle west visiting exchanges.

Fox Signs Many Players

In Line With Plans for Five Years of Production 28 Players Are Under Long Contracts

IN line with the company policy of planning ahead for five years of production Winifield Sheehan, vice president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation, announces that twenty-eight stars and featured players have been signed to contracts to appear in Fox pictures for several years to come. These players form the nucleus of the stock company, to which other names will be added in the near future.

Among the already established favorites who are under long term Fox contracts are, Janet Gaynor, Madge Ballamy, Lois Moran, Edmund Lowe, Earle Foxe, Victor McLaglen, Charles Farrell and George O'Brien, virtually all of whom have sprung into prominence during the past year or two.

Included among the newer players who will adorn Fox screen plays during the next five years are, Nancy Drexel, formerly known as Dorothy Kitchen, June Collier, Sally Phipps, Marie Casajuana, Lia Tora and Caryl Lincoln.

Miss Drexel will have her first big role in F. W. Murnau's "The 4 Devils," and Miss Collier will have a prominent role in John Ford's forthcoming picture, "Four Sons." Sally Phipps will be seen in six productions during the coming season. Marie Casajuana, winner of the Fox Films contest for the most beautiful girl in Spain, is seen in her first big part in "A Girl in Every Port."

Lia Tora, winner of the Fox beauty contest in Brazil is scheduled to play the lead in a forthcoming special attraction, while Caryl Lincoln, who is now playing opposite Tom Mix, is scheduled for leading parts in a number of next season's pictures.

In addition to the foregoing, Fox has launched a new cowboy star in Rex King. He will appear in three pictures during the coming season. Other young leading men who will appear under the Fox banner for the next few years are, Charles Morton, who plays the male lead in "The 4 Devils"; George Meeker, who has been selected to appear in the lead in "The Escape"; Nick Stuart, hero of "The High School Hero"; David Rollens, Barry Norton, who will be seen in "The 4 Devils"; Margaret Mann, who will also be seen in "The 4 Devils"; Sammy Cohen, Farrell Macdonald, Ted McNamara, Tyler Brooke, Marjorie Beebe and Nancy Carroll.

California Theatre Boom

Southern Part of State Launches Building Plans That Involve Many Millions

THEATRE building is on the boom in Southern California with several million dollars involved in projects which are now under way or which are in contemplation. The new year promises to be a banner one along building lines.

Sol Lesser and Leo M. Harvey of Los Angeles, who have just organized Western States Building Corporation, intend to build a number of new theatres in different towns in the southern part of California. These will be added to the national small town chain being built up by Lesser and his associates for Principal Theatres. Among the new houses already announced are those for Ventura and Santa Maria, each to cost $250,000.

Among the first of the new projects completed is the new United Artists Theatre in Los Angeles, which was built at a reputed cost of $3,500,000. It is located at 951 South Broadway and seats 2,300.

Culver City is to have a new house to be built by Fred A. Miller, who operates the Carthay Circle, while Warner Bros. expects to open their Los Angeles in March. The latter house on Hollywood Boulevard is to cost $1,800,000. Another new Los Angeles house will be built on Atlantic and Whittier Boulevards to cost $270,000. The contract has been awarded to the Vega Corporation.

Pantages have started work on a $500,000 house at Fresno, and the West Coast Junior Circuit has awarded the contract to the Bellah Construction Company of Los Angeles for a $300,000 theatre at Redlands.

West Coast has also awarded a contract to Barkelew & Gould of Los Angeles for construction of a theatre at El Centro to seat 1,400, with an airdome to seat 1,200.

Plans are also being prepared for a $350,000 house for Chatham and Snider in Riverside to seat 1,500. J. Roy Williams, Oxnard theatre owner, is planning another 900 seat house for Oxnard.

Columbia Signs Estelle Taylor for Crook Role

COLUMBIA Picture this week contracted for the services of Estelle Taylor to appear in the title role of "Lady Raffles," a story of a lady crook which will be produced under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

Miss Taylor has done practically no screen work since "Don Juan" and "New York," Warner Bros. and Paramount films respectively, which were made over a year ago.

Universal Signs Mary Nolan to New Contract

Mary Nolan, former stage actress who worked in two pictures during 1927, has been signed to a new contract by Universal, her term of employment by the firm not to expire until January 31, 1929. Her former contract, taken over by Universal from Featured Productions, Inc., last September, runs until February 1.

Since joining Universal, Miss Nolan has acted in "The Foreign Legion" and "Thoroughbreds." She has been cast for an important role in "Grease Paint."

News Shots of Plane Carrier Cut

NEWSREEL shots of the plane carrier, the Saratoga, which were about to be shown to audiences in New York theatres Wednesday evening, were ordered deleted by Universal Pictures, the distributors of the reel. Theatre managers had the idea that the drastic cut was the result of a command emanating from the Navy Department at Washington as the scenes in the newsreel dealt with views of the new vessel, constructed at a cost of $45,000,000, and displaying fully its large flying deck with accommodations for some 83 planes.

Officials of the department, however, denied any such action. It was suggested that perhaps the distributors may have recalled the shots of their own accord, being aware of the department's aversion to air views of the ship. The flying deck of the Saratoga contains, it is said, 70 government secrets. Navy officials explained that permits had been given to take views of the ship from tugs and like craft but that none had been granted for securing pictures from an airplane. All newsreel men are acquainted with this fact, said one Navy official.

"Wedding March" Near Completion Stage

The Paramount cutters and film editors are rushing the completion of "The Wedding March," the Erich Von Stroheim production scheduled for February and a world premiere planned for New York. Within the next two weeks it is thought editing and titling will have been finished and the picture will be rushed to New York so that the musical score can be made ready. The score itself will be quite lengthy, it is said, inasmuch as the production is 12 reels in length, with several reels in Technicolor.

French Houses to Use American Type of Leader

Animation presentation leaders may soon be in use in all Paris theatres as two of the French theatres, the Gaumont-Palace and the Cinema Madeleine, both under the direction of Gaumont-Loew-Metro, have ordered from National Screen Service through Loew's, Inc., foreign department, a wide selection of animated presentation leaders of a type similar to those in use in the representative movie houses in the United States.

Leaders introducing features presentations, comedy, news reels, overture and organ features have been in use in American theatres for over seven years. They are just coming into use in France and England, according to National Screen Service, Inc.

Plans Move to Revive French Films

ACCORDING to a report from Paris this week the Government Commission appointed by Premier Herriot to work out a plan to revive the French industry is ready with a quota proposal.

The Commission recommends that a law be enacted providing that license for nine imported films be granted French producers for each domestic film they make. The French producers may use or sell the licenses but failure to do so within a specified time will result in the Government taking over and disposing of the licenses.

Under the law the French film would be one produced entirely by a French company but without restrictions on foreign capital.

Oil City Theatre to Be One of the Finest

Elaborate ceremonies were held in Oil City, Pa., on January 7, on the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of the new $800,000 motion picture theatre which the Vemark Realty Corporation is erecting, and which is to be named for Colonel Drake, pioneer oil producer of that section. This is to be one of the finest theatres in Pennsylvania, outside of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh.

Addresses at the cornerstone exercises were made by Mayor Thomas L. Blair, of Oil City; Judge Theo. Wilson, of Clarion; Duke Clark, field representative of the Paramount Corporation, of New York; Nickitas Dipson, president of the Affiliated Theatre Corporation, of New York; and Henry Wilkinson, district representative of the Utilities Theatre Corporation, of Pittsburgh.

Steel work on the big structure already has been completed, and the brick work is progressing rapidly.

New Theatres Under Way in Southeast

The theatre building on East Front Street, Burlington, N. C., to be built by J. R. Qualls, measures 40 by 128 feet. Two stores will be located in the front.

The present theatre building operated by the Circle Amusement Company, Charlotte, N. C., will be remodeled and another erected at a cost of about $400,000. It will measure 100 by 198 feet. Nat L. Royster is president and manager.

A motion picture theatre is being built on Main Street, Point Pleasant, W. Va., by the Lyric Amusement Company, Ross Filson manager. The theatre will measure 40 by 135 feet, to cost about $35,000. It will seat about 600 persons.

"Actress" Unit First to Go Into Work in 1928

The first picture to be placed into work in 1928 at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio was "The Actress," a Norma Shearer vehicle, which Sidney Franklin is directing. The cast was completed with the addition of O. P. Heggie, character actor.

Horton Kahn Publicity Man For West Coast Acts

Horton Kahn, formerly in the San Francisco district, now is with Jeff Lazarus in the Publicity and Advertising Department of the General Headquarters of West Coast Theatres, Inc. He is contact man for the Fanchon and Marco and West Coast stage attractions.

Royal Theatre in Kansas City Closed

THE Royal theatre, the first motion picture house of the larger type to be built in Kansas City fourteen years ago by Frank L. Newman and now one of three houses under lease to Loew interests, closed its doors January 1. The disposition of the property has not been determined yet, M. B. Shanberg, managing director for Loew's theatres in Kansas City, said. From a house of large audiences the Royal fell to a theatre which was host to mere handful of people, following the opening of the new $4,000,000 Loew's Midland theatre. The Royal formerly showed the superproduction type of picture on long runs, but after being taken over by Loew interests the policy was changed to ordinary first runs at 35-cent admission, but the competition of the 4,000-seat Midland was too much.

Leni to Direct Another Mystery Play for "U"

"The Last Warning," the mystery play by Thomas Fallon which played on Broadway a season or two ago, will probably be directed by Paul Leni for Universal; Al Cohn is now working on the script. Leni has already directed "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Chinese Parrot,' both mystery plays, for Universal and is now in the final week of camera work on "The Man Who Laughs."

"Burlesque" Rights Are Bought by Paramount

"Burlesque," a current legitimate attraction on Broadway, has become the screen property of Paramount as the result of negotiations concluded this week. Paramount contemplates starring Esther Ralston in the central figure role.

Bernstein Chief Universal Exploitation Houses

Harry Bernstein, former manager of the Mosque Theatre in Richmond, Va., has been made general manager of the Universal exploitation theatres in the United States. He will make his headquarters at Universal's home office in New York.

Columbia Signs Players and Director

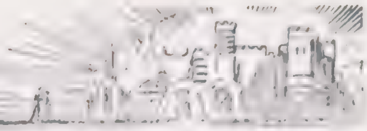
COLUMBIA PICTURES signed five players and one director last week for work in three pictures.

Betty Compson attached her signature to a contract by means of which she will be featured in a lavish production, as yet without a title, to be based on the short story by Izola Forrester, "Love of Liane." Will H. Titchey is now doing the adaptation.

Roland Drew and Lilyan Tashman were also signed to head the cast supporting Estelle Taylor in "Lady Raffles," now in its third week of shooting.

The principals signed to bring "So This Is Love" to the screen are Frank Capra, director, and Shirley Mason and William Collier, Jr., who will have the co-featured parts.

Studio Briefs



William Francis Dugan, playwright and writer now with the F B O scenario department, is acting a part in his own story which F B O is filming, "The Law of Fear," a vehicle for Ranger, the dog, which Jerome Stork is directing.

Cyril Chadwick, veteran character actor, has joined the group of players in the M-G-M picture, "The Actress," which goes into production soon at the M-G-M studio under the direction of Sydney Franklin.

Dorothy Devore, Educational comedienne who has been vacationing while her director, Norman Taurog, directed Lloyd Hamilton and Johnny Arthur, will soon be back at the Educational studio working again under his direction.

Polly Moran has been signed by Leo McCarey, supervising director and vice-president of the Hal Roach studio, to appear in the next Hal Roach comedy co-featuring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy.

Louis King, one of the younger set of directors at Hollywood, has been chosen to handle the megaphone over the Tom Tyler unit making a new Western production for F B O. King is the brother of Henry King, director.

Emmett King, character actor, has been added to the cast of Herbert Brenon's new M-G-M production, "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

George Marion, Jr., will do the titles for Paramount's "Feel My Pulse" as well as those for "Sporting Goods."

Ralph Ince, veteran director for F B O, is now engaged in preparing for the filming of "Crooks Can't Win," his next production. The cast has not yet been announced.

Ray Hallor has been signed by Christy Cabanne to enact a crook role in "The Clash," the Tiffany-Stahl production now being filmed.

Richard Schayer, who wrote the screen play and continuity for "Tell It to the Marines," has been given a new contract by M-G-M. He recently finished the adaptation and continuity for "The Actress" and "Monkey Business."

Esther Ralston has started on her new Paramount picture, "Nothing Ever Happens," under the direction of Frank Tuttle, who is also the author of the piece.

Edward Clarke, author, has been added to the ranks of the Tiffany-Stahl writers and has already launched a story. He is the author of sixteen New York stage successes.

Flash, the new M-G-M German shepherd dog, who recently finished his first screen role in "Under the Black Eagle," has been signed up for a long-term contract by M-G-M.

"Hold Everything," an original story by John McDermott, will be Bebe Daniels' new vehicle for Paramount following "Feel My Pulse," upon which she is now at work. She will be directed by Clarence Badger.

Max Davidson's new starring vehicle for Hal Roach to be released by M-G-M under the title of "Dumb Daddies," is now ready. It was directed by Fred Guiol.

"Their Hour," a Tiffany-Stahl production, is now in production under the direction of Al Raboch. The cast at the present time includes Dorothy Sebastian, (loaned through the courtesy of M-G-M). Johnny Harron, June Marlowe, Huntley Gordon, Myrtle Stedman, Holmes Herbert and John Steppling.

Rowland V. Lee will direct Pola Negri's next picture for Paramount, which is as yet untitled. It is thought that the German actress will start the picture late this month.

Frederick and Fanny Hatton are titling "The Tragedy of Youth," the Tiffany-Stahl production.

Ruby McCoy, who for three years peddled cigarettes in one of the Hollywood's motion picture cafes, has been signed to be the feminine lead in Educational comedies. She is making her first screen appearance in "Green-Eyed Love," a Cameo comedy.

Tiffany-Stahl has now in the course of preparation a story for Reginald Barker which will be a special on the company's program. Information regarding the title, subject and cast will be forthcoming shortly.

Late additions to the cast of First National's "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" include Claude Gillingwater, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Martha Mattox, Mark Hamilton, Bob Milsach, Ralph Yearsley and William Bertram.

"Easy Come Easy Go" will be the title of Richard Dix' new vehicle for Paramount which Gregory La Cava will direct. The story is from a stage play by Owen Davis.

"The Mad Hour," a First National picturization of a novel by Elinor Glyn, was finished last January 3. The picture went immediately into the cutting room.

Director Raoul Walsh has chosen Dorothy Revier, blonde player who has been starring in Columbia pictures, for the role of the Princess Varvara in the production he is making for Fox Films in which Dolores Del Rio and Charles Farrell have the leads.

Rapid strides in production are being made on "Carry on Sergeant," the Captain Bruce Bairnsfather story that the Canadian International Films, Ltd., is producing.

Ralph Spence will title the Paramount-Christie comedy special, "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

In Columbia's "The Wife's Relations" Shirley Mason will be supported by Gaston Glass and Armand Kaliz, as the hero and menace respectively, Ben Turpin, Flora Finch, Lionel Belmore, Arthur Rankin, Maurice Ryan and James Harrison.

Leila Hyams will not appear in Fox' "The Red Dancer of Moscow" but will instead act in "Honor Bound," featuring George O'Brien and Estelle Taylor.

After completing "Burning Daylight" and before starting "The Barker" Milton Sills, First National star is about to begin work on "The Hawk," an original screen story by Wed Gunning, who wrote it in collaboration with Sidney Lazarus. Charles Brabin will direct.

Nora Lane, William Collier, Jr., Raoul Paoli and Claude King will be among those in the supporting cast of Adolphe Menjou's next Paramount picture, which is carrying the temporary title of "Captain Ferreol." Production has begun under Lothar Mendez' direction.

The adaptation of Gotham's "Turn Back the Hours" will be done by Jack Jungmeyer and the direction by Howard Bretherton. The latter was engaged through arrangement with Warner Bros. The leading roles for the picture are now being cast.

The new title for the picture previously known as "Oo It Again" is "Three-Ring Marirage." It is a screen version of the story, "Help Yourself to Hay."

Charles Rogers will play opposite Marion Nixon in Universal's "The Cream of the Earth," the story by Percy Marks now being directed by Melville Brown.

"The Kiss Doctor," the fourth Van Bibber comedy on Fox' schedule for this season, was completed the other day by O. M. Dulle. It has been set for January 29.

Actual camera work was begun last week on Paramount's "The Patriot," in which Emil Jannings is to star under the direction of Ernst Lubitsch, who directed him in "Passion."

Johnny Hines has commenced work on his next comedy for First National, "Chinatown Charlie." Sets representing the streets of Chinatown have been erected at the Hollywood studio. The shots of New York's Chinatown section which were taken by the producer and unit some time ago will be used along with the Hollywood sequences.

Cecil B. De Mille last week began work on his personally-directed vehicle, "The Godless Girl," to which have been added Noah Beery, Marie Prevost, William Humphrey, Jane Keckley and Mary Jane Irving in various roles.

Maude Fulton, the author of several stage plays, will have the leading comedy role in "Bare Knees," the Gotham production. During her sixteen-year old record Miss Fulton has been a dancer, writer, theatre owner, playwright, concert pianist, composer and comedienne.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

A tie-up with the Cleveland Public Library which was effected by the Allen Theatre in Cleveland during the showing of "Wild Geese."

Make Awards for Exploitation Competition of Publix Chain

PUBLIX theatre managers whose campaigns were adjudged winners in the contest for prizes offered by stars of various companies have received the awards. The competition covered the months of October and November and met with hearty response upon the part of the managers.

As a result of the added exploitation staged at the various theatres, the box office returns for the circuit showed a substantial increase.

The contest was open to all Publix managers including affiliated operations and every eligible manager submitted not one but many campaign records as bids for the prizes given by stars.

The stars who offered awards were: Billie Dove, Mary Astor, Charlie Murray, Dorothy Mackaill, Richard Barthelmess, Jack Mulhall, Lloyd Hughes (First National); Mary Pickford, Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, Louis Wolheim(United Artists); John Gilbert and Renee Adoree (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer), and Richard Dix, Emil Jannings, George Bancroft, Fred Thompson, Bebe Daniels, Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton, Esther Ralston, Chester Conklin, Adolphe Menjou, Clara Bow, and two cash prizes by Jesse L. Lasky (Paramount).

Charles Amos, of the Florida theatre, St. Petersburg, won the $300 first prize donated by Mr. Lasky, and J. P. Harrison, of the Hippodrome, Waco, took second money. The winning campaigns respectively were for the pictures ''Hula'' and ''Underworld.'' Other winners were: Guy Kenimer, of the Florida, Jacksonville, the Louis Wolheim watch for campaign on ''Two Arabian Knights;'' Tom Holliday of the Imperial, Columbus, Ga., the Billie Dove Humidore for campaign on ''The American Beauty;'' John Carroll of the Tampa theatre, Tampa, the Mary Astor silver cigarette box, for campaign on ''Rose of the Golden West;'' L. E. Davidson of the Princess, Sioux City, the Wallace Beery gold fountain pen for a campaign on ''Now We're in the Air,'' and Warren Irvin of the Carolina, Charlotte, the Raymond Hatton gold pencil for his campaign on the same picture; Manager Whitaker of the Imperial, Charlotte, the Esther Ralston desk clock for ''Figures Don't Lie'' campaign; Manager Floyd of the Queen, Houston, the Charlie Murray silver belt buckle for his ''Life of Riley'' campaign; C. Clare Woods, Colorado theatre, Denver, the Bebe Daniels watch for ''Swim, Girl, Swim'' campaign; Harry Gould of the Palace, Fort Worth, the George Bancroft cigarette case for his ''Rough Riders'' drive; Charles B. Taylor, Shea's Buffalo theatre, Buffalo, the Banky-Coleman prize for ''The Magic Flame'' campaign he staged; J. L. Cartwright, Capitol, Macon, the Emil Jannings award for ''The Way of All Flesh'' campaign; Dan Burgum, Saenger theatre, Greenville, Miss., the Richard Barthelmess prize for his ''Drop Kick'' campaign; Mrs. Irma M. Redden, Lyric theatre, Dover, N. H., the Jack Mulhall prize for ''The Poor Nut'' campaign; Raymond Jones, the Richard Dix desk set for ''Shanghai Bound'' campaign; T. W. Edwin, the Menjou prize for campaign on ''A Gentleman of Paris;'' Roy Slentz, Rialto, Colorado Springs, Fred Thompson prize for ''Jesse James'' drive; E. R. Rogers, Tivoli, Chattanooga, the ''Big Parade'' award, and F. J. Miller, Modjeska, Augusta, the Chester Conklin prize.

The Drive Committee, who passed upon the campaigns and made the awards, was composed of Publix home office executives. It was provided that the doners would duplicate the awards in the event of a tie being declared between two or more of the managers.

Showmanship

Briefs

ADNA AVERY, manager of the Palace theatre, McAlester, Okla., arranged a clever tieup with a local woman's store as an exploitation idea for his campaign on "Get Your Man." This was the application of the "resemblance" contest to a window display. The merchant featured a window showing Clara Bow novelty hats, and made the offer of giving as an award to the girl most resembling the star a hat and a pass to see "Get Your Man." The window display attracted wide notice and stirred an interest which was reflected at the box office of the Palace.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S "Big Parade" truck started its tour of the South last week. The truck, which provides an interesting ballyhoo for the picture, was brought South by Charles E. Kessnich, Southern division manager of M-G-M. The touring ballyhoo is in charge of James Jackson, an experienced showman, and will visit towns in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee. It is in the form of a float with a realistic setting representing a section of a trench, with soldiers represented by life-size wax figures. Wire entanglements at the edge of the trench and machine guns are cleverly simulated.

FOX FILMS offers a national tieup with the Postal Telegraph whereby local agencies will display special window cards exploiting "A Girl in Every Port." The window card is printed in star photos and scene stills. In the center is a message signed by Victor McLaglen, star of the picture. This can be given a local angle by filing a new wire with such changes in copy as are required.

H. H. HOKE, manager of the Howard theatre, Taylor, Texas, this year conducted one of the most successful Xmas parties ever given at that house for the children of the town. The annual event is sponsored by the manager and local merchants, who supply articles to be distributed as gifts as the children leave the theatre after the special party at which "Santa Claus" appears "In Person" on the stage of the Howard.

CHARLES H. AMOS, manager of the Riviera theatre in Knoxville, substituted ice picks for knives which the press sheet recommended as a novelty in posting a limited number of posters on "The Gay Defender." Amos was able to buy ice picks at such a cheap rate that he used up 2,000 of the reward posters issued for the exploitation of this picture. The reward bills were held to telephone poles, fences and other places by means of the ice picks, which gave the appearance of being daggers.

TWELVE high school girls, members of the glee club of their school, made up the cast of a highly successful Christmas presentation put on at the Carolina theatre, Greenville, S. C., by Manager Roy L. Smart during the holiday week. The presentation was a choral number with an organ selection played on the chimes as an opening. The setting was dimly lighted from overhead and consisted of a drop with a large church window as its centerpiece. The window was made from an architect's drawing and was cut from a solid piece of wall board. The glasses were tinted crepe paper, which, when illuminated from behind, produced a realistic effect.

Specht Forms Bands for Loew's Theatres

Thinks All Large Houses Soon Will Offer Stage Bands

Every large motion picture theatre in the country will have a jazz band to appear in stage presentations within the next twelve months, according to Paul Specht, orchestra leader and director of stage bands for the Loew circuit of motion picture houses.

Already Mr. Specht has organized stage bands at the Baltimore and Washington Loew houses. He selects the musicians for the stage band from the pit orchestra, and has had considerable success in developing jazz musicians from motion picture orchestras.

''Any trained musician can learn to play jazz,'' says Mr. Specht, ''but if the man is not a real good performer using him in a jazz band will show up his defects more quickly than keeping him in the pit orchestra.''

More than a score of the leading theatres of the country have added stage bands to their permanent personnel in the last sixty days, according to Specht. Theatre owners are watching with interest the policy being developed by Specht of producing the stage band from members of the pit orchestra.

Finds Free Tea Service Builds Matinee Attendance

Manager C. Clare Woods attributes the success of his better matinee attendance to a free tea service operated on the mezzanine of the Colorado Theatre, Pueblo, Colo.

While other theatres were feeling the brunt of the Christmas shopping, Woods pulled them in by passing out tea and wafers to the tired shoppers.

In addition to serving the light refreshments, parcels were wrapped, addressed and tied—and while all this was being done it gave the manager an opportunity of mingling with his patrons and getting their various comments on pictures.

This service is only costing a small amount—just the tea and wafers.

Serial Attendance Cards Build Matinees

A STUNT in the exploitation of serials is being worked out by Al Rosenberg and Al Finkelstein of the DeLuxe Theatres, Inc., in Seattle, Washington, with exceptional results.

When "Blake of Scotland Yard" opened at their Neptune Theatre, each young patron was given a card on which were printed spaces listing the other eleven episodes, dates of showing, titles, etc. Each youngster is supposed to keep the card, and have the doorman punch the card when the owner presents it at each succeeding episode.

When the final episode is shown, each child whose card is fully punched will be entitled to see the show without charge. On the same program will be shown the first episode of a new serial, and the same plan of cards will be instituted again.

Special Week Yields Big Results During Holiday Season

A "JOY WEEK" was the basis of a special holiday drive which brought highly satisfactory results at the Gillioz theatre, Springfield, Mo. This campaign was conducted by C. D. Hoag, manager of the theatre.

The drive was centered about a "Carl Laemmle Joy Week" and featured the showing of two Universal features, "Silk Stockings" and "The Irresistible Lover."

The lobby display was comprised of cutouts of the stars attractively set off with special mountings and illumination from baby spot lights. A huge Christmas tree in the center of the lobby was surrounded with hundreds of packages of nuts and candy donated by a local grocery company. Two thousand two hundred youngsters received these presents at an Xmas party during a showing of a big kiddie revue, a Snookum comedy and a Coogan picture.

Door knob and phone hangers, cafe checks, blotters, paper napkins at lunch and soda counters, spare tire announcements, as well as newspaper ads, all drove home the Joy Week idea.

Auto Agency Sponsors Heavy Campaign for "Dress Parade"

ONE of the most extensive exploitation campaigns developed from a theatre-dealer tie-up resulted when Manager K. Moore, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, arranged for the co-operation of the local automobile agency in a drive featuring his presentation of ''Dress Parade.''

Well in advance of picture, free stories and layouts appeared in all papers on the amusement pages and other stories on the automobile pages tying in with Reo cars and trucks used in the making of the picture.

The local agency ran and paid for 216 inches of display space in conjunction with the Reo Motor Co. factory in a series of 3-column by 12-inch ads—all ads tying in directly with the title of picture.

The Reo agency also ran and paid for 30 inches of display space to advertise a special children's matinee.

The cost of printing the tickets for the kids' matinee was borne entirely by the Reo Company. Three bus loads of children were picked up and driven to the theatre—all busses being properly bannered with ''Dress Parade'' signs, such as ''On our way to see 'Dress Parade'—Capitol now.''

Twelve Reo cars and trucks furnished by the local agency, all properly bannered with signs, paraded the down-town section of the city during the noon hour the opening day of the picture.

The Reo Agency also devoted their entire showrooms to window tie-ups, featuring six cut-out cadets and two one-sheets, made by the theatre artist.

In addition to all the Reo Agency did to put this picture over, many private owners of Reo cars carried banners on their motor cars, reading, ''Drive a Reo and Be on Dress Parade.''

All merchants participating in the co-operative page also used cadet cut-outs and one-sheets, together with stills and announcement cards in their windows; the cards announcing the title of picture, name of the theatre and play dates.

A tie-up with the local recruiting station resulted in large banners and cut-outs being placed on each side of army trucks, which are constantly used in the city. These banners were on the trucks well in advance of picture and during run of picture.

A special pre-showing was given on Thursday night in honor of Governor Johnston of Oklahoma, prominent State officials and army officers. The balcony was placed on sale to the public, which more than paid for the expenses incurred by the showing.

Famous Players of Canada Managers Promoted

Important promotions have been made among the managers of Famous Players Canadian Corp., in Western Canada, following the removal of H. M. Thomas, Western Division manager, from Vancouver, B. C., to Toronto, the headquarters of the company.

James R. Muir, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, has been appointed supervisor of Famous Players theatres in the Province of British Columbia. Mr. Muir, who had been in charge of the house since the death of Ralph Ruffner, has been succeeded there by Walter P. Wilson, manager of the Capitol Theatre at Edmonton, Alberta, and previously in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Harold Bishop, assistant to John Hazza, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, for years, has been appointed manager of the Edmonton Capitol in succession to Mr. Wilson.

Key City Reports

New York City

LAST week further demonstrated that they still have the holiday spending spirit in New York City for the rush to the box offices continued at most all of the Broadway houses, some touching their record weeks while all did what can be termed a most satisfactory trade. Probably the big noise at the end of the week was the first showing of "The Circus," the new Chaplin picture at the Strand—where it has since been going great guns and with fair indications that it will cut into the gross of other theatres for the current week and some more to come. It looks like old times around the Strand with the lineup at the b.o.

The Paramount was 'way up with "Two Flaming Youths," the Fields-Conklin comedy, and the Capitol did a fine trade with "West Point," exceeding its previous week. The Roxy has also been back in its old stride the last couple of weeks, the last one with "Silk Legs" going well over average. At the Colony "The Chinese Parrot" had a pretty fair week. Admission was jumped to 50 cents for all seats. The Strand could not keep up the fast pace set the previous week with "The Love Mart" and Will Rogers in "The Texas Steer" let things drop a bit 'though doing very well.

At the Rialto "The Dove" goes into a second week of excellent business and up at the sister U. A. house, the Rivoli, Gilda Gray is making a stay of at least a month in "The Devil Dancer," the personal appearance of this champion shimmier of course helping things along.

Among the more expensive and extended run shows "Love" continues to be a sell out at the Embassy and "Wings" still is demonstrating its popularity at the Criterion. The Globe let go of "Helen of Troy" for its engagement at the Paramount this week. Now we will see what this satirical picture will really do in a different type house at more popular prices. In some sections of this country the public is becoming wise to the fact that if they wait a while they can see a $2.00 show for half price and perhaps they will wise up in this town.

"Chicago" at the Gaiety,"The Gaucho" at the Liberty and "The Enemy" at the Astor all shared the general prosperity of the week and the same can be said for the Central with "Uncle Tom's Cabin." They are doing everything possible to put "Sunrise" over at the Times Square if advertising space in the dailies will do it.

"The "Jazz Singer" is past its third month at Warners and still showing itself an unusually strong draw.

With Henry Ford's show in the basement of the Garden and the National Auto Show at the Grand Central Palace it is thought that these attractions will stimulate rather than detract from the current week's business.

Chicago

THE first week of the new year was very encouraging to Chicago theatre men, as business generally averaged better than during the same period one year ago. The down town houses, in addition to doing good business all week, enjoyed exceptionally big Sunday business.

At the Chicago "The Love Mart" and a big stage show pulled strongly all week; the same could be said at the Oriental, where "French Dressing" was the screen feature and Paul Ash offered "Pickin's from Paris." "The Gorilla" closed its run at McVickers to very satisfactory business, while the Roosevelt had another good week with "Love." "The Dove" continued its run at United Artists Theatre to very satisfactory business.

The big north side houses shared in the good business of the week, "Get Your Man" proving a good screen attraction at the Uptown, while "Seventh Heaven" went over strong at the Granada. The Sheridan did very well with "Seventh Heaven" on the screen and Verne Buck and his orchestra on the stage.

On the south side, the Tivoli had a satisfactory box office report with "Get Your Man" on the screen and Benny Kreuger and big cast in a stage frolic. "Underworld" proved a strong attraction at the Avalon, while "Ben Hur" was doing good business at the Capitol.

Los Angeles

AL JOLSON'S fans have found they have to reserve seats days in advance, so popular is "The Jazz Singer" with Vitaphone at the Criterion. With two shows daily, reserved seats, and a top price of $1.65, the Criterion is enjoying capacity-taxing throngs.

Next in line bidding high in popularity is "My Best Girl." All local records for Mary Pickford pictures are being smashed at the new United Artists Theatre. Loew's State did record breaking business with "The Shepherd of the Hills." In contrast to the picture a three-ring circus entertained on the stage. "The Gay Defender" at the Metropolitan and the last week of "Old Ironsides" at the Million Dollar attracted only the average audiences.

Fred Miller, of Carthay Circle, has advertised "Sunrise" to such an extent that it very easily outnumbers in billboard space and posters any picture that has ever been shown in Los Angeles. The picture is very popular with both tourists and citizens.

The tourists also turn out in large numbers to view "The Gaucho" at Grauman's Chinese Theatre. In addition to the splendid prologue, Ford autos are on display, attracting interest.

Portland, Ore.

UNFAVORABLE show weather was responsible for the poor business done by the majority of the local houses last week. All houses found the weather too much and very keen to offset. The Broadway, ace West Coast house, smashed all house records, with Will King, musical comedy star and Mary Pickford's "My Best Girl." Crowds swarmed the house from opening to closing, and business was exceptionally good. King is a great favorite here, having acquired a big following, having been at the Music Box theatre, for a nine-month engagement.

The Liberty, which of late has been a consistent loser, had an average week's business with "Snowbound." Five acts of cheap vaudeville does not seem to help this house any. Universal's Columbia, did not click as expected with the Reginald Denny feature, "On Your Toes." This was entirely due to the weather, as the picture was well-liked by all that came. The Rivoli, with "Ben-Hur" at a fifty-cent top, registered very nicely in its second week, it being held for a month's stay, if business warrants. The Blue Mouse, opened up to capacity business with "The Jazz Singer," and it looks like it will stick for at least three weeks.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres got under way with good attendance this week, but some suffered a drop by the latter part of the week.

Will Rogers proved to be the drawing card, playing in "A Texas Steer" at the Capitol. Good laughs filled the house with every audience, sending a loud hand to Rogers and Louise Fazenda.

Another First National picture, "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" showed at the Howard to average houses. This production has been long looked forward to and for the chosen few, met their expectations, but fell down before the masses. The satire did not prove a sure-fire laugh getter. Audiences did not know whether to laugh or frown. Still one more First National made its bow, making this F. N. Week. Jack Mulhall amused goodly sized audiences at the Rialto in "The Poor Nut."

Loew's Grand enjoyed an unusually prosperous week with the mystery tale, "The Thirteenth Hour." This picture pleased the patrons well. Delightful Marie Prevost gave a creditable performance at Keith's Georgia in "On To Reno" and brought in a worthy box-office. The Metropolitan did not stand up very well with "Cheating Cheaters," Universal's complicated crook story with Betty Compson and Kenneth Harlan.

An average week is claimed by the Tudor with "Black Jack" and "The Bandit's Son," while the New Alamo announces their coffers over-flowed with the showing of five second runs.

Ottawa

TWO holidays in one week—that is what the exhibitors of Ottawa and Hull had during the first week of the new year. In fact, over in Hull, where the theatres are open on Sundays,, it was practically three in a row because of the falling of January 1 on the Sunday. The New Year's Day was legally observed on the Monday, while the Feast of Epiphany, January 6, was a holiday for everybody except that the retail stores were open. The situation helped the theatres materially, particularly in the way of matinee crowds.

All Ottawa raved about Esther Ralston in "The Spotlight," which was the attraction at B. F. Keith's Theatre. The legion of fans thought she was splendid as an actress and in looks, while the story was also excellent.

Mary Pickford performed a come-back with "My Best Girl" at the Regent Theatre, attendance being well above the usual run. Mary's customary type of Cinderella story was well-liked and the picture received wide approval.

"Camille" played its second week at the Centre Theatre. It stood up very well, particularly on the holidays, when there were large crowds. The old, old story was found in "The Kentucky Derby" at the Imperial, but the fans turned out in force here, a good week being registered in the book. The guns roared at the Columbia Theatre for "The Mysterious Rider," starring Jack Holt, and typical neighborhood crowds were thrilled. All ages enjoyed "Captain Salvation" at the Rex Theatre, this stirring photoplay again making a splendid impression in Ottawa. There was a magnetic combination at the Fern Theatre in the presentation of "Casey at the Bat" and the final episode of "House Without a Key." Serials go well here.

Minneapolis

OUTSIDE of three very cold days when sub-zero weather prevailed, this week was a dandy one for the movie theatres. If mild weather had prevailed the entire week, business would have been as good as for any week in recent months. There were some good attractions and the public seemed to like them.

"Wings" came into the Metropolitan as a road show and did a fine business at this house, which usually devotes itself to the legitimate. This "epic of the air" was so popular that it was held over for a second week. "Seventh Heaven" came into the Garrick and did a whale of a business, necessitating its being held over for a second week. The picture had the benefit of some decidedly complimentary newspaper criticisms.

At the State Colleen Moore went strong in "Her Wild Oat,' which had the advantage of a good supplementary stage program. Reginald Denny in "Out All Night" did about average business at Lyric, and "Man Woman and Sin" returned as a second run picture at the Grand, a loop theatre and again proved popular. The Hennepin-Orpheum had a really excellent attraction in "Dress Parade," with William Boyd and Bessie Love, and this picture certainly helped out the regular vaudeville program. Pantages featured Madge Bellamy in "Silk Legs," and the Seventh Street injected some comedy into their program with "Turkish Delight."

Aside from the three cold days, the neighborhood houses enjoyed good crowds, too. The Loring, Rialto and Lagoon showed "Underworld," among other attractions, the American "Madame Pompadour" and the Lyndale "Shanghai Bound." The chief competition for the week was provided by the New York Theatre Guild Repertory Company which came to the Lyceum for five performances and played to big houses.

Des Moines

AT the Des Moines Theatre "Les Miserables" did much better than was expected for it. The week averaged very well, although the picture did not get away to a good start. Trade was slow in getting in, but opinion was generally enthusiastic, and quite a surprise to the management. At the Capitol the feature was a strong one with Colleen Moore in "Her Wild Oat." This star is popular here. The Publix Show, with a chorus of beautiful brides and the main program centered about the joys of matrimony proved popular with some very clever dancers as one of the big hits, and Paul Spor, personality man, winning enthusiastic recalls with his balled. At the Strand "Wild Geese" was a good feature and played a good half week. The week was finished by "The Last Waltz," which did satisfactory business.

Boston

IN spite of the ban against New Year's eve shows, resulting in all theatres remaining dark instead of catering to large crowds as in former years, Boston theatres have enjoyed a good week. Those theatres starting their programs on Saturday night were especially well patronized with the week end holiday swelling receipts.

"Beau Sabreur," a Paramount feature, was the main attraction at the Metropolitan Theatre and was especially well received. While one of the less heralded films, it proved a big attraction for Bostonians and resulted in increasing patronage as the week progressed. Few films, outside the big features, have enjoyed greater appreciation in Boston. "Russian Revels" was the stage presentation.

Crowds filled Loew's State to see Mary Pickford in "My Best Girl" and they were not disappointed. Caesar Rivoli, music master, and operatic gems provided the stage show.

"The Wizard" and "A Sailor's Sweetheart" were the double features at the twin houses, Modern and Beacon, drawing good audiences all week.

"Two Arabian Knights," and "The Fair Co-Ed" was the double bill at the Bowdoin Square for a big week's gross, while other successful films of the week included "Seventh Heaven" at the University, "A Man's Past" at the Allston, "Seventh Heaven" at the Upham's Corner Strand, "Shooting Irons" at the Codman Square, "The Fair Co-Ed" at the Capitol, "Her Wild Oat" at the Washington Street Olympia and the Scollay Square Olympia, "The Gorilla" at the Fenway, "The 13th Hour" at Loew's Orpheum; a double feature bill at the Casino, "Loves of Ricardo" and "Border Blackbird" and "Pajamas" at the Keith-Albee Boston, one of the most successful films yet shown at the Boston.

Baltimore

THE holiday falling on January 2 helped that week in Baltimore to be a banner one for the first run moving picture theatres. But the shows that stood up with excellent patronage during the entire week included Keith's Hippodrome with "In a Moment of Temptation," combined with the Marcus Revue; the Keith-Albee Garden, with "Les Miserables," with eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville; the Rivoli with "Loves of Carmen" and the Rosemount Trubadours and Felice Iula again conducting the orchestra; Loew's Century with "The Spotlight" and Sam Robbins' Baltimoreans in a Bagdad Revue, and the Little Theatre with "Secrets of a Soul," featuring Werner Kraus, Ruth Neyher and Pavel Pavloff.

It was surprising to see how the audience was held through the entire length of "Les Miserables" by the splendid work of the cast, the good direction and the excellent sets. Gabriel Gabrio held them particularly with his powerful portrayal of Jean Valjean.

"Old San Francisco" did only pretty good during its second week at Warner's Metropolitan with Vitaphone presentations. "Come to My House," at the New Theatre, did good business at the matinees, but the evenings were off. The second week for "Love" at Loew's Valencia also proved good at the matinees, but the evenings were not good and "Man Crazy" went over only fairly well, with an entire new type of stage unit entertainment called a Jazz Carnival Revue, featuring Cesare Nesi and others.

Cleveland

THE theatres enjoyed fairly good business last week, even though it was the week after the holidays. "Love" continued to fill the Stillman theatre during the second week of its engagement. "Her Wild Oat" played to average good business all week at the Allen. Keith's Palace reports satisfactory results with "The Valley of the Giants," a picture full of action, fine photography and comedy relief. "Man Crazy," above the average program picture, had a good week at the State. "The Golden Clown," foreign made feature, distinctly out of the ordinary, interesting the deeply tragic, did fairly well at Reade's Hippodrome. "Sally in Our Alley," sure-fire box office attraction, enjoyed popularity at Keith's East 150th St., where it appealed to the whole family. The Park theatre played a first run neighborhood engagement of "Seventh Heaven" with great success, the picture drawing as well as it did when first presented downtown.

Neighborhood houses are suffering from lack of public support, due to unemployment. Legitimate theatre competition was average, with "My Maryland" playing a second week at the Hanna, Earl Carroll's Vanities at the Ohio, "Julius Caesar" at the Little Theatre, and stock and burlesque at the other houses.

Cincinnati

CINCINNATI houses, especially those in the downtown district, are practically back to their normal stride, having recovered from the solar plexus wallup handed them by the holidays, as well as the strong opposition brought about by the recent opening of the new E. F. Albee theatre.

The Capitol hung up a good attendance record with Greta Garbo and John Gilbert in "Love," together with the Vitaphone. The picture was well liked and attendance held up unusually good for the run. "The Spotlight" at the Strand grossed satisfactorily, and got off to a good start for the new year. The Lyric, featuring "Ben Hur' with the road-show musical setting at popular prices, did an excellent business, and the film will be held over for the second week. The stage play is one of the old favorites with Cincinnatians. The Duncan Sisters in "Topsy and Eva" at the Walnut was well liked and well patronized. The Family, playing a split-week policy, showed "Wolf Fangs" for the first half, and "A Hero for a Night" for the last half. Both pictures drew nicely, and resulted in a steady flow of business for the respective engagements.

The new Albee theatre continues to be the cynosure of all patrons, and the house, despite its enormous seating capacity, is comfortably filled at all times. "The Gorilla" was the underlined screen attraction for the week, with a number of presentations, which, although good, were considered by many not to be on a par with the opening week.

Sub-zero weather slowed business up appreciably early in the week, but this was made up for after a few days when the weather moderated.

Milwaukee

ANOTHER week of unusually good business was enjoyed by Milwaukee theatres. Holiday crowds continued to storm the down town theatres where unusually good programs were offered. "Love" at the Merrill was held over for a second week and continued to draw heavily. "The Jazz Singer" at the Garden is proving one of the most popular pictures shown in the city in a long time and is starting its second week of a most successful run. "Get Your Man" delighted the crowds who gathered at the Wisconsin at all performances. The Playboys at this theatre and the incidental acts are in no small measure responsible for the excellent crowds always found here. "A Hero for a Night" was very successful at the Alhambra. "The Gorilla" did fairly well at the Strand. "The Rush Hour" made a strong bid for popularity on the Orpheum bill.

Business was not quite as active in the neighborhood theatres this week as last. Camille was featured at the Uptown, Oriental and Tower theatres with fair patronage. The Magic Flame drew good business at the Milwaukee and Colonial. A Man's Past was fairly popular at the Venetian.

Pittsburgh

WHEN the manager of a theatre smiles and says fine when you ask him how business is you know that the house is doing what he expects it to do which was the case in Pittsburgh at all houses with few exceptions. If the manager says fine and doesn't smile then not so good and probably that was the case at the Olympic and State. The Olympic played "Very Confidential" with Madge Bellamy assisted by a bill of Vitaphone acts.

The Penn with "Sorrell & Son" coupled with a stage show of 40 people did very well, business building each day, a good sign. The Grand assisted by two shows New Year's Night after midnight had a great week with Clara Bow in "Get Your Man" as did the Davis with "No Place To Go" although Eddie Foy and a seven act vaudeville bill did the business and not the picture. The Aldine did just fair with Reginald Denny in "On Your Toes" as the picture was way below the Denny standard of picture. The Harris with "South Sea Love" held up well as did the Cameo doing average with "The 13th Juror" and one of the "Collegians" series.

The neighborhood houses are not doing so good but at the same time considering conditions in other places have nothing to kick about at all. The Gayety, a burlesque house is closing for the season after next week, which is very unusual and picture house competition and the educating of the younger generation against burlesque causes this. Legit houses did well. "King of Kings" at the Nixon the first road show of the year did capacity and is being held over for a second week. "Shanghai Gesture" and "Saturday's Children," both in their second week, did well.

When the new Stanley house opens the theatre map will again be changed and a reorganization will take place as the Penn and the Stanley will get all the business and the rest of the theatres will suffer accordingly, as the new house adds 4,000 seats to the city. Since Labor Day about 7,500 seats have been added including the new Stanley.

Tampa

THE "Happy" New Year arrived, and brought along the coldest weather experienced in Tampa in ten years, and the "hang over" lasted until Friday. In spite of the cold spell the crowds turned out pretty good on Sunday and Monday, running the receipts in all houses to "better than average," but, of course, business was nothing like it would have been had we had the usual brand of Florida weather.

The New Year attraction at the Tampa was "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" which pulled 'em Sunday and Monday, but the cold weather put a crimp into things and the final two days of the run was only average. "A Man's Past" was featured the last half and did as well as could be expected, keeping receipts to average. The picture was well liked.

The Victory had "Pajamas" for Sunday and Monday and did very good. A road show, "Ziegfeld's Follies" held the boards the following two days and the last half with "Fools of Fashion" and the usual five acts of vaudeville drew the average vaudeville business.

The Strand played "The Warning" the first two days to very good returns. "On Your Toes" and "Once and Forever" used the balance of the week drew just about average.

Receipts at the Franklin showed up better the first two days, as in the other houses, but the rest of the week fell a little under average. "Stage Kisses," "The Enchanted Island" and "Gun Gospel" were the pictures featured.

Seattle

BUSINESS in Seattle last week showed two distinct trends—up to 4 p. m. on Christmas Day the motion picture houses were practically empty, but from that time on through the remainder of the week business hit at a high clip in practically all theatres.

Two attractions were really outstanding. The first of these was "Sorrell and Son" at the United Artists Theatre, which did a very big business for a majority of the week, and was held over for a second week's engagement. It was generally considered one of the best films of the season, and piled up a gross that came near hitting some of the previous big record weeks at Manager Perutz's house. A fine musical score and a special holiday overture arranged by Jan Sofer, featuring Arnold Flink, were added attractions on the program.

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre an acceptable film and an acceptable stage show were combined to put business over for a very pleasing gross of about $14,500, all things being considered. The film was "The Gay Defender," which was not highly liked, but at least was an acceptable program film. On the stage was a new type of Fanchon-Marco Idea, featuring "The Rangers," a male chorus of twelve voices, with the assistance of two or three girl dancers. The act was rather "heavy" for a picture theatre specialty, but Hermie King's Christmas specialties with the band and assisting artists helped tremendously. Business very pleasing.

Next in line came John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre with its seventh anniversary show that had something to please everyone, and did a very good business for the entire week. The film feature was "Ham and Eggs at the Front." It was very well received. Additional Vitaphone acts and Movietone News subjects rounded out an exceptionally pleasing holiday bill.

"On Your Toes" at the Columbia Theatre did about the average amount of business. A special Christmas musical program arranged by Francesco Longo was exceptionally pleasing, and the picture was well liked.

At the Liberty Theatre, "Buttons" was put across to about the best gross business that this house has had in several weeks, although it was not a big box office attraction. The picture was apparently quite pleasing to the patrons.

"Blondes by Choice' at the Embassy Theatre, "My Friend from India" at the New Orpheum, and "Ladies Must Dress" at the Pantages, were all average attractions that held up fairly well considering the season. The business at the other two vaudeville-film houses was noticeably lower than average, however, particularly just prior to the Christmas two-day holiday.

Harrisburg

THE first week of the New Year saw a continuation of the big business revival that came to the Harrisburg theatres immediately after Christmas. Capacity audiences were the order at both the Colonial and Loew's Regent. The Victoria had normal box office returns, while the smaller theatres reported very satisfactory receipts

"Seventh Heaven" drew such big crowds to the Colonial that in some instances at night patrons had to be turned away for lack of seats, while many remained standing until seats were vacated. Practically the same conditions prevailed at the Regent, where Lon Chaney, always popular in Harrisburg, starred with Conrad Nagel in "London After Midnight."

Although crowds were so eager to see the New Year's Midnight Matinee, held at 12.01 o'clock Monday morning in the Victoria, that they caused the collapse of the glass-enclosed box office in their rush to get into the theatre, the attendances were smaller there later in the week. The main attraction was "Serenade," with Adolphe Menjou, which, while not as popular as "Seventh Heaven" or the Chaney show, did a fair amount of business.

The New Rialto theatre, Third and Harris streets, reopened on January 2, after having been closed for three weeks for extensive improvements. Both this house and the National, Sixth and Dauphin streets, passed into new control at the first of the year, under the management of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Krupa, formerly of Lancaster, who have taken a five-year lease on them from Isaac Marcus, the owner. The opening bill at the Rialto was "Jesse James," with Fred Thompson, and at the National the offering was Harold Lloyd in "For Heaven's Sake." Both houses did exceptional business the first week under the new management

(Previous Week)

CONSIDRING the Christmas holidays, which naturally kept many families away from the theatres, the St. Louis first runs and neighborhood houses enjoyed fair business during the week that ended on December 30th.

At Loew's State the Feature picture was "Love." During the week Teddy Joyce made his bow as master of ceremonies of the stage shows for this theatre and on the whole business was good for the week. The Ambassador Theatre featured "Her Wild Oat." On the stage Eddie Lowry had a Christmas revue show.

The Missouri Theatre offered Richard Dix in "The Gay Defender." Aided by a stage show arranged by Brooke Johns the receipts were up to average for the season.

On Christmas Day the Vitaphone appeared in St. Louis for the second time. This time the Grand Central at Grand Boulevard and Lucas Avenue is being used for the musical movies. "The Jazz Singer" was the featured picture. There were also a number of Vitaphone vaudeville acts.

The St. Louis Theatre screen attraction was "The Main Event." It was shown in conjunction with several acts of Orpheum Circuit vaudeville. At the down town Orpheum the screen offering was "The College Hero."

..The Grand Opera House, the city's third vaudeville house showed "Pretty Clothes" as its photoplay.

"The King of Kings" closed its special road run at the American Theatre on December 31.

Kansas City

NEW YEAR'S week proved a surprise from a standpoint of attendance at first run houses in Kansas City. With sub-zero temperatures holding sway, few theatre managers held forth for anything resembling good business, but the week's attendance proved far better than that during Christmas week, when more agreeable weather prevailed.

At Loew's Midland Clara Bow in "Get Your Man" did a lively business all week, the same applying to Adolphe Menjou in "Serenade" at the Newman. At the Pantages "East Side, West Side" played to large crowds all week, while "Isle of Forgotten Women" enjoyed a brisk attendance at the Capitol. "The Valley of the Giants" at the Mainstreet attracted a normal attendance, but Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" packed them in at the Globe. "The Harvester" at the Liberty also did a good week's business.

New Orleans

MOVING picture business in New Orleans showed a big slump during the past week. The weather was freezing cold and many theatre-goers preferred to stay close to the living-room fireplace rather than journey forth to the downtown cinema houses. Strong attractions were featured at the first run theatres.

"The Texas Steer,' with Will Rogers and Louise Fazenda, coupled with five acts of vaudeville headed by Leona LaMar, noted psychic and thought reader, was the Loew State feature. The theatre did a very good business. Rogers appeared in New Orleans in person some weeks ago in the interest of flood relief work and was the star at a mammoth midnight performance for the benefit of the flood sufferers, for which he donated his services. He raised more than $40,000 that single night, and the way Orleanians flocked to Loew's State proved that they appreciated what the humorist did for the sufferers of the state. However, the thought reader can be given much credit for drawing them to the popular playhouse.

Lon Chaney has a large following here and the business of the new Saenger Theatre was next to that of Loew's State. Lon was featured in "London After Midnight."

Olive Borden in "The Joy Girl," was the Orpheum feature, but business was not up to average, even though the photoplay was presented with six acts of Orpheum circuit vaudeville.

The Palace Theatre, in addition to its feature photoplay, showed a comedy made up of a cast of local children and a musical comedy show Business was good here and credit for it goes to the local made movie. "Ladies Must Dress" was the screen feature.

The Crescent Theatre experienced a bad week. "The Tigress," with Jack Holt and Dorothy Revier, was the screen feature, shown in conjunction with a musical tab show.

"The Love Mart," with Billie Dove and Gilbert Roland, was the Strand Theatre feature, and did well, while "The Lovelorn," at the Liberty Theatre couldn't seem to attract much business.

Although "My Best Girl," with Mary Pickford, had its local premiere elsewhere, the Globe did a nice business. "Man, Woman and Sin," the John Gilbert vehicle at the Trianon, did not do very well as it was shown at the new Saenger and it was there that the crowds flocked to see it.

"What Price Glory" was featured at the new Lyceum but it was too cold for patrons to venture out to see it.

New Orleanians took to the neighborhood houses during the cold spell, and where pictures are good the patronage is always good.

Albany

THE big outstanding feature in Albany last week from the standpoint of the box office was "Sorrell and Son," at the Mark Strand. This picture, handicapped perhaps a bit by its title, drew like a house afire, crowding "Ben Hur," which came within an ace of establishing a record several weeks ago, and proving one of the biggest and best bets of the winter for the Stanley house. The picture opened on New Year's Day to tremendous business, in fact it became necessary to stop the sale of tickets at various times during the day and evening. It was the one picture in Albany and Troy that did good business last week.

At the Mark Ritz, "Her Wild Oat" opened on Monday to tremendous business, as might be expected from the fact that it was a holiday. Later on the attendance dropped off a bit, the picture drawing just about what a Richard Dix attraction would pull in. At the Clinton Square, "The Satin Woman" did not pan out very well. In fact it was a disappointment from the box office standpoint. At the Leland, "Becky" opened big on Monday, in fact to hold-out business from two to nine o'clock that day, although not doing anything to brag about for the remainder of the week. It did, however, better than "The Flaming Frontier." Proctor's anniversary week used "The Girl from Chicago," to good effect with its vaudeville. In Troy, "When a Man Loves," running for the first of the week at the Troy theatre panned out a bit better than fair, with "Silk Legs" failing to measure up. At the Lincoln, "Old San Francisco" did better than "If I were Single" on a split week.

Des Moines

BUSINESS was good at all the Des Moines theatres for the Christmas week and Mr. Watts at the Capitol did nicely on his morning show for the youngsters especially on "Robinson Crusoe," color film. The main feature at the Capitol was "Serenade" which fitted in very nicely with the Publix Stage show of "Dixie Land." At the Des Moines the feature film was "Love" and this picture made a good impression. At the Strand "The Harvester" did a very good business. The popularity of the book was considered the draw for this picture, which was on for the first half of the week. For the last half of the week the feature was "Tea for Three," which, with Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle as stars, was a light bill, but it did very well.

San Diego

AT the Cabrillo the Victor Hugo classic, "Les Miserables," proved a good drawing card until all the cultured people had seen it, attendance being kept up by the [illegible] lege and other clubs. "Two Arabian Knights" packed the house during the two weeks it was shown at the Cabrillo. The Duncan Sisters in "Topsy and Eva" did not pull and after less than a week the management changed the bill. Model airplanes from the government air station on North Island added interest to the lobby at the Cabrillo during the showing of "Now We're in the Air," which had a good run.

"She's a Sheik," featuring Bebe Daniels, went big at the New California. Billie Dove in "American Beauty" proved good entertainment value at this house. For "Take-a-chance Week" the California put on an unusually good program, giving as the picture feature "The Spotlight," with Esther Ralston and Neil Hamilton starring.

The Fairmount, the third of the local West Coast houses, is doing a good business. It has a four-change-a-week program, and takes on the features after their showing at the Cabrillo and the New California.

At the Plaza the biggest drawing card the house has had in many months was found in "Old San Francisco," which was held on for three weeks straight with heavy patronage throughout that period. "Slightly Used" with May McAvoy proved another box-office joy-maker, showing to full houses during its stay there. It was followed by another success, "Wild Geese." The Vitaphone is proving a most popular feature of the Plaza's program.

The Balboa, under its popular priced scale of admission, is enjoying a good business under its new management. Its program includes four or five vaudeville acts, with a feature picture, such as "Broadway Nights," "The Irresistible Lover," etc.

All of the 10 and 15 cent houses enjoyed good patronage during the pre-Christmas period as the holiday buying brought many people down for the evening shopping afforded by the merchants.

San Francisco

THE week before New Year's Night, was a prosperous one in the down town and residential motion picture theatres. The children, it seems, made a habit of visiting the different show houses as they had vacation in this city and many spent their "Xmas Money" that way. It was their greatest treat, it seems. Cold weather and rain also helped fill the theatres.

"Quality Street," together with the presentation act "Welsh Gentlemen" and other stunts, shown on the Granada Stage more than filled the theatre the first two nights and remarkable business was reported by the management for the balance of the week. "Her Wild Oat," shown at the Loew's Warfield Theatre, together with the presentation act, "Kiddie's Revue," brought big business to that theatre.

"Old Ironsides" did well at the St. Francis Theatre, this picture shown here for the first time at popular prices. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" was shown the second week at the California Theatre, but not as much as was expected was taken in during the showing of that picture. The receipts were fair.

The Golden Gate Theatre did remarkably well with the comedy "Home Made" and vaudeville acts. The Union Square Theatre reporting big business with "The Cancelled Debt." "The Canyon of Light" drew many to the doors of the Cameo Theatre as did "The Big Parade," a second showing, at the Capitol, and local down-town theatre.

During the Holiday Season, all the theatres were especially decorated, and no money was spared to make everyone comfortable.

Opinions on Pictures

Gateway of the Moon

Obvious Adventure Story—Just Fair

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THEY'VE tacked on a colorful title here —one which sings of romance and which should attract the customers. But after the boys and girls have looked it over those who know their celluloid won't rise up and shout, "Here's something for the records." It is just an ordinary film which gets into high dudgeon or other along the banks of the Amazon. It offers Dolores del Rio a seductive role—that of a half-breed Indian girl. It is her problem to find happiness after a climax which reveals her being bartered off by her uncle to a deadly enemy in order that he may learn some valuable information.

So Dolores del Rio vamps the youth and conquers him for keeps after he has exposed the deep-dyed villainy. There is a lot of hectic action, showing native peons being humbled and enslaved and beaten before they declare themselves in on an uprising and destroy their enemies. The love interest keeps apace with the melodramatic incident and finishes with the girl striking it off for a more decent civilization.

Drawing Power: The title has appeal. So has Miss del Rio. Play them up. Exploitation Angles: Feature the title and bill as a lively adventure picture. Play up star as one of the most talented newcomers.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928.

THEME: Romantic melodrama of heroine who refuses to obey villainous uncle. Meets right man and has love affair.

Cast: Dolores del Rio, Anders Randolf, Walter Pidgeon, Leslie Fenton, Ted McNamara, Adolf Miller, Noble Johnston. Director, John Griffith Wray.

The Circus

Good Fun and Interesting, but Not a Masterpiece

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SCREEN appearances are pretty rare for Charlie Chaplin. He's been long enough with "The Circus" to have accomplished something extraordinary. Whether because of his domestic trouble or other worries it seems that the picture is not another masterpiece like "Shoulder Arms." True, it has its fun—oodles of it, and there is imagination behind it. But taken in its entirety one cannot call it an inspired comedy by any means. One looks for so much from Chaplin. Perhaps he's been called a genius too often. In looking for miracles we discover that he's quite human after all.

This is not to become analytical here. The piece is fine entertainment any way you take it. And Chaplin presents another magnificent portrait of his inimitable self in the role of a tramp, attired in the usual Chaplinesque manner. Hitting it off without much worry he is again the much-abused, pathetic figure trying to make the best of his resources. The piece is familiar and employs much slapstick, yet when the comedian pretends to be serious he uncovers deep wells of pathos. Here he hits it off with the sideshow of a wagon circus and is kept on as a clown. The pathos enters when he discovers that a tight-rope walker has first call on the romance. It is Charlie's job to make them happy together.

These are the simple facts of the case. Once in a while the comedy becomes extravagant, but most of the time it tells its story with fine simplicity—with emphasis placed upon the human traits of characterization. Chaplin is still the superb pantomimist. There is no one quite in his class. Merna Kennedy is both natural and charming as the romantic figure.

Drawing Power: Chaplin's name and popularity will attend to the crowds. O. K. for any house. Should be a sell-out. Exploitation Angles: Play up star and fact that this is his first picture in two years. Feature circus atmosphere. Go the limit.

THEME: Comedy of humble character who gets in and out of tight situations. Joins circus, wins laughs and brings happiness to others.

Produced by Charles Chaplin. Distributed by United Artists.

Length, eight reels. Released, January, 1928.

Cast: Charles Chaplin, Merna Kennedy, Betty Morrissey, Harry Crocker, Allan Garcia, Henry Bergman, George Davis, John Rand, Steve Murphy, Doc Stone. Director, Charles Chaplin.

A Perfect Gentleman

Monty Banks' Vehicle Is Funny Now and Then

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

EVERY once in a while this new Monty Banks becomes funny—at times very funny—and then subsides to an average level until a few more laughs come hurtling over. There is no high or subtle comedy here, and it is all very apparent, but as the unsophisticated folk outnumber the more discriminating by about two to one, Monty's antics will get laughs, occasionally uproarious ones. It ought to get a successful response from the neighborhood audiences.

Monty is a bank teller soon to be married to the bank president's daughter. Due to an unfortunate circumstance he becomes merrily drunk just before the wedding, which is called off because of his infantile actions before the wedding guests. Upon regaining soberness, Monty is informed by a fellow bank clerk, a rascal, that he had, in his drunken state, assaulted policemen with such a vengeance that the best thing for him to do would be to get out of the country.

On board ship with the other clerk's bags, which, unknown to him, contain money stolen from the bank, he proceeds to become the hub of a series of complications. A band of revolutionists are after him, the captain of the ship suspects him as a Don Juan with dangerous tendencies, and, in general, life is miserable for him. He discovers that the money in the bags belongs to the bank and that without the money the girl's father is ruined. From then on, he outwits the revolutionists, eludes the ship captain, and finally smooths out everything nicely to the satisfaction of all except the revolutionists.

Drawing Power: About good. Exploitation Angles: Take note of suggestions offered in the Pathe press book.

THEME: Comedy of bank clerk's difficulties in winning daughter of the president of the bank.

Distributed by Pathe. Released, January 15, 1928. Length, 5,626 feet. The Cast: Monty Banks, Ruth Dwyer, Henry Barrows, Ernest Wood, Arthur Thalasso, Hazel Howell, Agostino Bergato, Mary Fox, Syd Crossley, Jackie Coombs. Story by Charles Horan. Director, Clyde Bruckman.

Fangs of the Wild

Dog Vehicle Is Only Fair

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

AN average program picture is this story supplied Ranger, the dog star. In it you will find rabid action that does not approach at any time plausibility. It's make-believe, all right.

Dorothy Kitchen has the role of the girl of the hills. She has a drunken sot of a father and has to accept the unwelcome attentions of a mountain oaf with whom her parent is intimate.

Into her life comes young Sam Nelson as the son of a railroad executive who is seeking the girl's land for his road. They fall in love and the usual difficulties are forthcoming. While he is on his way to the girl's cabin with money with which to buy the property, Nelson is set upon by the mountain lout with a murderous dog as an ally. Nelson throws the money to Ranger, who runs away with it. When the dog returns to the scene he finds that Nelson is hanging by his hands on a few roots on the side of the cliff. Turning about, Ranger springs upon the oaf's dog and kills him after a trying struggle. Then he goes to the rescue of his master by throwing a rope down to him and running it around a tree and bracing himself while the rescue is effected. Both Nelson and the dog go after the murderous lout who is attacking the girl. The lout takes a trouncing from all hands and must, perforce, leave the country. It is wedding bells for Nelson and Dorothy.

Only fair is "Fangs of the Wild"; there's too much of the mediocre in it.

Drawing Power: Fair. Exploitation Angles: Inasmuch as the picture stars a dog you might stage a dog show or some other sort of canine publicity stunt.

THEME: Story of dog who assists young mistress and her lover from murderous assaults of crazy mountaineer.

Produced and Distributed by FBO. Released, February 5, 1928. Length, 4,578 feet. The Cast: Ranger (dog), Dorothy Kitchen, Sam Nelson, Tom Lingham, Sid Crossley. Story by D. Yost and D. Cummings. Director, Jerome Storm.

The Boss of Rustler's Roost

A New Star Makes Good Impression

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

DAN COLEMAN, Leo Maloney's protege for cowboy honors, makes his first screen appearance in this Western, a fair example of entertainment. The newcomer is a nice looking chap, tall and lean, and very serious of visage. He had the benefit of direction from Maloney, who knows exactly what is required of a Western hero. Thanks to Maloney he is not called on to do the usual assortment of superhuman feats that almost every central figure in this type of entertainment must generally execute. He is a little more human, a little more convincing than the average Westerner because some limit has been exercised in the number and manner of his heroics.

The story, by Ford I. Beebe, is of an average sort, and not so nearly as well done as the majority of those he wrote for the Maloney vehicles. It unfolds the tale of a young man and his friend who buy a ranch bearing an ill name, and by doing so win the enmity of one of the section's leading cattleman who has a charming daughter, a part played by the sugary Eugenia Gilbert.

The young man and his friend resist all attempts to oust them from the ranch and defy the bitter ranchman to do his worst; the rustlers, kindly, do not overlook his herd when they renew their rustling activities. Trailing the rustlers by the tracks of a broken horse shoe, Coleman discovers their hideaway. He thinks the girl's father is in back of it all until a ranger attempts to arrest the man. Fearing that he will speak, the real rustler, who has been hiding his identity as foreman on the girl's ranch, attempts to kill him, but is unsuccessful.

When he tries to run off with the girl the evil foreman is knocked down by Coleman, and afterwards falls a victim to the hoofs of onrushing cattle.

Goods points of the film are the performance of Coleman, the smooth direction of Maloney and the element of mystery that confronts the characters until they discover the ingenious method in which their herds had been rustled.

Drawing Power: Fair. Star is new to the customers. Exploitation Angles: Your usual methods of ballyhoo.

THEME: Western drama of young ranchman against rustlers.

Produced by Leo Maloney Productions. Distributed by Pathe. Released, January 22, 1928. Length, 4,833 feet. The Cast: Dan Coleman, Ben Corbett, Tom London, Albert Hart, Dick Hatton, Frank Clark, William Bertram, Chet Ryan, Eugenia Gilbert. Director, Leo Maloney.

The Branded Sombrero

Thrilling Western with Much Action

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BUCK JONES can usually be counted upon to mete out a full parcel of thrills, and he has not failed to do so in this one. While the story, of course, is illogical, it serves its purpose of providing entertainment, and it gives the star full scope to display his talents.

There is action a-plenty from the time the story starts until the final sequence is reeled off, and Buck is always the central figure. His fight with the villain atop the moving freight train is a real thriller, as is the battle in the railway station, and the saving of the hero by his faithful horse.

The story is an improvement on the usual run of these westerns despite some of its incredulous sequences. The toning down of the villainous angles would make it far more logical, but that might detract from the heroism of the star, and star heroism in these westerns is evidently what the multitude craves.

The cast supporting Jones is a capable one and does its work well. Leila Hyams in the leading feminine role is pleasing from any angle from which she might be surveyed and one does not blame Buck for putting up such a valiant fight in her behalf. Jack Baston is the villain and there is never a chance to doubt it. Leo Kelly is the weakling step-brother of the hero and fits well into his unsympathetic role.

Drawing Power: The star has a big following and the picture should only add to his prestige. It should go very well where they like their westerns. Exploitation Angles: The fierce fight between the star and villain on top of the fast moving freight train; the battle in the railroad station. The press sheet offers a number of good suggestions.

THEME: Western in which ranch owner on his death bed confides to his two sons that he rustled cattle in his youth on which to start his ranch, the number of head stolen from each outfit being shown on his branded sombrero. The elder son after much effort repays each outfit and saves the weaker son from prison.

Distributed by Fox. Released January 8, 1928. Length 4,612 feet. Cast: Buck Jones, Leila Hyams, Jack Baston, Stanton Heck, Francis Ford, Josephine Borio, Lee Kelly. Directed by Lambert Hillyer. Story by Cherry Wilson.

Baby Mine

Some Amusing Tomfoolery—That's About All

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S a lot of tomfoolery spun through celluloid here, taking form in a pattern that calls for episodic incidents strung together. Once upon a time it served as farcical fare on the stage—and it made quite a hit. Adapted to the screen it hasn't lost any of its zest, but it has lost a deal of its flavor. The comedy of the footlights goes slapstick. The appeal is made for diaphragm laughter instead of the quiet chuckle.

So it shapes up as amusing in its way, though entirely inconsequential. The two fun-makers of "Rookies," Karl Dane and George Arthur, work hard for their laughs, but the piece hasn't the spontaneity to make their efforts natural. Charlotte Greenwood (she of lanky leg fame) also contributes her share of the fun, along with a midget.

It is all quite harum-scarum. Once in a while it releases an explosive bit of humor. Messrs. Dane and Arthur have no real opportunity to display any character work.

Drawing Power: Depends on popularity of comedians and whether the title can help. O. K. for average houses. Exploitation Angles: Tease the title and capitalize stars, both of whom have made good in "Rookies," and Dane, particularly, in "The Big Parade."

THEME: Farce-comedy of romantic entanglements.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: Karl Dane, George K. Arthur, Louise Lorraine, Charlotte Greenwood. Director, Robert Z. Leonard.

On Your Toes

Fair Enough for Most Any Screen

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE title gives it all away. You know the minute Reginald Denny makes his entrance that he will emerge at the finish a highly successful youth. It's something of a character study—something reminiscent of the star's earlier pieces in that he returns to the prize ring to make good.

Playing the part of a much mollycoddled youngster tied to his grandmother's apron strings he shakes the dust from the ballroom (yes, if you must know, he comes on, a teacher of dancing) and reverts to type. His old man was a fighter who knocked 'em cold. That's why the grandmother takes him in tow. But blood tells, and the dancing man shows deft footwork in the ring, and a good punch. Which are sufficient to make him win the championship and the girl.

Rather familiar, isn't it? Well, it can't be called novel by any means, but it keeps going, and does very well. The best scenes are conceived with training and fighting activities, the climax being particularly wallopy. There are some humorous episodes, a good piece of acting by Mary Carr, and some first-rate atmosphere.

Drawing Power: Denny's popularity and the title. Suitable for average houses anywhere. Exploitation Angles: Feature the prize-ring flavor. Tell of the making over of a mollycoddle. Play up Denny as starring in a film made for his personality.

THEME: Comedy-drama of mollycoddle made over into a fighting he-man.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: Reginald Denny, Barbara Worth, Hayden Stevenson, Frank Hagney, Mary Carr, Gertrude Howard. George West. Director, Fred Neumeyer.

"Character Studies"

(Educational—One Reel)

CARTER DE HAVEN, whom exhibitors will remember as having appeared in comedies several years back, tries his hand at something new in this reel devoted to a sort of hoodwinking the fans with what are supposed to be a series of imitations of screen stars—Harold Lloyd, Fatty Arbuckle, Buster Keaton and others. De Haven will go through all the motions of making up his features and assuming disguises but when he has raised himself from a stooping position any one who knows the movie stars can tell that the real character has assumed De Haven's place. You become convinced in your suspicions when you see the small figure of Jackie Coogan appear where a minute or two before had stood De Haven.

The production is of a surprising type, and will serve as a novelty on an exhibitor's program.—RAYMOND GANLY.

"Family Frolics"

(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

GRANTLAND RICE has taken family groups of athletes as the basis for this Sportlight and as usual he presents it in an attractive and interesting manner. Eddie Driggs, Metropolitan golf champion is shown on the links with his father and young son and the three generations show marked skill with the different clubs.

The Meany family, which totals enough to fill almost any pool, is displayed in water antics, with Miss Helen, the star diver featured. The ages range apparently from about three years up and all are adept in the water. Other champions in various lines are also shown to add to the attractiveness of this good reel.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Spook Spoofing"

(Roach-M-G-M—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

OUR GANG comes back into its own again with this latest of the Roach fun-films, which is again up to the standard of the good ones after a couple in the series that were not so good. The kids have some great material in this one and it fairly bulges with laughs from start to finish. A forsaken graveyard is the locale, with the time mid-day of the day of a total sun eclipse. It is not too hard to realize the terror that strikes the gang under these conditions, and what is not supplied by the locale and the elements is well provided in the way of props.

The gang frames Farina and makes him think he has accidentally killed Harry. They suggest as the best way out of the difficulty he bury his victim himself in the deserted graveyard. He places Harry in a sack and proceeds with his unwelcome task. Meantime the other kids have equipped themselves with all sorts of spooky devices and follow him to the cemetery. Then comes the unheralded eclipse and the gang becomes separated. Their own spooky devices react against each other while the wildest consternation ensues. They all eventually land in an underground vault as the eclipse passes. It is evident that a lot of thought was put into this comedy, as not an opportunity was overlooked that would contribute a laugh. They are of the spontaneous variety rather than the rough and tumble or custard pie type. It is by all means the best of the Our Gang series seen for some time.

"The Beach Club"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BILLY BEVAN and Madeline Hurlock are the featured players in this comedy which was directed by Harry Edwards. It is very ordinary in its situations and depends largely upon slapstick for its humor. There is really little that is funny about it, though Bevan tries hard to make it so.

There is not even the semblance of a story. Bevan is of the offensive type of club member who is continually butting in and framing gags that result in the discomfiture of the other members. And, while this is going on, the Sennett bathing girls, for some unexplainable reason, are lolling about the pool tables in bathing suits. They are decorative to the picture only, while Miss Hurlock has little to do but pose in her elegance.

Of the entirely disjointed sequences the one that livens the picture up most is that in which all hands are plunged into a bathing pool that becomes electrically charged. Aside from that it is difficult to recall anything worthy of mention.

"The Man Without a Face"

(Pathe Serial—10 Chapters)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is certainly enough action in the first three chapters of this newest Pathe Serial to warrant the belief that it will hold the interest right through the last episode. Judging by the intrigue and the complications that have already arisen it would take at least ten chapters to unravel the difficulties that the players are already engulfed in.

Allene Ray and Walter Miller, popular serial artists, are co-starred in this one, which was directed by Spencer Bennet from the story by A. M. Williamson. The screen version was done by Joseph Anthony Roach.

There is not an instant lost in plunging the principals into the difficulties that are going to pursue them for the next several weeks. The opening shot is that of a bank holdup, in which the daring of the young teller, Walter Miller, results in the capture of the yeggs after considerable shooting.

The bank president has been looking for a young man of the courage of Miller for some time to accomplish a dangerous mission. Sister heiresses to a vast American fortune are known to be in a town in China in which a great rebellion is in progress. The assignment to locate them and return with them to America is given Miller.

At the same time, the Man Without A Face, for reasons yet to be divulged, is determined that this party shall never return to America, and sends an envoy of his own to see that they do not. Miller, as James Brisbane, has no trouble locating the girls and telling them of his good fortune, but at the same time sinister interests start working against their progress to the boat that will bring them back.

Their first adventure finds them between the gunfire of the two combating forces and the two girls are temporarily safely piloted through the danger zone. Next their progress is impeded when a big gun barrage is laid down in their immediate path, and then the home to which they have been conveyed by a presumably friendly Chinese guide, is blown up. This leaves you fairly gaping for next week's episode. It's all very thrilling if you like your serial.

"All For Nothing"

(Roach-M-G-M—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

CHARLEY CHASE is always good for a bundle of laughs. He is just about as consistent as they come in the short comedy field. His material is usually ahead of the average and if it falls down a trifle his comedy antics make up for whatever is lacking.

In this one Charley has a good story and a wealth of gags. Even the most cynical would have to laugh at his pantomimic battle with himself as antagonist with the lower part of his anatomy shielded by a table and the astounded cafe visitors, including his wife, looking on in horror.

Charley brings an actor friend home to dinner without advising his wife beforehand, and trouble ensues, with the result that Charley and the friend depart for the theatre. His wife goes there to apologise and enters the dressing room while the actor is on the stage and Charley is playing with his disguises. He deceives his wife and the actor, falling in with the plot, persuades her to accompany Charley with him and a friend to the cafe, where they say Charlie is also to be present.

Charley excuses himself from the table, doffs his moustache and appears as himself. Quick changes from the real Chase to the disguised Chase follow, until he declares he will get his wife's boy friend. Then ensues the fight behind the tables between Charley and himself, until an inebriate interferes and is hurled out the window by the comedian. His wife rushes to him and the Chase moustache partly slips off unknown to him, but ending the deception, which brings about new complications and additional laughs.

"Start Something"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE McGinis family goes in for crystal gazing in this one of the "Keeping Up with the Joneses" series, and thereby they involve themselves in the usual difficulties. The gazer, after exposing to the audience the past of the McGinises, in which he was a hod carrier and she a washer woman, makes a prediction that they will have a mysterious visitor at their home that night.

Their nerves are consequently on edge as midnight approaches and they heard weird noises and see strange sights. In fact it is a good deal of a bedlam as things progress and an agent arrives to have McGinis sign some papers. He, too, becomes implicated in the rough and tumble stuff, which, however, is eventually calmed down by his explanation.

It is all the veriest knockout and slapstick comedy and it continues ceaselessly from start to finish. Then when there is nothing else to keep the action going the McGinises manage to stir up a family brawl.

"A Low Necker"

(Fox-Imperial—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE injection of a horse into these preceedings is the method employed to bring about its comedy situations, and they are many, in fact, too many. By one means or another this horse is prominent in dining room, bed room and even bath room sequences, such is his fondness for the hired girl, who eventually becomes his jockey and wins the derby for the Colonel.

It is the roughest kind of knockabout comedy with everybody striving too hard to keep the humor too continuous. Marjorie Beebe is the hired girl and she has her humorous moments during which she takes a vast amount of punishment with some of her falls. She is probably a capable comedienne, but the vehicle is one that asks of her only the roughest kind of knockabout stuff. The others in the cast are Norman Peck, Arthur Millette, John Hilliard and Trixie, the horse. None of them will add to their reputations through this picture.

The story, if it were handled in a less humorous vein, might be a fairly good one. The Colonel has wagered his all on the result of the coming race, but the horse is so unmanagable that no one is capable of handling him. The steed has taken a fancy to the hired girl, and is most docile in her hands, but she is not a rider. However, she is pressed into the service as a last resort, and, of course, wins the race. The possibilities of the tale are ruined by too much of the ridiculous comedy, some few episodes of which, however, are really funny.

"Run, Girl, Run"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

WHILE DAPHNE POLLARD heads the cast in this comedy, the Sennett bathing girls garner most of the limelight. There are some sequences that present them in color in a series of tabloids and they are not at all hard to gaze upon. As a matter of fact it would be a better picture if there were more of these color sequences and the comedy effort were cut down a trifle.

Miss Pollard, of the eccentric type of comedienne, is humorous in her way and injects many laughs into a fair story. She is coach of the girls' athletic team and must win from the rival school to retain her job. She accomplishes this largely through the efforts of Carole Lombard, who is featured with her. Miss Lombard is a beauteous and shapely blonde who wins the final dash for the college championship.

The other Sennett girls pose for the most part in their athletic uniforms, but inject a dash of fun here and there. They are at their best, however, in the color sequences, which are no part of the story, but are just injected here and there in spots. The picture was directed by Alf Goulding.

"By Correspondence"

(Universal—One Reel)

ARTHUR LAKE undergoes a fraternity initiation by correspondence in this one-reeler. The idea is a good one and should have made a splendid comedy but for the fact that too much effort was made to overcrowd it with humor, some of which is good. Much of it, however, is too ridiculous to be funny.

Among other things, Lake is instructed to hang from the chandelier by his heels. He does so to such length that the plaster gives way, and the room is wrecked. Then he is sent to call on his girl with the understanding that he is not to speak a word. It is particularly embarrassing, as his rival is there. As a final stunt he is compelled to run down the street clad only in his pajamas and to yell, "Fire." The responding firemen toss him in a blanket and then into a refuse car. While in this predicament his girl and the boy friend arrive in the latter's roadster. Arthur puts a fast one over and drives off with the girl.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Pass the Gravy"

(Roach-M-G-M—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

HERE is one of the funniest two reel comedies this reviewer has seen in a projection room for many months. It has a humorous story to start with, and its gags fit in so nicely with the scheme of things that the tale never for a moment slackens up while it is building to its funniest climax.

Max Davidson is the star, and he is supported by a cast of exceptional purveyors of comedy in Martha Sleeper, Bert Sprotte, Gene Morgan and Spec O'Donnell. Miss Sleeper and Morton inject some dance steps and gags in carrying out some of the leading comedy sequences that are real gems of humor. Spec's pantomimic description of how he killed the prize chicken by mistake is also a masterpiece of comedy, as is his work in general. As a matter of fact the comedy is equally divided among the cast, with each member making a contribution that adds to the complete success of the picture.

Max Davidson, his daughter, Martha Sleeper, and his son, Spec, are next door neighbors of Bert Sprotte and his son, Gene Morgan. Sprotte is a German and a hard-boiled chicken fancier with a grand prize winning bird. The neighbors are enemies until the son and daughter of the families announce their engagement. Then Max prepares for the families to celebrate with a chicken dinner and he gives Spec two bucks with which to buy the chicken. As Spec starts for the store the chicken flies across the fence. Spec needs the two bucks for other purposes so he inveigles the chicken into a position where it is at his complete mercy.

The chicken is served the combined families and adorning its drum-stick is the metallic band which denotes its former championship timber. The discovery of the band is first made by Spec, who retires from the room ill. He calls the attention of the engaged pair to it, as the drumstick is served by Max to the owner of the chicken. The engaged couple retires from the room endeavoring to call Max's attention to the metal band. It is at this stage that they inject their humorous dance steps and other laugh-producing antics. Max eventually learns what the commotion is about and, after numerous attempts to rescue the drumstick, it is hurled about from one to the other until the owner of the chicken learns the truth, which brings about one of the most humorous incidents of a picture that is just chock full of laughs.

"Felix the Cat in Behind in Front"

(Educational—One Reel)

THE Pat Sullivan cat responds to the call of country and tramps off to war in "Behind in Front." He goes "over there" where the whining bullets and the shrieking shells are playing havoc with everything, displays marvelous valor in battle and comes home on a furlough as a reward for his bravery. Though it is not as good as some of his previous vehicles, this latest Felix opus has several good gags and a lot of snap. As usual, the cartoon drawings and animation are done carefully and well.

Felix first heard the calls of arms simultaneously with his master, a villager whom he must love dearly if you are to judge by the blissful expression on the cat's face when he rubs his sides against the man's legs. Felix tramped along at his master's side, even carrying him and his pack when he collapsed with weariness. In the height of battle when the enemy has launched a powerful offensive the cat turns them back with a barrage of frankfurters—an ammunition he is forced to use when he discovers that his bullets are gone.

One incident that will produce a laugh is that where a French peasant girl attracts Felix' master with the compelling quality of her glance. Another good bit is the scene where the cat's master bids good bye to the animals on his farm, even giving a sad hand shake to the pump handle. Good stuff.—RAYMOND GANLY.

Newsreel Resume

The annual Tournment of the Roses in Pasadena and the Marine reinforcements boarding ship for the Canal Zone were the two stories that stood out this week from the others presented by the newsreels. Secondary in the amount of footage that they received were the items concerning Lindbergh in his hop over the Caribbean countries and the ex sailor mayor of Newburyport, Mass., a unique character for such a post and one whom the press has taken cognizance of.

The contents of the various reels were as follows:

Display advertising which exploited "London After Midnight" at some of the first run houses is shown in the layout above. The star's newest characterization is played up effectively by use of press book cuts. The ads shown are those of the following theatres: Loew's Temple, Birmingham; Court, Wheeling; Circle, Indianapolis; Loew's Grand, Atlanta; and Florida theatre, Jacksonville.

Regional News from Correspondents

Portland Ore.

PLANS are now in their final stages for the immediate erection of a $250,000 movie house in Eugene, Ore., by Calvin Heilig, local theatre owner, according to W. A. McGee, manager of the old Heilig, in that town.

Jimmy Linn, popular Fox manager, has returned to his local post, after a two weeks' sojourn to Seattle, where he was on conference with Seattle Fox officials. William FitzHenry, booker, was in charge during Linn's absence.

Everyone over at the First National exchange is wondering who the new branch manager will be, as Les Davis, formerly head of the exchange, was promoted to the Seattle office, with no successor named as yet.

L. O. Lukan, First National district manager, is expected in town shortly, and no doubt a manager will be named. Bill Walsh, booker, is at present in charge.

W. E. Tebbetts opened his magnificent $500,000 Oriental theatre last week. A large symphony orchestra, led by Josef Srodka, is to be a feature of the house. Tebbetts has bought F B O, Pathe and Tiffany product for his new house, which is to be independently operated by himself. Tebbetts was formerly connected with West Coast Theatres, disposing his Hollywood, State and Highway theatres to West Coast a year ago.

It seems that Herschel Stuart, northwest chief for West Coast Theatres, is trying to imitate Jimmy Grainger, as concerns traveling. Stuart is making his territory about every three days.

Sam Maurice, Stuart's assistant, is in town, putting over some advertising and publicity stunts at the Broadway theatre.

Ike Geller, who owns the Walnut Park theatre, last week opened his new theatre at Milwaukee and Powell streets. The theatre will be known as Geller's theatre, having a seating capacity of 760, with a large stage for novelty attractions.

It is rumored that West Coast theatres are to close or dispose of the Liberty theatre. This house has been "in the red" for the past few months.

Allan Cushman, publicity man at the Broadway, has been transferred to Los Angeles, where he will be assistant manager in one of the W. C. houses.

Walt McCable, local sportsman and graduate of the University of Oregon, is Cushman's successor.

Hal Murphy, local manager for the Orpheum, came in for much newspaper publicity when he refused to exhibit the Pathe newsreel of the capture of William Edward Hickman, slayer of little Marion Parker. Hickman was captured in Pendelton, Ore., and, although the exhibition of the newsreel at the Orpheum might have meant extra business, Murphy figured that it might cause disorder in the house, and, as a result, decided not to show the pictures.

Universal has finally signed a 20 years' lease on the new $250,000 movie playhouse that Ralph Lloyd, wealthy Los Angeles oil magnate, is to build. Lloyd will build the house at Union and Killingsworth streets, which is a very progressing and growing neighborhood. Ground has already been broken for the structure, which will seat 1,600.

Wes Johnson, formerly advertising clerk at the loca First National exchange, has joined the Columbia theatre staff, as assistant and publicity man to Bert Levy, manager.

Portland's film row had two additions last week. One was the return of Louie Amacker, branch manager for Metro, the other being Tillie Withers, big chief for F. B. O. Both were away for nearly two weeks, peddling their respective wares to out-of-own exhibitors.

Bill Walsh is still acting as manager of the local First National exchange. Walsh was made acting manager of the transfer of Les Davis to the management of the Seattle exchange.

A vaudeville agency, which will furnish acts to theatres in this territory, has been opened by Joe Daniels. Daniels was formerly with the West Coast outfit, but has now gone in for himself. His offices are in the Fine Arts building.

The New Year's Eve midnight matinees at many of the houses was a losing proposition in the majority of houses. At the Bob White theatre, the crowd was of such a small nature, that Bob White, owner and also general manager of the Universal-Multnomah string, hired a special street car and took his customers down to the big Bagdad theatre, which is one of the Multnomah houses.

Earl Fuller, formerly connected with the local Remick music store, has left the music game to enter the film business. He is starting in as poster clerk at the Fox branch.

February 15 is the date set for the opening of new magnificent Publix theatre, which is across the street from the West Coast Broadway. No policy has yet been announced, but it is safe to say that Fanchon and Marco units are to be offered together with Paramount pictures. The Broadway is scheduled to be operated by J. J. Parker, now owner of the Rivoli and Peoples' theatres, in conjunction with United Artists. Parker now holds a long-term contract for all United Artists product, having made this arrangement with Louis Anger, vice-president of U. A. theatres, a few years ago. Paul Noble, manager of the Rivoli, has taken on a side line, opening up a flower store in one of the leading department stores of the city.

Chicago

AMONG the prominent Chicago exhibitors who are planning winter vacations are President Jack Miller, of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago, who, with his wife and son, is scheduled to leave for New Orleans, Havana and the Panama Canal next week; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Schaefer, who will journey to California, where they will sojourn for six weeks, and Mr. and Fred Gilford, who leave this week to attend the Pan-American Exposition at Havana, Cuba.

The taking over of two theatres by American Legion Posts were reported this week. The houses involved are the Legion at Port Byron and the Lyric at Odell, formerly operated by Mr. Ward.

Manager E. H. Herbel, of Universal's local exchange, has joined the colony of film men who are residing on the North Side, having taken an apartment at 3750 Sheridan Road. Mr. Herbel's family recently arrived from the East to locate here.

James Coston has returned from New York City, where he went on a business trip last week. The Coston Circuit has taken over the Vendome and Pickford Theatres on South State Street, the transfer becoming effective January 1. These houses were formerly owned by O. C. Hammong.

The Covent Garden Theatre, Lubliner & Trinz North Clark Street house, is the most recent theatre to go into a stage band policy. Ray Reynolds is the leader and master of ceremonies. The admission price has been raised from 30 to 35 cents.

M. Van Praag, Western sales director of Universal, spent the week in Chicago, and Monday held an impromptu sales meeting, at which all the exchange sales' staff were present. Mr. Van Praag before returning to New York will visit principal Universal exchanges in the Central West and West Coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Roth, popular Prophetstown exhibitors, were among the visitors on film row this week.

Louis Laemmle's Highland Park Theatre was held up and robbed of $2,000, the robbers locking the night watchman in the basement as they rifled the safe. No one was hurt.

Tipped off to the proposed robbery of the Rosette Theatre receipts, police lay in wait for the bandits, and when the gang held up Emil Hulquist, the owner, who was carrying the day's receipts home, the police closed in, and in a gun-battle killed two of the bandits, the third escaping.

Al Hoffman has been transferred from country territory to Chicago, and is now covering the West Side for Universal. Fred Healy has been transferred to Northern Illinois territory.

The Liberty Theatre at Spring Valley, and the theatre of the same name at Depue, Ill., have been taken over by E. B. & T. R. Mace. Mrs. Matchek formerly operated these houses.

The Bee Theatre at Aurora, Ill., which has been operated for many years, has been sold to B. A. Falkos.

Tom North has returned from a trip which included visits to Minneapolis and Milwaukee Pathe exchanges.

Charles Kamp, of the Ashland and Madlin Theatres, has been honored by the American Legion, which has named him chairman of the national and state motion picture commission of the Legion.

H. Schoenstadt & Sons have removed their offices from 1120 S. Michigan Avenue, where their headquarters have been located for the past three years, to the Piccadilly Theatre, 53d and Blackstone.

The Chelton Theatre, fine new South Side house, was opened successfully on January 15th. Joseph Stern is president of the corporation operating this new theatre, which is a neighborhood house of 1,200 seats. Mr. Stern is also interested in the Marquette and Highway Theatres of Chicago, and the Dicke Theatre, of Downers Grove, Ill.

The Parkway Theatre, which tried out a stage band policy for a few weeks, has returned to a straight picture program.

Joseph Hopp, veteran exhibitor and exchange man, has joined Universal's sale staff, and has been assigned to territory west of Peoria.

Atlanta

BY special permission of the board of Aldermen of Gadsden and the Tri City Ministerial Association, the management of the Princess theatre gave a matinee performance on last Sunday for the benefit of Etowah County Tuberculosis Hospital, located in Gadsden. The Princess is owned and operated by the Crescent Amusement Company with Lee L. Castleberry, manager.

F. K. Ricksecker, southern sales manager for Robert Morton organs, was in Atlanta early last week drafting final specifications for the instrument which Robert B. Wilby is buying for his Academy theatre in Selma, Alabama.

Lional H. Keene has spent but little time in his Atlanta office since he returned South to re-open southern division headquarters for Loew. What with new theatres under construction in Texas and elsewhere, and with many other houses in the southern chain requiring his services Mr. Keene has been on the move constantly.

Willard C. Patterson, southern division manager for Universal theatres, left last week for Charleston, West Virginia, where the company operates the Virginian and Rialto theatres. Lea Richmond is manager of the Virginian; and Richard England, a native of Charleston, is manager of the Rialto.

Several appointments, some in the nature of promotions, are announced by Willard C. Patterson in Universal's Florida circuit.

H. M. Johnson, who has been assistant to Claude Lee, manager of the Arcade and Court theatres in Fort Myers, has been assigned to Winter Park where he will manage the Baby Grand when that house re-opens on January 10th.

Harry Botto, who has been in charge of Universal's theatre in Bradenton, becomes manager of the Arcade theatre at Kissimmee, succeeding Geo. Hoffman, who takes over the management of the handsome Edwards theatre in Sarasota. Mr. Hoffman succeeds Malcom Estes, who goes to the Arcade theatre at West Palm Beach for the E. J. Sparks Enterprises.

Alpha Fowler, one of the most popular theatre executives in Atlanta, has severed his connection with Community Theatres Consolidated in which Arthur Lucas and William K. Jenkins are the leading factors, to become general manager of Naborhood Theatres Corporation, the Atlanta subsidiary of Universal theatres, in which Oscar S. Oldknow is financially interested.

The holdings of Naborhood Theatres Corporation include the Ponce de Leon theatre on Ponce de Leon Avenue near Boulevard; the Madison theatre, East Atlanta; Fairfax theatre, East Point; and the Empire theatre, now being erected at Georgia Avenue and Crew Street, Atlanta. This latter house will be the largest community theatre in the city with a seating capacity of 1,000.

Hunter M. Smith, president of the Pan-Ala Amusement Company, Birmingham, Ala., was a visitor to Atlanta film exchanges last week.

Buyers along Atlanta's film row included P. H. Henn, of the Bonita theatre, Canton,; C. W. Maxey, of the Royal theatre, Summerville, Ga., and Wendell Wilson of the Strand theatre, Dallas, Ga.

P. C. Bryan, manager of Fox's Atlanta branch, left last Sunday for New York to visit the company's home office.

George T. Chester, manager of Atlanta branch of Enterprise Corporation, was in his office several days the latter part of this week.

Mrs. J. R. Higgins has been added to the personnel of A. C. Bromberg Attractions to succeed Mrs. Lois Freeman, resigned.

T. V. McCue, Tiffany-Stahl playdate representative from the home office, visited the company's Atlanta branch.

W. G. Carmichael, district sales manager for United Artists, arrived in the Atlanta branch office last Friday to hold a conference with the Atlanta sales force.

J. H. Butner, Educational's Atlanta branch manager, left last Thursday for a trip through South Georgia.

John Ezell, manager of Warner Bros. Atlanta branch, spent several days last week in Albany, Ga.

W. B. Fulton, special representative for Warner Bros. in Atlanta, left last week for New York for a business conference.

Charles M. Steele, supervisor of exchanges for First National, spent last Thursday and Friday in the company's Atlanta branch.

R. A. Morrow, southern division manager for Pathe, called on the Altanta branch last week.

James W. Clark, M-G-M southern exploiteer, left last week for McRae, Ga.

A. H. McCarty, of the Mildred theatre, Barnesville, Ga., and his brother, J. M. McCarty, of the Forsyth theatre, Forsyth, Ga., were visitors last week in Atlanta.

Fred F. Creswell, district manager of Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, with headquarters in Atlanta, left last Sunday for a two weeks' visit to key cities in Florida.

William G. Minder, Southeastern manager for Tiffany-Stahl Productions, left Atlanta on Tuesday for a trip through South Alabama.

E. A. Rambonnet, salesman for Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions, with headquarters in Charlotte, spent several days during the holidays in Atlanta.

The first regular meeting of the Atlanta Joint Board of Arbitration in the new year will take place January 17. At its meeting in December, the board, by holding a lengthy session, disposed of all business on the docket, so that the matters scheduled for attention at the January meeting are those that have originated since last month.

Miss Marion McCullough, home office representative of the Film Boards of Trade, was in Atlanta the latter part of last week and while here installed a uniform system of operation for the Atlanta Film Board, of which E. L. Cole is secretary.

A meeting of all exchange managers, bookers and salesmen in Jacksonville, Fla., was held in that city last Saturday for the purpose of having the rules and regulations of the Atlanta Film Board of Trade explained to them. E. L. Cole, secretary of the Atlanta board, went to Jacksonville to preside at the meeting. The conference was similar to the one held in Atlanta on December 3rd.

The Strand, long popular as a local movie house in Birmingham, closed January 14, for repairs and remodeling. Local Publix officials anounce that $25,000 will be spent in refurnishing the theatre and making it one of the most attractive of the smaller houses in the city. While the Strand is closed, the Galax will present the regular Strand shows, and after the latter house opens, it is likely the Galax too, will undergo remodeling.

Boliver Hyde, Jr., formerly of Jacksonville, Fla., has been assigned by Publix as manager of the Strand and Galax, Birmingham, Mr. Hyde is a very energetic and capable showman and it is predicted that he will continue the fine record enjoyed by both these houses while under the active management of Sidney Dannenberg, who is now resident manager, in charge of Publix's Birmingham houses.

All Birmingham theatres participated in New Year's festivities, many giving an extra show, or cabaret performance, on the eve of 1928, Saturday night.

The Strand, Tuscumbia, Ala., was the scene of considerable excitement last Wednesday night. A negro patron in the balcony was shot in the face by another negro and the wounded man, screaming, jumped from the balcony to the first floor, into the most crowded section of the theatre, nearly hitting a lady patron.

The Ensley theatre, Birmingham, operated by the Wilby-Kennedy interests, announces that Nelson Hampton will become the new manager of this house January 2. Mr. Hampton has been manager of the Imperial and Alamo theatres, Greensboro, N. C., for the past three years, and has also acted as special representative for Publix-Saenger Wilby, in the Carolinas.

St. Louis

THE annual report of the St. Louis Building Department for 1927 will show a total of 13,720 permits for $42,075,182 constructions, compared with $39,841,564 in 1926. This grand total includes 65 permits for theatres and other amusement places totaling $2,598,200. However, this does not mean that 65 new theatres were constructed in St. Louis during 1927, but merely that 65 permits were issued calling for either new building or improvements to existing structures.

Eighty per cent of the steel work for the new $5,000,000 Fox theatre, the second largest in the world, now under construction at Grand and Washington Boulevards, St. Louis, Mo., has been completed. It has been announced that the new theatre will include the first radio broadcasting station in a St. Louis theatre.

The trial of Oscar Dane, proprietor of the Liberty Music Hall, 3627 Delmar Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo., on a charge of assaulting Clay Holmes while he was acting as a picket in front of the theatre during a labor controversy last February, has been continued generally by Judge Gayer of the Court of Criminal Correction.

St. Louis film stocks closed January 7 as follows: Skouras Enterprises A, $40 bid and $41 asked; St. Louis Amusement A, $36 bid and $37 asked; Skouras Brothers was unchanged for the week, while St. Louis Amusement showed a gain of $1 per share.

S. Greenburg, manager of the Alcyon Theatre, Highland Park, Ill., was aroused from his sleep early on January 3 and forced to reveal the combination of the theatre safe. The strong box was robbed of more than $2,000 in receipts. Greenburg sleeps in an apartment above the theatre. After robbing the safe the bandits locked Greenburg in a closet. He was released five hours later by a janitor.

The Pine Tree Amusement Company, of which P. H. Tessier is president, plans to erect a new theatre in Bogalusa, Ia.

Pittsburgh

STARTING at 10 o'clock and ending at 12 noon, the inmates of the Western Penitentiary were given their annual Christmas show by the Harris Amusement Company, and proved a great success. The vigorous applause and strict attention by the prisoners showed they took full advantage of this excellent entertainment provided for them. Steve Forrest acted as "master of ceremonies" and directed the performances.

Miss Kathryn Kramer, of Denver, Colo., formerly connected with the local Universal exchange, writes and asks us to convey her best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all her friends on Film Row as well as for the exhibitors throughout the territory.

George F. Callahan's Christmas present to Film Row is a mammoth electric sign which has been erected at his New Forbes Parking Garage. The electrics can be seen many blocks away, and at night brightens up the film colony as it has never been brightened before.

The Christmas atmosphere is not lacking at the offices of the Independent Display Company, where a beautiful decorated tree stands in the front office.

Hyman Wheeler, booker at the Columbia Film Service, had his share of tough luck over the week end. Saturday night, while walking in the Hill district, he was held up by two armed Negroes, and relieved of two dollars in cash, as well as a scarf which his best girl had just given him for a Christmas gift. The following day, "Hymie" while out walking, fell and sprained his left ankle, said member being badly swollen and so painful that Hymie needs the assistance of a stout cane with which he goes back and forth to the office. Here's wishing this popular member of the Wheeler family better luck for the new year.

Edward Lebby, Educational salesman, not only wears the newest and most novel in clothing all the time, but we also wish to call special attention to the natty footgear with which Ed adorns himself with. The latest in leather coverings for the pedal extremities is always Ed's wont, and it is interesting to note that he purchases his shoes from John Guthrie, who conducts a high class shoe store in Grove City in addition to the two beautiful theatres which he operates in that town.

Charles Dortic, accessory sales manager for the Universal exchange, has forsaken the street cars and now makes the rounds, business and social in his new Pontiac coach.

Vernon Scott, of the Ideal Theatre, Johnstown, was in town one day the past week, and had his pocket full of five dollar gold pieces. When we asked him "how come" he replied that each one of his employees would receive one of the gold pieces as a Christmas remembrance.

George Bates, well known local maker of commercial film, and also representative for the DeVry cameras and projectors, is spending the holiday season in New York.

C. A. Wagner, of the Soisson Theatre, Connellsville, held a kiddies' potato show one day last week, and as a result of the stunt, turned over twenty bushels of potatoes to the poor families of the district for the Christmas Season.

B. W. Redfoot, of the Arcadia Theatre, Windber, was in town on Tuesday, and reported that as his Christmas gift to the children in his town each one of the little ones was presented with a ticket, which entitled them to attend one matinee during the week free of charge.

Exhibitors are reminded to note that the name of the Federated exchange in Pittsburgh has been changed to Standard Film Service Company, the Standard name being also used by the company's branches in Detroit and Cincinnati, as well as the Cleveland home office.

Frank R. Murray, Film Row's popular artist and lobby display builder stuck another feather in his cap the past week. Frank was commissioned by friends of Mayor Kline of Pittsburgh to make an oil painting of His Honor. The local newspapers carried pictures of Frank, as well as a reproduction of the painting.

Joseph Richmond, of the Keystone Theatre, East Ohio Street, North Side, suffered a painful accident in the theatre last Monday evening, when his right hand and forearm were badly scalded by escaping steam from the heating plant in the basement of the house. It will be several days before Joe will be again able to use his arm.

The Gayety Theatre burlesque house, has announced that it will close for the season week ending January 14th. This is unusual and keen competition at low prices from the moving icture houses are credited as the cause.

Don Albert, guest conductor at Loew's Penn, gave a party New Year's eve that from all accounts was a huge success. Mr. and Mrs. L. Lanning, manager, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Katz, asst. manager, Mr. and Mrs. Dick Leibert, organist, Mr. John Baker, supervisor of service, all of the Penn Theatre and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Raymond of the Stanley Corp., were among those present.

Cyril Gutheorl, organist at the Penn, has started a school to train theatre organists and the school is a success from the start, according to the large group of pupils that have registered.

James Balmer, manager of the Grand, is spending lots of time at the new Stanley house seeing the fixtures and furniture put in, which means that the new house will be open before a month is gone.

Wallace R. Allen, director of publicity for Loew's and United Artists Penn Theatre and Loew's Aldine Theatre, has announced his engagement to Miss Julia Strauss, non-professional, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Strauss of 171 West 79th Street, New York City. The couple expect to get married in September. Allen came to Pittsburgh from Cleveland when the new Penn opened.

GEORGE BOUCHARD, of Buffalo, a prominent organist who formerly resided in Williamsport, will give a recital on the organ of the new Park theatre, in the latter city, when it is formally opened on February 15. The Park, a modern structure, is just being completed for Valentine C. Luppert, of Williamsport.

C. Floyd Hopkins, director of the Wilmer & Vincent theatres in Harrisburg and Reading, was host to the orphans from the Jednoda Home, near Middletown, at a matinee in the State theatre, Harrisburg, the afternoon of January 7.

Wesley Schemberger, of Lancaster, who for twelve years was manager, successively, for the Capitol and Hamilton theatres, in that city, before control of them was acquired by the Stanley interests from Mr. and Mrs. George M. Krupa, has been made supervising manager of the New Rialto and the National in Harisburg, which the Krupas began operating on January 2, under lease from Isaac Marcus, of Harrisburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Krupa announce that they will sell their children's dress goods store and their home in Lancaster, and after spending the spring and summer in Marydel, near Ocean City, Md., will purchase a home in Harrisburg and make that city their permanent residence. Mr. and Mrs. Krupa, who operated the Capitol and Hamilton in Lancaster for nineteen years, have four children, and Mrs. Krupa has five grown children in addition, by her first marriage. Two of her daughters are organists in theatres in Lancaster, a son is organist in a theatre in Lewistown and another son is an expert musician employed by one of the large theatrical organ-building companies.

The Camerford Amusement Company, of Scranton, added another theatre to its big chain when on December 19 it formally opened the Capitol, in Mauch Chunk. It is a small theatre, very attractive in design.

In connection with the reopening, in the last week of December, of the York Opera House, which is to be known hereafter as the "York Theatre," manager Ed R. Moore announced that a regular feature of the programs will be York local films, taken by the theatre's own cameraman, C. Wilbur Hoffman. The first half of the opening week the local offering was the fire drill at the Ridge avenue school, and the last half of the week the York Elks in the role of Santa Claus were depicted.

Mrs. C. Floyd Hopkins, wife of the district director of the Wilmer & Vincent theatres in Harrisburg and Reading, supervised the delivery of eighty-six baskets of food, prepared by the Sunshine Society, among cripples and shut-ins of Harrisburg, on December 22.

The Vitaphone was introduced permanently in Shenandoah, in the Strand theatre, on January 9, when the program for the local premier consisted of an introdustory address by Will Hays and others.

The Strand, Shenandoah, has announced a new scale of prices, as follows: Matinees, adults, 35 cents, children, 15; evenings, adults, 50 and 35 cents and children 25 and 15 cents.

Benjamin Rymon, of Easton, is planning the erection of a new theatre here.

The Movietone News Reel was presented for the first time in the Cambria theatre, Johnstown, the week of January 2, and will be a regular feature of the Cambria.

Among those present were: Harry David, district manager of the Blank-Publix theatres, and his wife: B. W. Prusiner, treasurer of A. H. Blank-Publix theatres, Des Moines; L. E. Schneider, Publix executive, New York; Mrs. Arthur G. Stolte, Omaha; Mrs. Herbert D. Grove, wife of the Riviera theatre manager, Des Moines; Max Friedman, booker for the A. H. Blank-Publix theatres, Des Moines; Harry Weinberg, Commonwealth theatres, Des Moines; Raymond and Myron Blank, sons of A. H. Blank, Des Moines; A. E. Coakland, Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, Des Moines; Harry Frankle, Des Moines; A. E. Tilton, First National Pictures, Des Moines; Wm. Fenter, First National Pictures, Des Moines; Evert Cummings, manager of the Fort Armstrong theatre and A. H. Blank-Publix theatre in Rock Island, Ill.; Charles Manson, secretary Chamber of Commerce; Ed F. Killian of the Killian Company; A. C. Dunn, J. P. Terry of the Terry-Dunn Company; C. R. Chandler of the Chandler Company; Jake and Nate Rosenthal of Dubuque; C. F. Puls and V. Peacock of Milwaukee; S. P. Moore, L. E. Starke, H. J. Robertson, J. Monbrunk, J. Donough, and Harrison Spangler, of Cedar Rapids.

Unusually bad weather, with roads packed with snow, has caused a run of bad business in some sections of the state of Iowa. Theatres which are reporting as closing for the winter season with the plan of reopening in the spring include the Coliseum, at Toronto, owned by M. C. Casey; the Wonderland theatre, at Bradgate, owned by C. A. Burris, and the Family theatre, at Eldora, owned by F. S. Howard. These are exhibitors who have been in the business in Iowa for a number of years.

Other houses which are reported closed temporarily are the Rainbow theatre at Riverside, the Stratford theatre at Stratford, the Community theatre at Prescott, the Colona theatre, Colona, and the Pastime theatre, at Brandon.

Harold Stanley now has control of two theatres at Greenfield, Iowa. He is a former resident of Bedford, Iowa, and came to Greenfield when he bought the Grand theatre there. He bought the Lyric theatre of Greenfield last month and took possession of the theatre on December 20. Mr. J. W. Thornton, who formerly owned the Lyric, played out his contracts to that date. Mr. Stanley will close the theatre temporarily while repairs are made and the theatre is completely redecorated.

F. E. Williams has the management of the Grand theatre at Cedar Rapids. This house has been closed for a time while changes were made in the theatre. A complete change was made in the scheme of decoration. The Grand reopened last week.

The office of Fox Films in Des Moines has a new manager, who will arrive at the office this week, coming from Chicago. Ben Reingold, who came from Omaha to take the management of the Fox office with its opening here over a year ago, is transferred to the management of the St. Louis office. The new manager of the Des Moines exchange is Mr. Raper.

Jimmy Shea, who has been with the Des Moines office of F.B.O. for the past ten months, has been making a regular Alger rise in winning two promotions in eight months' time. He came to the office of F.B.O. from Pathe, where he was salesman for F.B.O., and was promoted to office manager after three months. Now again his salesmanship is recognized in his promotion to the management of the St. Louis office. He is to report on Monday. Mr. Shea has been in the film business for a number of years, but is probably one of the youngest of the exchange managers. He was with Pathe for six years as salesman. Mr. Shea was presented with a handsome traveling bag as a farewell gift from the Des Moines staff. Mr. Shea's successor at the F.B.O. office is Harry Frankel, who is also promoted from the sales staff. Tell you all about Mr. Frankel next week.

Russell McLean, district representtaive for the Pathe office, was in Des Moines last Tuesday.

Two Peerless lamps and generators were bought last week by Mr. Watson, of the Grand theatre, at Knoxville.

A new screen was installed by the National Theatre Supply Company of Des Moines for Stephens and Puffer, of Webster City, who have the Orpheum theatre there.

Harry Herman, who was with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer three years ago, has returned to the Des Moines office. He is traveling the northeast territory. Mr. Herman, during his absence from Des Moines, has been with Alexander Frank, of Waterloo, who is in charge of the Universal houses in Iowa and also with Jack Little, singer and composer, who has proved quite a hit appearing at Iowa theatres, having won popularity as a radio broadcaster.

W. E. Banford, manager of the office of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, went out in the territory this week with Mr. Herman.

Ludi Bosten last week sold the Lyric theatre, at Columbus Junction. The new owner is R. H. Hickman, who is new in the film business in this territory. Mr. Bosten has a number of other Iowa theatres. He retains the theatres at Muscatine, Wapello and West Liberty.

Jay Zimmerman, auditor for the New York office of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, returned to the home office after a month here. Mr. Zimmerman figured he did pretty well to stick it out away from Broadway for the New Year holidays.

W. H. Jones, traveling auditor, is relieving Rose Browder at the Des Moines office of Pathe, while Miss Browder undergoes an operation. She will be absent from the office for a month.

The bowling teams have been resting during the holidays, but there will be a renewal of activities next week. As it stands now, Universal leads, while Pathe second, and F.B.O. and First National and Paramount debate for third.

Lou Elman is again with First National. He is covering the southwest territory, which is the section he formerly handled. Mr. Elman has been on leave of absence from the First National office for two months.

Joe Benjamin Gerbracht, exhibitor at Ames, Iowa, where he has three theatres under the firm name of the Ames Amusement Company, was married on Christmas morning. Mr. Gerbracht is one of the most enterprising of the theatre men and has successfully put through a number of new things at his theatres at Ames. Mr. Gerbracht's bride comes from California, it is said. He was in Des Moines last week receiving congratulations along Film Row.

Goldie Spar, stenographer at the office of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was home for the holidays at her home at Shenandoah, Iowa. She returned with a lovely diamond.

Jake Cohen, of the Strand theatre, at Ottumwa, bought two new machines equipped with Peerless lamps in the way of new equipment for his theatre.

Sioux City opened up a new theatre last week when the Orpheum there, a 2,700-seat house, had its inauguration.

Marion Ackerson, of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer office, spent Friday to Tuesday with her folks at Dubuque, Iowa.

San Francisco

P. PARTRIDGE, known as "Popular Pat," sales manager of the San Francisco District Paramount pictures, was given a semi-surprise party when he returned from his recent Chicago trip. "Popular Pat" is always given some kind of a reception when he leaves the city or returns from a trip, for this boy is liked. The surprises given him are OKeh as his dear wife accompanies him.

Work has commenced on the new Blumfeld theatre, a 1,500 seat house on Del Paso Boulevard of North Sacramento.

West Coast Theatres have installed reflector lamps in their California theatre at Salinas.

The local exchange has had two visits from Les Weir since he has been on the Coast in connection with his duties as Western Division Manager of Pathe Exchanges, Inc. Weir was joined in San Francisco by his wife, who came via the Panama Canal. Both Mr. and Mrs. Weir left for New York via the northwestern route, where they will visit Portland, Seattle and other exchange centers of Pathe, Inc., arriving in New York to spend the holidays.

Exchangemen and theatre owners along the row last week met W. S. Webster, who at one time operated the Strand theatre at Woodland,, Calif. Webster is on a visit to U. S. from Panama, in which country he is now making his home and is interested in the import and export business. Webster says he is happy and although loving his dear California he would not exchange for what he has in Panama.

D. S. Mitchell, who has been connected with Universal for many years, died very suddenly December 11. He was taken ill in the Exchange Saturday afternoon. Mitchell was connected with the film industry many years, having worked himself up from Poster Clerk to the position of District Manager for Universal, and was serving Universal in that capacity when he died, and was popular with all.

Jack Fier of National Screen Service reported that Christmas and New Year trailers sold fast.

Lester Ricks, shipping clerk for Supreme Exchange, has just returned from an extended sea voyage.

The Ackerman & Harris Circuit has awarded the contract for the booth equipment for the new El Capitan theatre to the National Theatre Supply Company.

The National Theatre Supply Company has established an engineering department in San Francisco. G. G. Thompson has been placed in charge. This new department will serve all West Coast exhibitors in conjunction with the company's One-Contract Equipment Plan, on all matters wherein engineering and research is needed.

The Setab theatre, Portola, operated by Mr. and Mrs. Ned Bates, opened on December 17th.

New York & New Jersey

WITH the reported closing of several neighborhood theatres on the lower East Side of New York City by Mayer and Schneider, chain theatre operators, the situation as regards certain type houses in the outlying districts does not seem to be any too strong. It is said that lack of profit and expiration of leases were the contributing causes to the move by the theatre firm, but that in all probability the owners of the theatres will continue at least for the present to utilize the properties as motion picture theatres.

The East Side houses mentioned as being let go by M. & S. are: the Casino, Second avenue and 9th street; the Waco, Rivington street; the Lucky Star, 5th street and First avenue; the Majestic, Second avenue and 15th street, and the New Strand, East Broadway. The last named is probably the most modern of the group.

The Houston theatre, also in the downtown East Side section, closed some time ago owing to lack of trade, still appears to be in the same boat—cheaper to keep the doors closed than open them.

While there may be a certain amount of gloom in one section there's a ray of sunshine in others, for it is reported that the Grant theatre, opened and closed several times on its site at 140th street and Lenox avenue, is about to reopen again; and, likewise, the American theatre on Fort Hamilton Parkway, Brooklyn. The latter has also had its several ups and downs during the past year or so.

They may leave the trade for a while, but they generally come back —and sometimes to their old stand. This applies to J. Farina, who, several years back, sold his Eden theatre, 201 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn, to Charles Friedman. Friedman changed the name of the house to Milo. Now that Farina is again the proprietor, the house will revert to its old name. The Eden seats about 600.

It was a great and glorious occasion out in Bensonhurst last Thursday when His Honor Mayor "Jimmie" Walker personally contributed to the formal dedication of the handsome motion picture theatre that bears his name at 18th avenue and 64th street. The Walker was built by Sam Berman, well known New York exhibitor, and a number of other celebrities, including Cantor Rosenblatt, attended the opening ceremonies.

The policy of the Walker, which has a seating capacity close to 2,000, will be pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Berman also operates the Senate theatre at 74th street and 18th avenue.

Several changes in management among local theatres have recently taken place:

S. Grueber, eight years associated with Dillingham interests and lately with the Orpheum theatre, Brooklyn, is now in charge of A. H. Schwartz' Albemarle, Albemarle road and Flatbush avenue.

Another change in the Schwartz circuit is that C. Freund has been transferred from the Century, Nostrand avenue, to Schwartz' Marine theatre, Kings Highway and Flatbush avenue. H. Jackson succeeds Freund at the Century.

Manager Murphy, recently with Grossman's New United theatre, is expected to soon join the Harry Harris circuit and R. J. Ryan is reported to have resigned the management of Glynne's Bayshore theatre, Bayshore, L. I.

Art Smith has also resigned his position at the Fortway theatre, Brooklyn, and A. M. Pincus is mentioned as the new manager of that house. Mr. Pincus has been at Barr Bros. 5th avenue theatre.

After completely remodeling the Superior theatre, 81st street and First avenue, Messrs. Dollinger and Unger reopened that house January 5. These two new theatre operators are evidently making good their recent statement that the Movies, which they also own at 77th street and 3d avenue, was to be the first of a chain of small neighborhood theatres.

M. Schecter, owner of the Hollywood theatre, Brooklyn, is away on a two weeks' vacation.

Joe Hanley, manager of the Kingsway theatre, Brooklyn, recently succeeded in quelling any disorder which might have arisen when a portion of the theatre's ceiling fell during a performance the latter part of last week. Fortunately for all concerned, there were no serious injuries through the mishap. Vaudeville was recently added to the program of the Kingsway.

Polly and Her Gang, a new act of Seider and Moley's, recently opened at the Oxford theatre. How Al Moley manages to keep his mind on bookings and presentations when baseball activities are beginning to blossom forth in the Southland is more than some folks can understand. If we haven't by this time publicized Al as the champion New York Giant fan then it's not our fault.

This item is hardly important to the film industry, but in order to help our printers along a bit we will note that it is rumored that the Columbia and Mutual burlesque outfits are about to effect a merger. The report comes from around the Empire and Casino in Brooklyn, where it is said that some of the boys will soon be looking for new jobs.

Loew's Avalon theatre, a new playhouse to be devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures and located at Kings Highway and Avenue J, Brooklyn, will be formally opened Wednesday evening, January 25, with N.T.G., of WHN, and his gang of radio stars "in person." The following Thursday evening, February 2, Loew's new theatre in Yonkers, presenting vaudeville and motion pictures, will be formally opened. The two new links in the Greater New York chain put the number of Loew theatres well past 60.

Readers may have noticed that the sporting news in our columns [illegible] ever.

[illegible] at Dwyer's Academy, January 16, signalizes the growing activity among the film girls in sporting events. The occasion will be auspicious in that it promises to be the forerunner of competition in other sports to be engaged in by the girls of the various motion picture companies.

For instance, First National already has formed a girls' basketball team, and the girls of the Fox Athletic Club and the Paramount Pep Club are organizing teams to meet the challenge of First National.

Then, in tennis and swimming, the women employees of such firms as Fox Films, Paramount Famous - Lasky, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Pathe, First National, United Artists and Consolidated are already making arrangements for a girls' tournament—the tennis contests to be played in the spring and the swimming meet to be held during the summer.

Track events also are scheduled by the fair motion picture athletes, so it is readily apparent that the "weaker sex" has entered into the field of sports with a zest equal to that of the men, who participated in baseball, handball, tennis, bowling and basketball tournaments during the past year.

The fourth series of games in the Motion Picture Basketball League schedule was played last Thursday. There were two games, the first Pathe vs. Consolidated Films and the other, Paramount Five vs. the Fox Films team. These contests took place at Savage's Gymnasium, 59th street, Columbus Circle, New York City.

Philadelphia

FELT BROTHERS, builders of the Aldine theatre at 19th and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia, a special production house now operated by the Stanley Company, and the Roxy theatre in Roxborough, which has been taken over by East Coast Theatres, will build two new houses in the city, both of which will probably be leased by operating companies. The first, for which plans have already been drawn, will be on Chelton avenue, near Germantown avenue, close to the Stanley Company's Orpheum. Legitimate production will probably be introduced here and it will be the first neighborhood house in Philadelphia to adopt such a policy. It will have a seating capacity of 2,000. Another house, to be named the Commodore, will be erected in West Philadelphia.

Joseph Hebrew, manager of the Philadelphia exchange for Warner Bros., was tendered a dinner on January 6th by the Philadelphia motion picture fraternity. The event marked the completion of twenty years of service in the industry. The dinner, which was attended by more than 200, was held at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel. Representatives of the home office of Warner Bros., including two of the Warner Brothers, were present, together with representation from the Stanley Company of America. The committee in charge of arrangements included John Bagley, Jack Rosenthal, William Butler, Sr., Joseph Schaeffer, Harry L. Dembow, Sam Gross, Edgar A. Moss, Mortimer Lewis and David Barrist. Charles H. Goodwin served as master of ceremonies. Mr. Hebrew has been actively identified with local exchanges for a great many years. He was for a time branch manager for Fox and filled a similar position with Vitaphone before its absorption by Warner Brothers.

The Carman theatre at Germantown and Allegheny avenues, which has been in the course of construction for the past two years, was recently opened by George Gravenstein. The house represents an investment of almost $1,000,000 and is directly opposite the old Carman theatre, which was operated very successfully by Mr. Gravenstein for a number of years. The new theatre has a seating capacity of approximately 2,500. Its policy will be moving pictures with elaborate presentations. Programs will be of the de luxe type and as an opening production Mr. Gravenstein had Karyl Norman, the Creole fashion plate.

The Kent theatre, a new 2,500-seat house which has been in course of construction for the past several months, will be opened by the Stanley Company with an elaborate ceremony on the evening of January 16th. Dedicatory addresses will be made by Mayor Mackey and by representatives of the company.

Seattle

FOLLOWING his recent jump into third place in the nationwide sales contests of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branches, A. J. Sullivan, of Manager Ben Fish's local office, last week continued his drive and landed in the enviable position of being the first salesman in the country to go over 100 per cent of his sales quota. Mr. Sullivan plans to retain first place in the national standing indefinitely, according to the boasts of the Seattle exchange.

As usual, local motion picture theatres offered late shows for the New Year's Eve revelers last week, and a majority of them reported very favorable business. The greatest success was the performance at the Fifth Avenue theatre, where Manager James Q. Clemmer put across a $1.65 top performance, and tied up with the first anniversary of Radio Station KOMO, whereby the station performers worked on the Fifth Avenue stage and broadcast their program by remote control. The show was a complete sell-out. Midnight matiness at the United Artists and Columbia theatres played to big houses with added film and stage attractions, and the Blue Mouse theatre featured a midnight show of their regular program at regular prices, which went over very successfully.

C. M. Hill, former sales representative with Manager Art H. Huot's local F. B. O. exchange, last week was appointed to the sales staff of the Universal office, and will cover the Eastern Washington territory. The Western district is under the jurisdiction of Dave Frazer, former P. D. C. executive.

L. O. Lukan, western division sales manager for First National, arrived in Seattle last week to spend the holidays with his family at their country home a short distance out of the city. He plans to return to California shortly after the first of the year, via Portland.

Ben F. Shearer, former head of B. F. Shearer, Inc., and more recently manager of the Interior Decorating Division of the National Theatre Supply Company, last week announced the formation of a new firm to be known as the B. F. Shearer Company, which will specialize in the decorating, contract furnishing and equipping of theatres, schools and public buildings. Associated with Mr. Shearer in the new venture are H. F. Randall, A. M. Larsen and C. Frank Harris. Local headquarters are opened at 1919 Third avenue, and branches are being established in Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Word was received at the local Columbia exchange last week that Jack Tillman, special sales representative in the Portland territory, had been removed to a hospital in that city for a minor operation, but was progressing nicely.

Fred Mercy, prominent Northwest exhibitor, last week announced two additions to his rapidly growing chain of suburban theatres. These were the Liberty theatre in Pasco and the Liberty in Kennewick. E. J. Reynolds, Pasco exhibitor, is understood to be retiring from the picture field to enter mercantile business in Southeast Washington.

Four theatre closings in the Pacific Northwest territory were announced during the last seven days. They include the Pastime theatre at Tensed, Idaho; the Liberty theatre at Oroville, Washington; the Canyon theatre at Troy, Idaho; and H. Stoddard's LaConner theatre circuit with headquarters at LaConner, Washington.

Jess Beckman, head of the Maritime Film Service of this city, blossomed out last week in a handsome new Hupp sedan, replacing the former sport roadster that he piloted.

Two film stars headlined the Orpheum vaudeville program in this city last week. They were Ethel Clayton and Ian Keith, in their comedy sketch "Clipped." And while the film lights were playing in vaudeville, one of America's foremost comediennes was headlining at a motion picture palace here —Nora Bayes at the Fifth Avenue theatre.

Twenty-four sheets advertising the opening of the magnificent new Seattle theatres on February first made their appearance on the billboards of this city last week, being the first gun in the intensive opening campaign just beginning. The Seattle is a 3,250-seat house to be operated by West Coast theatres in association with Publix Theatres.

West Coast Scrip, contained in books that offer $5 worth of admission tickets for $4.00 or $10.00 worth for $9.00, are now on sale at the box offices of various Wesco houses throughout the Pacific Northwest, and have been widely exploited in a campaign that covers the newspapers as well as the theatre screens. The Scrip is good in any West Coast house on the Pacific Coast, according to the literature.

Arnold Flink, assistant manager of W. Stefan Perutz's United Artists theatre in this city, was featured last week in a specially arranged dramatic overture by Jan Sofer and the United Artists 30 piece orchestra. Mr. Flink's recitation was enthusiastically received by every audience.

Denver

A. J. HAMILTON, well known Denver man who within the last year has owned the Ivy theatre in south Denver, has purchased a half interest in the Hiawatha Theatre Company, owner of the new Hiawatha theatre at 6th avenue and Downing streets. Mr. Hamilton has succeeded Gordon B. Ashworth as active manager of the theatre.

Jack Scott, former Producer booker in Denver, and who has spent the last six months as booker for Pathe in the Portland office, is now back in Denver as head of the booking department in the local branch office of Pathe. A. G. Edwards, former Pathe office manager, has been assigned to the duties of sales manager for the Denver district.

Messrs. Pettit and Hockridge, up in South Dakota, have purchased the Hill City theatre of Hill City, S. D., from Wm. McGregor.

Guy Markland, owner of the Center theatre of Center, Colo., recently spent several days visiting exchanges in Denver. Mr. Markland reports the usual winter slump in business.

D. F. Swanson, owner of the Isis theatre of Lamar, Colo., spent a few days in Denver a week ago, transacting business. While here he settled a "music tax" suit.

M. H. Todd, former manager of the Rialto theatre, Casper, Wyo., has been retained by Carl Ray as manager of the Carl Ray theatres of Cheyenne, Wyo.

Harold Rice, well known manager in these parts, has accepted a position as manager of the Carter theatres, the Sante Fe and the Jewel theatres in South Denver. Mr. Rice resigned as manager of the Bluebird theatre to accept his new affiliation.

Denver has another suburban theatre, this time out at 44th and Tennyson, where Frank Culp opened the beautiful Oriental. He held the initial performance to two full houses on Christmas eve, a cold and stormy night. Those who attended were well repaid for their choice in spending the evening. The Oriental is truly one of the most beautiful theatres of its kind in the Denver territory. Its Persian style of architecture and interior decorations has been carried out to the smallest detail. A new organ with a beautiful tone is one of the attractions of this new amusement house. Mr. Culp also operates the Rex, Alcott and Granada theatres, over on the north side.

The Palm theatre of Pueblo, Colo., opened Christmas eve, after extensive remodeling and the installation of a Vitaphone for the entertainment of its patrons. Chas. Ernst is manager of the Palm. It is owned by the Colorado Realty Company.

The Acme theatre of Riverton, Wyo., owned by Mrs. Lee Mote, is undergoing improvements, which will include a new floor for the theatre.

H. A. Gordon, owner of the Chief theatre of Steamboat Springs, Colo., has returned to Steamboat and assumed the active management of his theatre.

The Princess theatre of Oak Creek, Colo., away up on the Moffat road, is undergoing $15,000 worth of improvements. The theatre is owned and managed by John Greve.

The Pueblo Amusement Company was adjudicated bankrupt on December 27th by Sperry S. Packard, referee in bankruptcy in Pueblo, Colo. The company has operated the Rialto theatre of Pueblo for the past six months and about three weeks ago closed the theatre because of poor business. A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed. January 13th has been set for the presentment and proving of claims by creditors of the company.

Mrs. F. C. Riley, former operator of the Moon theatre, Newcastle, Colo., has opened a new theatre in Carbondale, Colo., which she has named the "Sun."

Gerald Whitney, former Producer salesman, and Warren Burgess, who has been covering percentage bookings for Metro, have joined the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sales force. Mr. Whitney has been assigned to the western slope of Colorado, while Mr. Burgess' district has not yet been decided upon.

C. H. Dutton, district manager for the National Theatre Supply Co., spent three days in Denver last week, assisting in taking inventory of the local office of the company. He left Denver last Thursday for Omaha, where he will spend the New Year with his family.

G. T. Donnelly, owner of the property on which is located the Strand theatre in Aguilar, Colo., has taken possession of the theatre and will soon try his hand at the exhibition business again. The theatre for the past three months has been operated by the D. & R. interests of Denver.

Hugh Brady, Paramount branch manager, spent the holidays in Los Angeles on a combined business and pleasure trip. He returned to Denver January 2nd. He made the trip in his auto.

H. A. P. "Hap" Frederick has resigned his position as salesman for the local Universal office to accept the managerial duties of the Columbia exchange in Salt Lake City. He entered upon his new duties on January 1, 1928.

Denver—Continued

R. J. GARLAND, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch manager, was elected president of the Denver Film Board of Trade for the ensuing term at the semi-annual election held last Tuesday. Mr. Garland was unanimously chosen for the position. S. D. Weisbaum, retiring president, was unanimously chosen as vice-president of the organization. Duke W. Dunbar was appointed executive secretary and treasurer and H. W. Braly was designated official secretary. Exchange members who were elected to represent distributors on the Board of Arbitration are R. J. Morrison, of Fox; J. T. Sheffield, Columbia, and Chas. R. Gilmour, of Warner Bros.

A new member representing exhibitors was appointed when H. E. Huffman, president of the M. P. T. O. of Colorado, designated F. H. Ricketson, of the Western Enterprises circuit of theatres, to succeed Gordon B. Ashworth. The exhibitor members now comprise Sam H. Horner, Leonard Levand, and F. H. "Rick" Ricketson, all Denver exhibitors.

The Gem theatre of Yuma, Colo., was damaged by fire on Christmas eve to the extent of $2000.00, according to report received from Frank Bronte, owner and manager of the theatre. The fire occurred during the night after the show and was caused by an overheated furnace. Most of the damage was done to the building, although the projection room sustained considerable damage, the equipment having to be overhauled.

Ruth Taylor, famous blonde star of Paramount, was a Denver visitor Friday and Saturday of this week. While here she made her first inspection of a film exchange when she was conducted through the local Paramount exchange by H. W. Braly, manager. She made appearances at the Denver theatre and also paid a visit to the U. S. General hospital, Fitzsimons, at Aurora, Colo.

The coal strike in Colorado coal districts has not been so good for the theatre business in these localities. The theatres in Frederick and Erie, Colo., are closed down altogether and the theatres in Louisville, Colo., will close within the next week unless the strike is settled. In Aguilar, Colo., the Strand theatre is closed, although the Colorado theatre is still operating.

J. Frank Shea, F B O Western Division manager, arrived in Denver Saturday noon for a visit with S. D. Weisbaum, local branch manager, and the sales force, who are in Denver for conferences. Mr. Shea arrived in Denver from the east, where he spent the holidays with his family.

Messrs. Krier, Kastner, and Waite, theatre owners of Walsenburg, Colo., spent Saturday in Denver transacting business with distributors.

Fred Young, former Columbia salesman of Salt Lake City, has been transferred to the Denver office in a similar capacity.

Jim Morrison, local Fox manager, is all smiles over prospects for a biz Fox week this month.

J. H. Ashby, First National branch manager, is up in Wyoming on a sales trip. He is visiting exhibitors in the basin district.

The Shooker Film Exchange, a member of the Denver Film Board of Trade, has changed its name to Atlas Film Exchanges, Inc. C. B. Mark, a local exhibitor, is now associated with the company with B. M. Shooker in the company.

Harry Nolan, owner of several theatres hereabouts, is spending a few days visiting Albuquerque, N. M.

Gerald Swaebe, district representative of the educational department of Pathe, has returned to Boston, after a week at the home office in New York.

Miss Alicia Doherty of the inspection department at Pathe was bereaved by the death of her father last week.

J. A. Emery of Bar Harbor, Me., paid his first visit to Boston's film district in over half a dozen years during the past week. He was royally welcomed and entertained. His theatre at the famous Maine resort is one of the most widely known in New England.

For the first time in many years none of the Boston theatres held midnight shows because of the ban which the city placed on the welcoming shows to the New Year.

All the employees of the Strand theatre, Dorchester, were guests at a dinner tendered by Manager Charles Mansfield in honor of Lester Phillips, son of the owner of the theatre, who is home on vacation from William & Mary College.

The Metropolitan theatre at Boston, head of the Publix group in New England, has organized the Metropolitan Salon Ensemble, which made its debut Sunday afternoon from 3 to 3.45. The ensemble is composed of prominent soloists.

E. M. Loew's Pawtucket Theatres, Inc., is a new corporation of the Loew interests to control the theatres in Pawtucket. It is capitalized with 1,000 shares of no stated par value. Incorporators are Herman A. Mintz, of Sharon, Mass.; Andrew A. Stone, of Brockton, Mass., and Sarah R. Krevoruck, of Mattapan.

Carrousel Co. of Nantasket, Hull, Mass., has been incorporated with $25,000 in preferred and 250 shares of common stock of no par value, for the purpose of conducting amusements and theatres. Incorporators are Joseph Stone, Joseph Cohen and David Stone, all of Hull.

Latchis Theatre Co., with main offices at Keene, N. H., of which Peter Latchis is the head, is to erect a new theatre at Claremont, N. H., the site for which has already been secured. Mr. Latchis is expected to select the architect.

Salt Lake City

TIFFANY-STAHL, here, are having the local exchange enlarged in order that they may be able to take care of increased business.

District Manager Able Davis, Tiffany-Stahl representative, is in Salt Lake City for a couple of weeks from his Denver office. Office Manager E. M. Gibson, here, has just returned from a short trip in Wyoming.

Fred Lind, exchange manager in this city for F. B. O., returned this week from Colorado, where he spent the holidays and is expecting to leave right away for Montana with District Manager J. Frank Shea.

Ben T. Ritchie, former Paramount News camera man in the Intermountain territory, has joined the sales staff of United Artists in Salt Lake. Ritchie's wide and varied acquaintance with practically every exhibitor in Idaho and Montana is expected to make a very valuable asset to United Artists, according to Manager Harry tSern.

Bud Hartwig, exhibitor of Dillon, Montana, passed through this city a few days ago en route to Los Angeles for his annual winter sojourn, according to Manager Stern.

Warner Brothers moved this week into their new quarters on East First South street, here, in the midst of Film Row, where they have a very beautiful office.

The Film Board of Trade just held their annual meeting, at which they elected the new officers for the year. Al O'Keefe, manager of the Pathe exchang of this city, was reelected as president, and O. Wog was reelected vice-president. D. T. Lane was retained as secretary and treasurer.

L. W. Weir, Western Division sales manager for Pathe, was in Salt Lake for a very important conference with Manager Al O'Keefe a short time ago.

Fred Brown, one of the owners of the DeLuxe exchanges in Salt Lake and Denver, is en route to the Salt Lake office, at which point he will remain for several months, while J. E. Drucker, now at the office here, will be returning to Denver for this period.

Tony Duvall, of the Gem theatre, at Murray, Utah, was lining up some of the new productions along the row last week, as was George Smith, of the Rialto at Magna, Utah. John Stahle was in from Baoutiful for booking purposes.

John C. Ragland, general manager of Columbia Pictures at Butte, San Francisco, and Seattle, is spending a few days in this city, accompanied by Mrs. Ragland. They are en route from the Butte exchange to the Pacific Coast.

"Hap" Frederick has just arrived in this city from Denver to take charge of the sales work of the Columbia Exchange, here, in the place of E. E. Harris, who has resigned. Frederick is reported to have a wide acquaintance of friends in the film business, having formerly worked in Butte for Universal and later having been with Universal in Denver.

R. L. Wicker, operating the Delta theatre at Delta, Utah, spent some time at the local Columbia office last week, as did Geo. Pappas, owner of the Diana theatres of Copperfield and Midvale, Utah.

Louis and Harmon Peery, owners and operators of the Egyptian and Ogden first run theatres of Ogden, Utah, were in Salt Lake in the itnerest of their houses, as was John Rugar, of the American, Orpheum and Egyptian theatres, of Park City, Utah.

H. C. Gailey, of the Gailey Circuit, with headquarters at Kaysville, Utah, was among exhibitor visitors here last week.

W. F. Reiley, traveling auditor for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, left the local exchange for New York last week.

Ed Ryan, of the Liberty theatre at Brigham City, Utah, conferred with his many friends along exchange row here last week regarding new productions.

All of the film folks here have been very much grieved over the loss of their friend S. M. Duggins, former owner of the Casion theatre at Gunnison, Utah, who passed away a few days ago.

Defends Mazda Equipment

CHARLES HOWELL, projectionist at the Everett Theatre, Middletown, Delaware, takes up his cudgel in defense of Mazda lamp equipment for projecting movies and writes as follows:

Dear Sir:

I would like to say a few words in connection with something that was said about Mazda lamp projection in an article which recently appeared in the Projection Department.

The statement was made that a picture could not be projected with Mazda equipment which would be as sharply defined as one projected with an arc lamp outfit. Another objection to the use of incandescent lamps for motion picture projection was that the screen illumination was not sufficient to give a bright picture.

I believe that both of these statements are wrong inasmuch as I am using Mazda equipment in the Everett Theatre on a throw of 120 ft. and have yet to hear the first complaint concerning either the sharpness of the picture or the brightness of illumination.

It is my belief, based on experience, that if a half-size projection lens of good quality is used, excellent results will be obtained from the Mazda lamp outfit and no complaint can be reasonably made about either the picture definition or its brightness.

I have also heard people say that a three blade shutter cannot be used with Mazda equipment; but this, too, is an eror as I have been using three blade shutters for the past two months with great success.

Yours truly,
Charles Howell.

Yes and No

Friend Howell, the truth of your statements depends upon how you word your claims for the Mazda equipment. If you say that good results, satisfactory in every way, can be obtained in theatres on throws up to 125 ft. you are quite right as this is absolutely the truth.

If, however, you hold that the incandescent lamp outfit can project pictures which, from an all around standpoint, are fully equal to those projected with an arc outfit, then you are wrong, as this is not possible.

It is the writer's opinion that the choice of Mazda equipment should rest solely on the merits of that equipment alone and should not be influenced by the results which can be obtained from arc systems.

The two principal advantages of the Mazda lamp are its economy of operation and comparative simplicity of handling. This operating simplicity makes it possible for the projectionist to work the equipment with great efficiency, thereby avoiding undue waste of wattage.

With the Mazda outfit there is only one right condition—that is, the manner of adjusting, or aligning, the system—and if the projectionist makes himself thoroughly familiar with that one condition and keeps the system properly set up at all times, he will reach a high degree of efficiency. More so than is possible with any form of arc lamp system—especially the old vertical form of arc.

Fine for Small Theatres

There is no doubt concerning the ability of Mazda lamp to give excellent projection in small theatres. The years during which it has done this in theatres constitutes proof of this statement. Its field of use is limited to small theatres as the manufacturers of the equipment limit their claims to a projection distance not exceeding 125 ft. and a screen width not exceeding 16 ft. Best results for the equipment are claimed for those theatres having a seating capacity of not more than 1,000 seats.

In the small theatre, then, the Mazda outfit will project a picture which will be bright enough for ordinary purposes. Everything favors the incandescent lamp in the small theatre field.

Yet the fact remains that the incandescent lamp type of projector cannot possibly equal the arc lamp system in point of screen illumination, on an ampere for ampere basis. The reflector arc has fully proved this statement.

Definition Not As Good

Strictly from an argumentative standpoint, the incandescent lamp projector cannot project pictures which will be as sharply defined as those projected by any form of direct current arc system, considered on the basis of equal screen illumination. Yet the Mazda lamp outfit will project pictures, which, for all ordinary purposes, will be clearly and sharply defined.

Keep Facts in Mind

In analyzing this statement, Friend Howell, you must keep in mind the following facts. The crater of a direct current arc has a surface brightness which is from five to six times greater than that of the Mazda lamp filament. In other words, its intensity of light radiation, per unit of light source seen, is not less than five times that of the incandescent lamp. Now, the only possible way in which the Mazda lamp projector can compete with the arc system on an equal screen illumination basis is by projecting a wide angle of light through the aperture and then using a projection lens of such diameter that the area of the Mazda lamp projection lens will offset the brightness handicap of the arc lamp. This is done by using a half-size projection lens for the Mazda outfit as compared with a quarter size lens for the arc.

Three-Blade Shutter With Mazda

As for the use of a three-blade shutter with the Mazda outfit, it was the early claim of the incandescent lamp manufacturers that another advantage of the Mazda lamp lay in the fact that a three-blade shutter, in preference to the two-blade style, could be used with no danger of flickering on the screen resulting.

The basis of this claim rested on the fact that with alternating current or projectors where the current had a frequency of 60 cycles per second, there was great danger of the three-blade shutter becoming synchronized with the "dark" crater periods of an arc with the likelihood that noticeable flicker would be observed on the screen.

At a projection speed of 60 ft. per minute, a three-blade shutter will cut the light beam 48 times per second. If the projection sped should be increased slightly above this (to 75 ft. per minute) the shutter blades will cut the beam 60 times per second and it is possible that the openings in the shutter would leave the projection lens "open" while the current through the arc was reversing, at which time that crater focussed by the condenser lenses would be "dark." The result would be flicker.

With the incandescent or alternating current, there is no perceptible dimming of the filament as the current passes through zero so that ther is no danger of flicker resulting when a three-blade shutter is used.

Williamsport, Pa. Theatre Opens Feb. 15

With the announcement on New Year's Monday that the modern new picture theatre he is building in Williamsport, Pa., will be named the "Park" and will be opened on February 15, Valentine C. Luppert gave a detailed description of the building which has some very distinctive features. The house will have a seating capacity of 1,500 and the seats will be arranged in a parabolic curve, which will give every member of the audience an equal chance to see the screen.

The stage will be large enough to put on big theatrical productions. The house, however, will open as an exclusively picture theatre, though later vaudeville may be added. A Marr & Colton three-manual organ will be installed and will be provided with a lift.

Publix' New Birmingham Theatre Holds Formal Opening

MARKED by the attendance of Sam Katz, president of Publix Theatres Corporation, and other officials of Publix, as well as many notables of the theatre world in the South, the formal opening of the palatial Alabama theatre, Birmingham, Ala., Monday, December 26, was an outstanding event. And, from all reports, the old enemy, "Box-Office Slump" was completely routed. The premiere bore real significance as the first unit of magnificent theatres Publix proposes to build in Alabama.

For more than a year, construction work has been going on at the Alabama and Publix, in presenting this new house to the public, has more than made good on its boast—"the best for Birmingham."

The Alabama possesses all of the magnificence and refinements of New York and Chicago's best theatres. Built on one of the best and most accessible locations in Birmingham, the theatre outwardly is distinctive in appearance. The largest upright sign in the South, measuring 60 feet in height and 12 feet in width, double-faced, with 4½-foot letters, containing 2,338 lamps, surmounts the marquee over the Third Avenue entrance and is duplicated by a similar sign on the 18th Street side of the house. The marquee attraction sign stands 12 feet high, is 35 feet long and projects from the building 12 feet.

The projection room has a fusible link system, which automatically shuts off the projection room from the rest of the house in case of fire. Three projection machines, with an effect machine for color stage combinations, one stereopticon and innumerable spotlights complete the projection equipment.

One unusual feature is the usher signal system and house telephone, which permits inter-theatre communication with any part of the house, and which makes for extreme ease in handling crowds.

The Wurlitzer organ, built to specifications made by Jesse Crawford, has a console in red and pale gold relief. The organ has four keyboards, with every known combination of stops. It is mounted on an elevator, which permits the instrument being used for either solo work or, out of sight as a picture accompaniment.

The backstage equipment is of the latest and most modern design. The electrical control lightboard on the stage can be set at the first of the week and lighting effects secured by throwing one switch. The board may be locked when electricians are off duty. The counterweight system of raising and lowering scenery and sets is employed and 50 different curtains may be hung, with this system of stage rigging, at one time. No sandbags or heavy pulling is necessary and everything is controlled by a small lever.

The manager and staff may preview pictures in the miniature projection room, adjacent to the main projection room. The musical director screens each picture and knows the exact number of feet to a certain scene, so that he may use the correct timing in his musical accompaniments.

The ventilation and refrigerating plants make no draft. Air is washed, dried and then forced down through high overhead ducts and is evenly distributed. Air is taken out by vents under the seats on the orchestra floor.

The Alabama will present the Publix shows, just as they are "set" for New York and Chicago. It will feature stage presentations by John Murray Anderson, Frank Cambria and Jack Partington. The stage band will be under direction of Ralph Pollack and the pit orchestra under Bruce Brummit. The Wurlitzer organ will be played by Joe Alexander.

Much credit for the splendid handling of the preliminaries leading up to the opening is due Sidney Dannenberg, manager of the Alabama. He has been in charge of Publix' Strand and Galax in Birmingham for the past two years and previous to that, was in the Metropolitan at Boston and the Criterion and Rivoli, New York City. He has had a thorough training in theatrical work and is a capable and energetic showman. His assistants are Steven L. Barutio, assistant manager, and Larry Cowen, in charge of advertising.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Blood Ship" — Columbia, Rialto Theatre, Washington

Evening Herald: "Thrills, to say the least. Better team than Bosworth and James could not have been chosen. Seitz's direction shows careful thought and study of conditions on high seas in days of sailing vessels."

Evening Express: "Virile story . . . has place for beauty, too. Comes not as a dash of cold water, but like shower bath of electric sparks, to revive movie appetite sated with saccharine and mechanical laughter."

News: "Mighty sea spectacle that will hold you until the finish. Bosworth brilliant . . . excellent supporting cast."

Star: "Sparkling story, crowded with action and thrills and with delicate and charming love tale . . . gripping yarn. Picture an artistic masterpiece."

Herald: "Vivid drama of sea . . . packed with action and containing enough thrills for half dozen pictures. Bosworth heads splendid cast."

"The Way of All Flesh"—Paramount, Rivoli and Olympia Theatres, Stockholm, Sweden

Svenska Dagblaget: "Jannings with Paramount is same Jannings that formed pride of Germany. Change of air has not hurt him; on contrary, one would say that all the best that marked his Ufa films is also found in his first American picture."

Forlets Dagblad Politiken: "Jannings' presentation and impersonation of August Schilling greatest event in film art up to present."

Aftonbladet: "American film, in this case Paramount, could not have given a better presentation of this world-renowned actor."

Stockholm Tidingen: "A compliment to both Paramount and Jannings."

"The Crystal Cup"—First National, Loew's State Theatre, Los Angeles

Daily News: "There is a great deal in this picture to enjoy and think about. Is really different, thanks to Gertrude Atherton, the authoress, Dorothy Mackaill and Mulhall, who are co-featured in it. Mrs. Atherton has a mind quick to grasp at a new idea which others hesitate to express, and weaves interesting and startlingly fine fabric from her imagination. One thing is certain, Dorothy Mackail has never had a better screen role, and never before has her real charm of manner, her grace and her sheer histrionic ability been so evident. The girl is positively fascinating in her latest role, and this picture should serve to win her thousands of loyal fans."

Record: "Dorothy Mackaill is the featured player and audience 'learned about women from her.' Role is a new one to her, and she does a distinctive piece of work. . . . Photography excellent, as is direction."

"American Beauty" — First National, Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia

Evening Ledger: "Vivacious, enchanting and fascinating Billie Dove carries leading role. We are sure none but she could have done it quite so artistically or convincingly. She veritably lives part with such disingenuous charm that we are warmed quite unwittingly to her side. . . . This lavish display of adjectives should not alone be showered on Miss Dove. Picture is unusually well cast."

Morning Ledger: "New Cinderella story with thorough packing of thrills and sweetness . . . there is an abundance of action and whimsical humor that makes film really enjoyable entertainment. Billie attempts something other than usual conventional and statuesque roles that have been her lot and proves to be exceptionally clever actress, tempering her initial comedy role with touches of seriousness, and, at times, pathos. Lloyd Hughes quite excels himself."

Daily News: "Billie Dove comes into her own as a comedienne. Heretofore, she has played mostly conventional dramatic roles. It is a new Miss Dove."

"King of Kings" — Pathe - De Mille, Hartman Theatre, Columbus, O.

Journal: "Stronger than any sermon, as dramatic as any play, as human as anything from real life. It is very obvious that deep study and careful research, besides heartfelt performance of work at hand, were back of this great production, one that no one, believer or unbeliever, should miss.

Columbia Dispatch: "Greatest contribution of art to glorification of Christian religion since Haendel wrote 'The Messiah.' It offers, at the Hartman (and the engagement is positively for this week only) an opportunity to see some sublime acting, some altogether miraculous achievements in effects and also to hear gospel messages as reverently presented as in the 'Ben-Hur' of General Wallace or in the life of Christ by Papini or in the canvases of Leonardo da Vinci. We would not say merely that this picture is greater than any sermon; we also would say that it is almost as great as any drama. De Mille could die now and still belong to the ages."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles

Herald: "Worthy experiment towards something different in film fare. Great success with audience which reacted frequently and favorably. Beautiful sets and their magnitude will be a subject of comment wherever picture is shown."

Daily News: "Best example of composite screen art and comedy seen here in some time. Helen's life a fascinating revelation. Korda deserves laurel branch for a fine job. Tall, vivacious blonde woman—not young, not old—possessor of classic features and a dazzling warmth in the eyes; poise, grace, a sense of dramatic and comedy balance, different—that's Maria Corda. Stone hasn't been as well cast in years. Gorgeous, dainty, graceful frocks . . . and photography that enhances all rare beauty that has been put into sets, costumes and action . . . Titles which sparkle with wit and humor."

Times: "Something unique . Projects piquant paprika of delightful burlesque . . . Step into new territory that audiences will find interesting . . . Ingenuity manifested at many moments . . . Very enjoyable, sometimes brilliantly humorous . . . Certain charm and whimsey in many of Maria Corda's scenes. Stone excellent—one of best performances he has ever given."

Express: "In treatment unique, in subject matter unconventional, in appeal to sight spectacular and strikingly beautiful — that relief from stencil movie for which cries have gone up . . . Delicious with high comedy. Settings of sweeping beauty and magnificence. Story has bettered Erskine without deviating at all from spirit of delicate travesty . . . Bold, brave and beautiful departure from routine story and treatment of photoplays. Maria Corda acts with finesse, and a happier selection (for Helen) would seem to have been impossible. Stone gives the cunning skill of ripe artistry."

Record: "Erskine's sly, satirical novel comes to screen as rich burlesque. Is a film you will enjoy. Was made to be funny and it is. Sub-titles clever. Stone does fine characterization. One of best parts he has had recently, and he fills it admirably. Korda has handled film in only way it could have been handled."

Examiner: "Original in its treatment. We can sincerely congratulate both Korda and First National for offering something out of beaten path. Miss Corda beautiful, statuesque and decorative enough to carry Helen's reputation for fairness of face and form. Her claim to histrionic ability has not been overrated. Is sure to bring other pictures of same kind."

"Sunrise"—Fox Films, Capitol Theatre, Berlin, Germany

Neue Berliner: "This work reveals itself as the best, maturest and most artistic film of the world."

Berliner Morgenpost: "A remarkable unity of book, direction, acting and photography. We are glad that it all made such a film."

Der Filmspiegel—"Murnau created from his innermost, true artistic talent. A ballad with remarkable continuity, richness of contrast in landscape, human life and desires which only a Murnau can picture for us.

Kinematograph: "The first great work of Murnau in Hollywood. O'Brien and Janet Gaynor are startlingly good. We credit the best film of this time to art of the German director, F. W. Murnau."

Der Film: "'Sunrise' one of the most artistic films we have seen thus far. Will be enjoyed by hundreds of thousands and will make hundreds of thousands of new friends for motion pictures."

Nechtausgabe—"A genuine work of art, script, direction and acting, novelties, photographic revelation, —a tremendous success."

Reichsfilm Blatt—"Not only a masterpiece—it is a great event. Film which everybody should see."

Film Echo: "We stop in wonderment before such a work of genius, a master achievement—film which makes you think."

Licht Bild Buhne: "Murnau's direction beyond all criticism. Master achievement of expressive art in films."

"The Private Life of Helen of Troy"—First National, Globe Theatre, New York City

World—"Decorative, revealing, wise-cracking and brightly amusing comedy. Maria Corda an amazingly attractive young woman, gifted with grace and poise. Stone, one of greatest light comedians in pictures, plays in semi-serious bantering mood which contrasts to perfection with clinging, earthy, sensuous movements of Miss Corda. Large list of performers . . . has caught securely on to snickerish, kidding tone. Settings, back-drops and exteriors well fashioned and make for atmosphere. Performance by Miss Corda quite astonishing."

Times—"Combination of 1927 colloquialisms with replicas of ancient settings and modes makes this film most amusing. Skilfully produced. Production an ambitious affair. Good deal of credit due to title writer for humor and also to Edouarde for musical score. No better choice than Maria Corda for role of Helen. Quietly amusing, fascinating and fully cognizant of her feminine attraction. Stone gives capital performance."

Herald Tribune—"Subtitles contain some of wisest cracks we have seen on the screen. We haven't had so much fun in long time. Robust burlesque with touches risque if not risky. Stone superb comedian. Maria Corda handsome . . . . photographed far better than she has ever been before. Fine comedienne and she has advantage of skilful direction. Excellent performances by all employed."

"The Life of Riley"—First National, Liberty Theatre, Seattle

Times: "Murray and Sidney, the two funsters who provide audiences with many hearty laughs in their latest funfest. Each of these comedians has been famous singly. . . . . Their work together in 'The Life of Riley,' however, reaches new heights in mirth-making for Sidney and Murray, individually and as a team. . . . All in all, an excellent comedy dish for those who like to smile, giggle, chuckle or howl."

What About 1928?

INDICATIONS are that it will be a year of record theatre building and of enormous increases in theatre earnings

It is not straining a point to say that all eyes of the industry are focused on building programs and all far sighted exhibitors are preparing for a record year's business.

Producers will offer the public pictures of a standard of quality never before achieved. Elaborate advertising programs will create tremendous "movie appeal". General prosperity will send record crowds in search of better and better entertainment. Will they find it at your theatre?

What better stroke of business judgment could you exercise than to get your projection equipment in such condition that patrons will choose your theatre as one where pictures may be seen at their best.

Simplex offers you the service that has won prosperity for thousands of exhibitors---the achievement of years of engineering progress---expert advice on projection problems---the best projection possible. The only tangible security for your present---the nucleus for future business.

Take advantage of Simplex Service and secure your full share of this new year of prosperity.

SIMPLEX PROJECTORS FOR BETTER PROJECTION

it's an inspiration!

It's an inspiration to prepare advertising for such a masterpiece as Emil Jannings' "THE LAST COMMAND." Just as it's an inspiration for you as an exhibitor to run such a picture. The public warmly thanks you for calling their attention to real entertainment!

The Morgan Lithograph Co executed posters for "The Last Command," Harold Lloyd in "Speedy" (produced by Lloyd Corp.), "Beau Sabreur," "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," "Legion of the Condemned," "Old Ironsides," "Street of Sin," "Tillie's Punctured Romance," and other big PARAMOUNT specials. General Offices: Cleveland, Ohio. Branch Offices: New York and Los Angeles. Plants: New York City—Elmhurst, Long Island. . . .

We have just finished a sensational engagement on Gilbert and Garbo in "Love," and look forward eagerly to
"The Student Prince" with Novarro and Shearer, and
"The Enemy." These big ones together with "Ben-Hur" and
"Big Parade" certainly put
M-G-M in a class by itself.
Chaney in "London After Midnight" and Gilbert in "Man, Woman and Sin" were fine, and
I'm certainly glad I signed.

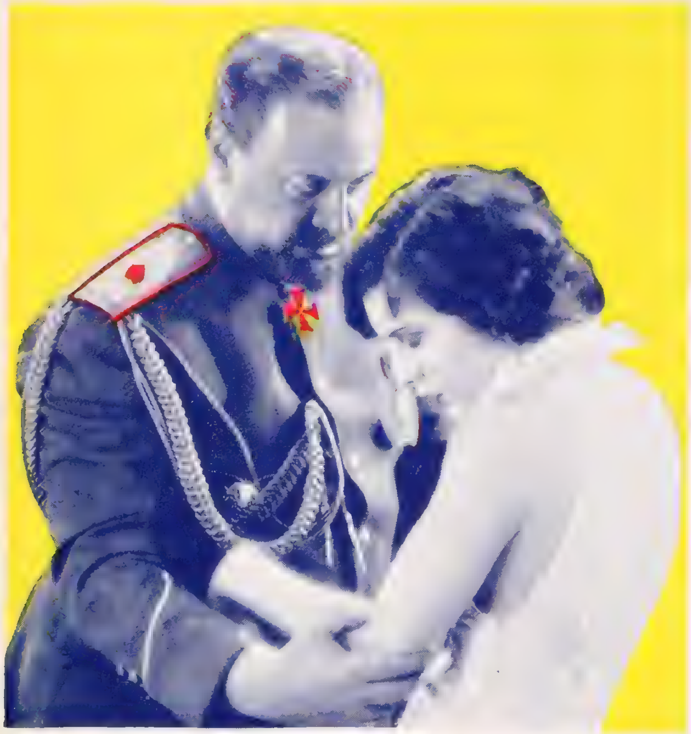
no finer entertainment will be released by anybody in 1928!

With Evelyn Brent, William Powell and all-star cast.
Produced by Josef von Sternberg. Story by Lajos Biro.

the outstanding dramatic artist of them all!



¶ Giant star of the new era in pictures! Emil Jannings. "Variety" and "The Way of All Flesh" have rocketed him into the front rank of stars in America. ¶ Ready made audiences everywhere for his second and greatest American production—"THE LAST COMMAND." Produced by the man who made "Underworld." ¶ Jannings as the Czar's favorite, brutal, arrogant military commander. Swept down by the torrent of revolution and his mad infatuation for the beautiful woman who came to kill him. Outcast, all gone, all but his mighty, burning spirit. Then—one of the most amazing climaxes in screen history! ¶ The world will acclaim "THE LAST COMMAND" a masterpiece! . . . .

"BEAU SABREUR"

Variety—

"SABREUR," $53,200 AT THE MET, BOSTON

Boston, Jan 10.

"Beau Sabreur," at the Met, did a whale of a business from the start of its engagement here. It packed them at every performance with the house attendance, not money, record broken and with the police called to keep order. Five shows a day could not start to take care of the demand.

An Important VOCA

Features of

of Interest to YOU

TONE—The quality of tone of the music and sound effects is as near perfect as the highest development of the best modern methods of recording and amplification can make it. In music, the tones are rich, full and true. In effects, the utmost realism is achieved.

SYNCHRONIZATION—Pictures and sound are perfectly synchronized and protected against the slightest deviation from perfect harmony.

SIMPLICITY—Vocafilm is so simple that no technical help or extra help of any kind is required for its operation. Any motion picture operator can handle it easily with one day's instruction and operation.

COST—The cost is surprisingly low, by far the lowest of any pictures-and-sound device on the market. No service fees, seat tax or extra fees of any kind are charged. Upkeep cost is negligible.

TERMS—The terms of payment are within the reach of practically every theatre, the smallest as well as the largest.

Announcement about

FILM

VOCAFILM will soon be available to every theatre through the Educational Exchanges in the United States and Canada.

The introduction of VOCAFILM to the American exhibitor marks the beginning of a new era in theatre music and entertainment in sound generally. This simple device for the synchronization of motion pictures and sound achieves a beauty of tone and a perfection of synchronization that are a revelation. Its ease and simplicity of operation and economy in original cost and maintenance make it practical for any house, anywhere. Thus there is brought to the smallest town the highest type of "acts" and of musical entertainment synchronized with pictures that is possible to the greatest theatre on New York's Broadway.

Announcement will be made soon of the details of Educational's release schedule of VOCAFILM "acts" and pictures synchronized with music through VOCAFILM.

Ask your Educational Exchange for information as to the cost of VOCAFILM to your theatre. You will be amazed at the low initial cost, the easy terms of payment, and the practically negligible cost of maintenance.

THEY WANT ROMANCE!

The experience of MR. HARRY ZEITZ of NEW BEDFORD, MASS. described below, indicates that the public trend right now is definitely for love romances. M-G-M is prepared to meet the demand with "Love," "The Student Prince" and "The Enemy."

TRY THIS OUT ON YOUR AUDIENCE!

MR. Harry Zeitz has the confidence
AND esteem of his large and steady patronage.
HE did an interesting thing last week—
HE showed ten slides of the BEST available pictures to run in his BIG new State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass.
"THE Student Prince" (Novarro-Shearer-Lubitsch combination!)—

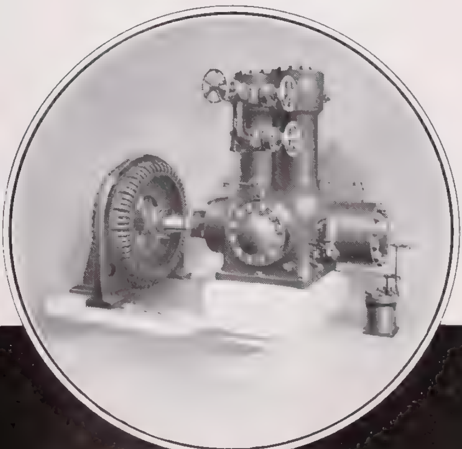
York air conditioned Theatres attract the discriminating Public

There are no two ways about it—the motion picture theatre of today has got to accept air conditioning as a box office factor. More and better houses are being planned and built—and the ones equipt to dispense comfort along with their entertainment are the ones which will enjoy an all year 'round patronage. In other words, physical comfort is just as important to your patron as the enjoyment he derives from your offering.

The Indiana is one of the showhouses of the industry. Architecturally, it is an art masterpiece, a house in which you would naturally expect the best in equipment, appointments, etc. As for refrigeration and air conditioning the York Carbon Dioxide system was chosen. At the present time there are more than 30 York air cooled and conditioned theatres.



The York Carbon Dioxide system of air cooling and conditioning has been developed to meet the requirements of ordinances regulating the use of refrigerating systems for public buildings. It is adaptable to practically any floor layout. Highly efficient in results produced, its cost per seat per day is well within economical bounds. The York system is odorless and practically noiseless in operation.

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MANAGEMENT

By HAROLD B. FRANKLIN

President of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and former Vice President of Publix Theatres.

Published by the George H. Doran Company, New York, this Monumental Work is truly a valuable manual of scientific Methods, crystallizing in a volume of 365 pages the knowledge and experience gained by Mr. Franklin during a distinguished career as a theatre executive.

For The Theatre Manager

Nothing Like This Book Has Ever Been Written Before

FOR the first time in the history of this business there is offered a book giving a detailed study and complete exposition of the Management and Operating methods of the Motion Picture Theatre. It is replete with expert information covering every department of management from building and its construction to the organization and maintainence of efficient house staffs and the arrangement of programs.

Tells How to Make Your Theatre Conform to Modern Standards

ACTUAL experience is the authority upon which Mr. Franklin bases his explanations of the proper methods for building, equipping, managing and selling a theatre to the public. His connection with West Coast Theatres and his former association with Publix Theatres gives the work added significance as an accurate reflection of the standards which have been developed by the largest theatre operators.

For Circuit Operators

PROPER management of your theatres is important to you and the success of your individual properties depends largely upon the ability of your managers and the co-operation you give them. Several theatre chains are preparing to supply each one of their theatres with a copy of this book for the information and guidance of the manager, the advertising man, the head usher, and others.

For Theatre Managers

THERE is no better business investment than in your own business future. The cost of the book and the time required for its study will be as nothing compared to the added worth to yourself, those whose future to a large degree depends upon your business success, and the industry you serve, as a result of the self-improvement and better working methods you can acquire by means of adding to your own store of knowledge the knowledge of a man who has reached the top of his profession from a start at the bottom of the ladder in theatre business.

For Ushers, Doormen, Etc.

THE aspiring usher, doorman, cashier or other employee who looks forward to a career of success in the theatre will find this a text book offering the complete harvest of experience and study by a theatre executive and including standards of judgment as to qualifications looked for in the men who are given posts of responsibility with large circuits.

35 Chapters and 26 Illustrations

Including reproducions of Box Office and Weekly reports, Inspection Reports, Lost and Found Blanks, Time Schedules, Inventory Records, Purchase Orders, and many other system helps.

Tell You How—

To train and maintain an organization that will function smoothly in the running of your theatre.

To provide adequate safety methods for the protection of the public and the theatre property.

To carry on systematic inspections that insure the realization of your ideals regarding Service and good Showmanship.

To prepare a properly balanced budget and put method into your system of accounting control.

To judge the effectiveness of theatre advertising and exploitation.

Block Booking and the Brookhart Bill

Coercion and Intimidation Should Be Outlawed

By William A. Johnston

WE stand, as we have stood for fifteen years, for the constructive progress of this industry. So we offer what we believe to be a constructive thought:

Coercive block-booking should be abolished voluntarily by those in the industry who are responsible for it.

After careful analysis and consideration of the Brookhart Bill, we must oppose it. As written, it would mean Governmental control of this business.

Make no mistake about our position:

Compulsory block-booking should be outlawed. It is a measure of oppression; it is coercion, it forces poor product through the channels of the industry to the public.

If an exhibitor wishes to buy en bloc, well and good. If he does not wish to do so, it is all wrong to make him.

But the Brookhart Bill, in its entirety, is a serious threat to the business life of the motion picture, because it would give a Government Commission what amounts to the right to fix film prices.

It also provides that the Commission may make its own rules and regulations for enforcing the act.

With this, we cannot agree. It seems to us unjustified Governmental interference with private business and class legislation of a menacing sort.

It opens the way to political control of this great medium of expression. This we cannnt view with complacency.

Coercive block-booking and unfair discrimination in the allocation of product ought, by all the laws of right and justice, to be outlawed.

But—outlawed by the industry itself—and now—and not by legislative fiat.

Obviously, such a measure as Senator Brookhart's could not be made effective unless it had an enforcing agency. And that would mean, as we said before, Governmental regulation of the motion picture industry.

Therefore, we are against the bill as drawn—just as surely as we are against coercive block-booking and all other forms of coercion. And there are several other forms.

It is, in fact, high time that coercion and intimidation as business measures—if they can be called "business"—should be stopped in this industry. Time also that stupidity, insolence, and dollar-grabbing in high places in the film world be replaced by intelligence and some regard for the rights of other people.

The introduction of the Brookhart Bill, whether it ever becomes a law or not, ought to be a warning. In spite of all the sapheadedness recently shown in several quarters in this industry, surely there are brains enough to see the handwriting on the wall. There must be intelligence enough to meet this issue squarely, and in the only way it can be met, with a guarantee of safety to the industry's future.

It should not be necessary—and certainly it would be very unfortunate—to air the troubles of this business publicly at a Wash-

The Industry on Trial

THE time has come, it would seem, when this industry's relation with its trade press should be as impersonal, intelligent and dignified as befits an industry with some fifty million regular consumers and some sixty thousand public stockholders.

* * * *

It appears that, about a year ago, representative executives of most of the film companies formed a committee on trade paper advertising. An allotment was agreed upon of so many advertising pages per picture.

Let us say that the intentions of this committee were sincerely economical. The action, nevertheless, has proven destructive, and wasteful.

For one thing the agreement has not been kept.

For another thing, it couldn't be kept.

* * * *

Advertising is a selling effort.

And for competitors in business to get together and standardize their selling effort by arbitrary rules of procedure is unprecedented and impossible—in any business.

Just at present the film companies are crying out against the Brookhart bill because it would impose government commission rule upon this business. Yet they are endeavoring, by just such committees as the one cited, to govern themselves by commission rule of thumb.

Any school boy knows that the life blood of business is competition. The surest way to flatten out this large and spirited effort to make, distribute and exhibit the world's leading entertainment is to have committees of competitors pass upon and fix every forward and upward move the business attempts to make.

Every industry today has its association of interests. That is excellent. The functions of these associations, like for instance the steel institute, is to build better public relations, cultivate the world market, advance industrial welfare work, protect the common interests of the industry.

For these reasons and to these ends the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association was formed. It came at a critical time, and much good has been accomplished. But its function has been the outside relations of the industry—a job great enough and important enough to take all the best effort of the best men obtainable. Its function has not been and must not be to govern the inner and competitive activities of the business. Committees, we repeat, are not merely highly dangerous: they are impossible.

* * * *

The agreement in advertising has not been kept.

Naturally.

Just as soon as any one company felt compelled to stimulate its sales effort, for some good and inevitable reason, a resort was had to direct mail advertising. It was a subterfuge; an expedient; a poor one and an expensive one. But a necessary one, in lieu of trade paper advertising.

If the necessary bulletins on pictures don't reach the exhibitor through one channel they must go through others—however inefficient and expensive.

Some 1800 trade papers in this country with a total gross business turnover of some $200,000,000 are the recognized economical and efficient carriers of dealer bulletins.

The motion picture trade press has every right to demand, for itself and for the sake of the industry it has so well served, this same recognition.

If they are not to have this recognition then there is, I sincerely believe, little to be said in behalf of this industry's present intelligence and future stability.

* * * *

This has been said and it is true: this industry does not support the trade papers; the trade papers support this industry. True, absolutely true, of the past and the present.

The better theatres that have made possible better pictures and better prices for them, better illumination, better projection, better theatre operation—all these advances in box-office success are importantly a result of trade paper promotion.

The good name of this industry in the public prints is due to the efforts of the trade press. If the executives of this industry do not know this fact, I do and first hand, that every important newspaper in this country and Europe looks to the reputable trade paper for the facts about the American picture and the picture industry.

What a force is here—for construction!

Yet Motion Picture News asks no support from this industry for its services—asks nothing and will take nothing. We publish no special editions. We ask no gratuities.

We sell subscriptions for a price and we offer advertising pages at a price. Both are sold strictly as commodities. Value for value. No strings attached. These values are not for committees to regulate, any more than are picture rentals to be so decided.

* * * *

The advertising in a trade paper is a service to the dealer, not a contribution to the trade paper. A retrenchment in advertising is a retrenchment in service. Just that and nothing else.

* * * *

I do not hesitate to say that a crisis has been reached with trade papers in this field. And I feel that the solution is squarely up to the executives in this industry.

* * *

The trade papers are not on trial. The industry is on trial.

Brookhart's Own Views on Bill

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

Washington Correspondent, Motion Picture News

(Copyright, 1928, by Motion Picture News)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 17.—Attorney General Sargent has been asked to render an opinion on the bill to prohibit blind and block booking and discrimination in the sale and lease of motion picture films, it developed today when Senator Brookhart of Iowa, author of the measure, interviewed by the Washington correspondent of Motion Picture News, declared that he expected to receive the Attorney General's views on the measure within the next few days.

There is no thought of Federal regulation behind the bill, the Senator asserted today. It was not not his idea, he explained, to have its provisions reach out to cover activities within the industry beyond those specified. "The principles are simple and direct," he said.

"There is no motive in the bill or in the spirit of the measure beyond its plain provisions," Senator Brookhart continued.

"There is no concealed purpose, and," he added, when asked whether he had conferred with persons whose views are inimical to the motion picture industry, "the reformers have not been consulted."

"I have never given any consideration, for instance, to the question of censorship. As a principle I do not believe in it. Perhaps there are some specific things that go too far, but there is nothing in my bill, or in any idea I may hold, that has a bearing on that."

The measure is constitutional, in the Senator's opinion. "I have a very full brief as to the constitutionality of my bill," he said. "I think it will stand the test of the courts, just as has the stockyards act. The Constitution is sufficiently far-reaching to cover a proposition such as mine."

The matter of hearings on the bill has been taken up by the Senator with Senator Watson of Indiana, chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, and he has been led to believe that hearings on the measure will be held at an early date, following the disposal of the Walsh resolution on an investigation of public utility corporations, which is now engaging the attention of the committee.

Senator Brookhart has received letters and telegrams of commendation from all parts of the country, from independent theater owners, and is said to have been given some support even from other branches of the industry.

There is some idea around the Capitol that quite a bit of politics will be found to center in this measure before it is finally disposed of. The gossip on the Hill is that Will Hays being affiliated with a political faction in Indiana opposed to the "Jim" Watson faction, the latter will not be inclined to pull any chestnuts out of the fire for the former.

Exhibitor Units Back Brookhart Anti-Block Booking Bill

Similar Measure Introduced in House by Congressman Cannon; Hearings Before Senate Interstate Commerce Committee Expected Soon

NEW and important developments came rapidly this week in the Brookhart Bill situation, chief among them being active and aggressive support of the anti-block booking measure from independent exhibitor organizations.

R. F. Woodhull, President of the M.P.T.O.A., issued a statement in which he favored the passage of the bill provided Federal regulation of the industry can be obviated.

A measure virtually identical with the Brookhart Bill in the Senate was introduced in the House by Representative Cannon (Republican) of Missouri.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City has started a vigorous campaign in favor of the bill and has called a rally at the Hotel Astor for January 26.

The Board of Trustees of the M.P.T.O. of Ohio has endorsed the bill and is working actively for its adoption.

In Cleveland, the local exhibitors' association is unanimously for the measure, and will carry its fight against block-booking to the public with screen appeals.

W. A. Steffes, President of the Northwest M.P.T.O., in New York this week, stated that he expected the bill would be endorsed by his organization through a poll now being taken of members by telegraph.

The Michigan M.P.T.O., according to General Manager H. M. Richey, will campaign actively for the Brookhart measure.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, at a meeting this week, deferred action until later, feeling that careful study of the measure should be made first.

The statement issued on January 13 by President Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. follows:

Woodhull's Statement

"In the consideration of the Brookhart Bill as in other public situations affecting the motion picture industry it has always been my policy to give careful consideration to every phase before making a declaration.

"This bill is national in scope and will profoundly affect the entire industry. Theatre owners who have devoted unlimited time and energy to the advancement of their business and who have given great study to its many uncertainties nationally want to give careful consideration to any move of this character before taking a position from which they will not be able to recede.

"In the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America my worthy predecessors in office and myself have always counselled the most careful consideration of vital propositions and we have consistently refused to be stampeded into lines of procedure without weighing the different elements carefully.

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is a national organization and is obliged under all the rules of fair procedure to consider all situations in a national way. Accordingly, national officers with whom I discussed this proposition agreed with me that aside from any general consideration we would give this measure that we should ascertain directly from the author of the bill just what he believed it would accomplish if passed.

R. F. Woodhull, President of the M. P. T. O. A.

"Secretary M. J. O'Toole went to Washington and called on Senator Brookhart and discussed the bill with him.

"The Senator said that certain exhibitors in his own state of Iowa and others talked with him about the matter, having special reference to the action of the Federal Trade Commission on the question of block booking and the order from that body to one of the producing and distributing companies to 'cease and desist.'

"He said he had given considerable attention to the farmers' situation with respect to trade matters and that others had recently enlisted his aid as a Senator for another line of business and that this bill referring to motion pictures was in line with his general policy to try to promote and advance equitable trade relations in all lines of endeavor.

As to Federal Regulation

"The matter of federal regulation as applied to the motion picture business was brought to the attention of the Senator and the danger of bringing this medium of expression within the control of political agencies was suggested. He said that he believed this could be obviated, but that he felt the way to handle the proposed law would be through the Federal Trade Commission or some such Governmental agency.

"That compulsory block booking is a trade evil in the motion picture industry which should be wiped out is a fact upon which all unaffiliated exhibitors will surely agree. If it can be done through the Brookhart Bill, and Senator Brookhart expressed the belief that it can be done that way, of course the proper thing to do is to pass the bill.

"Therefore, my conclusion in a sentence is—If we can obviate any danger to our business which may come through Federal regulation then let us work unitedly for the passage of the Bill. Senator Brookhart said he believed the could procure a hearing by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate on or about January 16th. If the Walsh Public Utility measure, which has precedence, he said, could be placed in the hands of a special committee or subcommittee then the Block Booking Bill would get the right of way. If not, it would of necessity be deferred until a later date.

"We should prepare for the hearing in a manner which will enable us to present the most effective argument in its favor. Members of Congress in general, and especially

Reported Distributors Would Offset Brookhart Bill by Contract Changes

THE meetings of distributor and exhibitor committees to change the standard exhibition contract, scheduled to begin in Chicago, January 30, assumed new importance this week and appear likely to have an important bearing on the Brookhart Bill situation.

It is understood the distributor conferees will propose including in the new contract some of the points sought by the block booking bills introduced in Senate and House by Senator Brookhart of Iowa and Representative Cannon, of Missouri, respectively.

In case these new clauses are approved at the Chicago meetings, it is believed the distributors will then urge, in opposition to the bills, at the Washington hearing, that the industry has voluntarily adopted trade practices which the Brookhart-Cannon measures seek to make compulsory by law; and has done so without outside regulation.

A proposal by Frank J. Rembusch, of Indiana, that a general convention of exhibitors be called in Chicago, January 30, has been referred by President R. F. Woodhull to the members of the unaffiliated exhibitor group which attended the Trade Practice Conference.

In his statement, Mr. Woodhull also requests suggestions from all exhibitors on proposed contract changes for consideration by the distributor-exhibitor committees on contract revision at meetings to open in Chicago Jan. 31.

"Inasmuch as I know of no funds available for expenses," Mr. Woodhull writes in his letters to the unaffiliated exhibitors, "I would appreciate a wire from you giving your advice regarding this matter as I hesitate calling men such a distance without being assured of their approval.

"The first day of the Contract Committee meeting (January 31st) will be devoted to an open forum during which everyone can present his suggestions to the Contract Committee.

"I wish to call your attention to the fact that this Contract Committee was appointed, with power, by the sixty-six delegates in conference under the auspices of the Federal Trade Commission.

"I sincerely hope that you or your organization or any other individual who has any suggestions will see that they are placed before the Contract Committee for consideration."

Exhibitor Units Back Brookhart Bill

the experienced law-makers who are on the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, want only facts and conclusions. Therefore any move by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and we hope this will be fully concurred in by exhibitors generally and all in favor of the Brookhart Bill, is to approach this situation in Washington seriously and understandingly."

Ohio Takes Action

At the meeting of the Board of Trustees of the M.P.T.O. of Ohio, held January 11 at the Deshler-Wallick hotel, Columbus, it was unanimously agreed to lend active support to the Brookhart bill which was introduced into the United States Senate.

According to P. J. Wood, business manager of the M.P.T.O. of Ohio, the enactment of this bill into a law will do much towards correcting the evils which now exist within the motion picture industry as between the producer and exhibitor.

"Motion pictures represent so large a proportion of the peoples' entertainment that the general public should be vitally interested in this bill introduced by Senator Brookhart of Iowa. The bill not only aims to give relief to the independent exhibitors of the country, but also raise the standard of picture production so that the exhibitor will be enabled to offer better entertainment to his patrons," Mr. Wood stated.

Compelling exhibitors to buy their pictures "sight unseen" and in blocks is not only unfair to them but to the public as well, for the reason that the exhibitor must use the mediocre pictures as well as the good ones if he is to make any kind of a profit at all, Mr. Wood further declared.

The M.P.T.O. of Ohio will have its members post one-sheets in the theatre lobbies and run trailers, explaining the bill to the public, and asking the public's support by writing letters to congressmen and senators approving it.

George W. Erdmann, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, has had 115 75-foot trailers made which will be sent to every member of the association, together with one-sheets for lobby and foyer displays. Trailers and one-sheets enlist public sentiment in favor of the Brookhart bill, giving the names and addresses of congressmen and senators to whom letters of support should be addressed.

New York Senate May See Censor Bill Soon

ALL efforts will be devoted during the next two or three weeks in reporting out of committee the Cuvillier motion picture censorship bill which has been introduced in one house of the Legislature at Albany, N. Y., and which will probably be introduced in the Senate within the next few days. There is no question but that the legislative session this year will be a short one, probably concluding about March 15th. Supporters of the repeal bill believe that if the measure can be brought before both houses before the rush and tumble incidental to the closing week that it will stand not only a better chance of being presented at a public hearing, but that it will also receive more attention and support from the legislatures when it comes to a vote.

T.O.C.C. Calls Rally

Declaring that "the war is on" the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, is broadcasting a call to independent exhibitors to attend the "rally for liberty" luncheon at the Astor, January 26. The purpose of the rally is to map plans to aid passage of the Brookhart bill now pending in Congress.

The T.O.C.C. has endorsed the bill and pledged its best efforts to secure enactment of the measure. Several organizations throughout the country have done likewise. J. Arthur Hirsch is chairman of the T.O.C.C. committee which is campaigning for passage of the Brookhart bill, which seeks to prohibit block and blind booking and arbitrary allocation of product.

"You must take sides now either with the independent exhibitor or against him," says a broadside issued by the T.O.C.C. calling upon exhibitors to back the Brookhart bill: "Soon Congress will save us by passing the great Brookhart bill forbidding block selling, avoiding blind booking, giving us a free, open, honest way to get film for our independent houses—taking the power away from the giant producers and their affiliated theatres."

"Save your investments, get a square deal, be a real American," the broadcast concludes.

"IT is about time that this talk of the 'presentation problem' was transferred to the other side and set down as 'Problem No. I' on the producers' lists," writes Harry F. Storin, Manager of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., in a letter to the Editor of Motion Picture News.

His letter, coming from the firing-line of practical experience, is one of the most sensible we have yet received on the presentation question. He writes:

"I AM sure that all your readers are greatly indebted to you for the publication of Harold Franklin's letter and Irving Thalberg's remarks to Edwin Schallert. I have been impressed with their views and feel certain that the dissemination of such information certainly makes a trade press worthwhile.

"I know Mr. Franklin's conclusions come after a great study of the 'presentation problem.' There is, however, one point which has not yet been commented upon, a point from the public's side. I have my own ideas on this particular phase of the situation as to the public reaction and the effects which will be felt by all motion picture theatre operators. I pass them along in the hope that others may express their ideas on this point.

"I have found from experience that the majority of theatregoers are under the impression that presentation is a modified or elaborated form of 'vaudeville'; they refer to it as 'vâudeville' and I am reluctant to believe they will ever accept it as any other form of entertainment than 'vaudeville,' despite the fancy names given it. Naturally, there are exceptions to this rule, but I am speaking of the great mass of theatregoers who are the mainstay of successful theatre operation.

"Since the presentation part of the entertainment offered is being augmented day after day, is it not reasonable to believe that the motion picture theatre is losing a great part of its individuality as such and becoming some sort of a combined picture-vaudeville theatre?

"Hence, if we are to maintain motion picture theatres and enthusiastic patronage it naturally develops that we must have a liberal supply of good motion picture attractions. It follows that, as the percentage of good pictures rises, the importance of presentation drops, and if there is a predominance of weak pictures, the importance of presentation is apparent as an absolute economic factor. Theatres know no set rules to attain success other than by the giving of good shows regularly. If we are to have successful motion picture theatre operation it means that we have got to have successful picture programs. I believe this is a common sense viewpoint."

MR. STORIN continues: "It is certainly within reason to augment one's program with 'presentation' or 'vaudeville' when it is impossible to obtain the necessary quota of good box-office attractions, and it is certainly not necessary to have a microscope to see that there are few large theatres in this country which are getting their quotas. It is about time that this talk of the 'presentation problem' was transferred to the other side and set down as 'Problem No. 1' on the producers' lists. It is a warning sign to them; it is a savior to many a so-called 'motion picture theatre' today.

"As for Mr. Thalberg's worries over 'knockers,' I would advise him to forget these 'tempests in teapots,' or at least expend his energy in sifting the soap-box orations against him personally from real constructive motion picture criticism. Certainly the majority of theatregoers are not interested in the inside politics or technique of studios. They eternally cry, 'Give us a story,' and they care not for the accumulation of experts but the accumulation of good story-tellers. Let's call a spade a spade and allow that the demand for real stories is not being supplied in picture form in numbers enough to keep cashiers busy the country over."

STRESSING his point still further, Mr. Storin adds: "If, as he says, some exhibitors adopt an apologetic attitude, he confuses it with a diplomatic reply to a regular patron's inquiry as to 'where in all creation did this million dollar fizzle come from?'

"The exhibitor attempts to apply a little home-made philosophy to his enquirer by telling him all pictures cannot be good. As for the real exhibitor, if there is a 'psychological depression,' the cause is invariably box-office depression through lack of regular picture attractions. One bad Ford in every five hundred would certainly give Henry's plant 'psychological depression.' This fundamental of business can also be applied to picture attractions, only a gracious, charitable public at least allows us an extraordinary margin."

SUMMING it all up, Mr. Storin remarks: "Let's look the facts squarely in the eye, as Mr. Thalberg puts it, and say—producers know what the demand is, are they completely supplying it?"

STILL another angle of the presentation problem is offered by Morris Gest, famed theatrical producer, who is also associated with United Artists. Says Mr. Gest:

"Has anyone ever thought of exhibiting a motion picture as a prologue to a legitimate production? Applying the principles of motion picture theatre owners, I might have shown a Mack Sennett comedy as a prologue to 'The Miracle.' Or in an effort to coordinate the subject of the prologue with the subject of any production, I should have prefaced Balieff's 'Chauve-Souris' with one of the excellent Russian film tragedies.

"No matter how fine these so-called prologues are in themselves, they would have been unnecessary, ridiculous even if not annoying to those who had come to see "The Miracle" or Balieff's Chauve-Souris.

"Yet that to my mind would be just as well justified as the cluttering up of the motion picture audience's time with vaudeville acts and gaudy displays.

"It is a foregone conclusion that just as the legitimate producer puts his best efforts into his production, so into motion pictures go the best efforts of the motion picture producer.

"It follows and has been proven that motion pictures are a type of entertainment wholly independent from the theatre. The common ground they meet on is only the place where they are exhibited. In not a few of the larger cities of the world, symphony concerts also are held in theatres. Would this fact justify the managers of symphony orchestras in presenting one act plays before their concerts? Certainly not!

"I grant you that there is a place for presentations—that will heighten the effect of the picture seen. That will help people to forget the outside world when they come into the theatre. That will bring them closer to the events, the time, the place of the story they are seeing enacted on the screen.

"For atmosphere is a vitalizing part of the theatre and theatrical productions. Whether they be plays or musical comedies. I feel that I was justified in reproducing a cathedral as the setting for 'The Miracle.' It is good and soothing and pleasing to the public to come into a theatre that has been transformed into a piece of the Orient as the Liberty theatre was for 'The Thief of Bagdad.'

"Presentations of the common sort, current today, must go. Transformations of places into a virtual fairyland of atmosphere are the prologues of the future. Sooner or later every exhibitor will realize that—and then the conflict between vaudeville and the movies will not be so great."

THE NEW ORLEANS ITEM, in a recent lengthy editorial, entitled "A Movie Commotion," discusses the programs in the big picture theatres with special reference to the presentation policy.

We have hitherto pointed out that important newspapers are taking up the subject, and The Item is the latest. A careful reading of the trade papers is revealed by the editorial and a thorough familiarity with the different arguments as they have been presented within the industry.

This sidelight ought to be interesting to the high-hats who think or pretend to think that the trade press of this industry doesn't mean much.

THE editorial in The Item, whether you agree with it or not, is interesting. It reads in part:

"The box-office is the final arbiter on the practicabilities in every such case. Nobody can doubt that the operators of the great houses would confine their entertainments to pictures alone, if pictures alone returned them the largest profits. Everybody knows that they have made the experiment. Nobody suspects that the results of experience are ignored by them in the policy they actually follow. For everybody knows that they would not rook themselves out of larger profits on pictures if a liberal infusion of good music and vaudeville yielded them smaller returns than pictures alone.

"If they find that the combination-programs return them receipts enough to make a profit on the swollen expenses of the greater houses, this means that audiences prefer these broader programs to the narrower ones that the camera can supply alone. If that is what the public wants, that is what the managers ought to supply—especially where the process adds something to the cultural values, as well as to the entertainment values, of these houses.

"We are quite sure that a great many go to the Saenger theatre in this city, for instance, as much for the excellent music they usually find there, or for the stage-features, or for both, as for the pictures. The city has many houses where the pictures can be seen unsullied by other forms of distraction.

"Lots of theatre-goers patronize them too. But so long as thousands continue to flock appreciatively to the combination houses, their flocking is the answer to the main question now raised—so far as public interest is concerned. We disregard the trade-interests involved."

Block Booking and the Brookhart Bill

By Wm. A. Johnston

ington hearing. On the contrary, the enforcers of coercive block-booking and unfair allocation, whoever and wherever they are, ought to stop both voluntarily—and now.

If they do not, they will have nobody but themselves to blame if Governmental regulation, investigations and the Lord knows what else result.

The motion picture was never intended to be the private property of a few individuals or their financial football. It is time these people stopped jeopardizing the livelihood of the great mass of film workers and placing the whole industry in danger of political control through Federal legislation.

With all those who wish the channels of film trade to be open we have the utmost sympathy.

We cannot believe, however, that the Brookhart Bill is the solution. Once a law is placed on the Federal statute books giving the Government powers of regulation over the industry, there can be no telling where the thing will end.

It would be far better for the industry to do its own abolition of coercive block-booking and attendant evils than to have the new system administered by outside authority.

The industry's problems should be solved by the industry itself. If there are certain individuals in the way of the accomplishment of this all-important job, then there ought to be a house-cleaning.

Universal Seeking License for Private Radio Line

(Special Dispatch to Motion Picture News)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Jan. 18.—Motion picture companies operating West Coast studios from New York offices need private radio lines to keep in close touch with activities, both in the studios and of companies on location, it was declared today by George Cochrane of New York, representing Universal, appearing before the Federal Radio Commission during its hearing on the short-wave situation.

The company has pending an application for a short-wave service from its New York headquarters to St. Louis or Kansas City and to Los Angeles. The company now spends between seventy and one hundred thousand dollars a year in telegraph and telephone tolls, Mr. Cochrane declared, but desires the radio service not so much in the interests of economy as to enable the making of prompt decisions when questions of policy arise.

Companies on location also could keep in touch with the studios from out of the way points, where the lack of such facilities has often been badly felt, he said. The motion picture industry, the fourth largest in the country, has developed into a public utility, the commission was told, and should be treated as such in the granting of licenses.

N. W. Arbitration Halted

Future Course Will Be Determined When Exhibitors Discuss Recent Warner Action

WARNER BROS.' refusal to fulfill a decision of the board of arbitration in the Northwestern territory, and the company's subsequent appeal and securing of a writ in the civil court restraining the board from outlawing them from arbitration, have temporarily halted all arbitration in the territory. It is thought that this condition will continue to exist at least until the new uniform contract is drawn.

Exhibitor members of the northwest territory board of arbitration are to report January 23rd to the executive committee of the Northwest unit for instructions as to their future course. Meantime the exhibitors are vehemently protesting what they consider the high-handed tactics of Warner Bros.

The present trouble has been increasing ever since Warners refused to comply with the board's decision in an argument with Nels Peterson, of Jamestown. The decision was adverse to Warners and the refusal of the company to abide by it brought the board's decision to exclude Warners from arbitration. Warners then appealed to the civil court and secured a court order restraining the board from excluding them from arbitration, pending the trial of the case with Peterson.

As the result of this court decision exhibitor members withdrew under the impression that arbitration had developed merely into a farce, and that Warner Bros. were denying the power of the board to make decisions.

J. B. Clinton, of Clinton-Meyers, Duluth, in a statement suggested the withdrawal of exhibitor members from arbitration for the present, and that the matter be taken up with the Northwest exhibitor unit as to whether to continue arbitration.

Clinton claimed that Gabriel L. Hess, Hays' organization counsel, was responsible for much of the arbitration trouble in that he is alleged to have attempted to intimidate arbitration and officers of the arbitration board by attempting to set himself up as a disinterested seventh arbitrator. He is also alleged by Clinton to have given such counsel and advice to members of the Film Board of Trade as to enable him to carry out his own ideas of justice to the detriment of arbitrators.

The Warner action against Peterson was for the completion of a contract he was alleged to have signed but canceled before receiving any service. Warners did send certain films which Peterson used and paid for. Peterson also forwarded $250 advance for films not used, and refused to accept further Warner pictures. The arbitration board unanimously upheld Peterson, and declared no contract existed, ordering Warners to return $250 to Peterson. Warners failed to comply within the time limit, so were suspended from participation in arbitration. The company's appeal was then made with success to the civil court, and the board was restrained from outlawing Warners.

Sam Burger New M-G-M New York Manager

Samuel B. Burger, former special representative for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has been made district manager of that area embracing New York, Albany and Buffalo. Mr. Burger was also recently acting supervisor of the New York State division for his company.

Mr. Burger worked on the sales forces of First National and Paramount before joining the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer company in 1925. About a year ago he was appointed field assistant to W. F. Rodgers, eastern sales manager, and in this capacity acted as exchange and district manager occasionally.

The New York Division continues as before with the same personnel, except that Carl Sonin, former M-G-M manager at Cincinnati, is now located in the New York exchange acting as sales manager.

J. N. Weber Export and Import Chief for Lumas

The newly formed export and import department of Lumas Film Corporation will be headed by John Norbert Weber, until recently associated with Tiffany-Stahl as head of the foreign department. Mr. Weber has been long a member of the motion picture industry, his association dating back to 1912 when he was assistant cashier with Universal, subsequently auditor of the New York exchange and then traveling auditor. He became assistant manager of the Detroit office of Universal, following which he rejoined the Laemmle company. After having been assistant to J. I. Schnitzer, then president of Equity Pictures, Mr. Weber joined Tiffany as assistant to M. H. Hoffman, the president, later being promoted to the position of head of foreign sales.

In the near future, Mr. Weber will take an extensive foreign trip in the interest of his new affiliation, Lumas says.

Lois Moran Will Receive $35,000 of Estate

More than $35,000 is to be received by Lois Moran, motion picture star, through the distribution of the $400,000 Darrington estate, under the terms of the master's report filed in the common pleas court in Pittsburgh, on January 14.

Louis M. Shoemaker, an attorney, who was appointed as master to distribute the estate, submitted his report giving Lois Darlington Dowling (Lois Moran), Edith Darlington Gheysels and Barbara L. Darlington, each $35,080.53.

The University of Pittsburgh's share of the estate is $210,483.20 and Samuel Ammon, who married a member of the Darlington family, will get $105,241.61.

Two Massachusetts Fires Cause $100,000 Damage

The Auditorium at Lynn and the New Bedford at New Bedford were two Massachusetts theatres that were damaged by flames last week, both suffering losses estimated at $50,000 apiece. Manager Barney Zeitz of the New Bedford house says that the damage is covered by insurance. Wiring is believed to have started the blaze. Hot air explosions between the mezzanine and balcony caused much of the damage. In the Auditorium Theatre the blaze is believed to have started in the second balcony and to have spread to the roof.

Reduction in Theatre Fire Hazards in Indiana

Due to a vigorous war on theatre fire dangers the past year theatre fire loss in Indiana was greatly decreased in 1927, according to State Fire Marshal Alfred Hogston. Total loss in theatres in 1927 was $45,834 in comparison with $159,000 in 1926.

Movietone Progress Announced

Winfield Sheehan Outlines Plans and Says Equipment May Be Installed in Theatres at $5,000 Cost

By EDWIN SCHALLERT

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, January 14.

DETAILS of Movietone development on the Coast have been announced by Winfield Sheehan, vice-president of the Fox Films Corporation. Projected activities in this field assume a very big aspect. The major enterprise as far as Hollywood is concerned will be the construction of two stages for the sound-recording device on the Westwood property of the organization. These will probably be started in March, and finished sometime in July. They will cost $400,000 to $500,000.

Already Vitaphone is established in the production field on the Coast with their device, having made "The Jazz Singer," and followed this with "The Lion and the Mouse" in which dialogue is incorporated in many scenes of the film. The company has also used spoken dialogue in "Tenderloin," featuring Conrad Nagel and Dolores Costello, and in "The Glorious Betsy" will have a song number rendered by Andres de Segurola, the opera singer, formerly with the Metropolitan. He made his screen debut in Gloria Swanson's "The Loves of Sunya."

"We have proceeded very carefully in laying plans for our Movietone activities," said Mr. Sheehan, in outlining the Fox program. "We wished to be sure of the possibilities for making the device available to a large number of theatre owners. We have reached that stage where it is now our belief that the Movietone equipment will in the near future be installed for a cost as low as $5000, and it is our conviction that this will likely result in the majority of cases in an increase of 50 per cent in the attendance. There will therefore not be any necessity of increase in the admission charge to the public. Arrangements will probably also be made for the installation on time payment basis, so that no hardship will be worked upon the theatre owner in paying for the device, which his increased profits will more than offset.

"Movietone is to be carried into every field possible, and not to be limited solely to entertainment. We have plans for the distribution of Movietone subjects to churches, schools and other institutions on a widespread basis—to bring various educational and other institutions into the closest contact with the great celebrities of the day. We are already making arrangements to have the voice of the Pope recorded upon the Movietone, and will choose great international figures for future subjects. Movietone will aid also in the political campaign of 1928, remaining, of course, absolutely impartial. We expect to reproduce six speeches by each candidate for the presidential office, and will show them making these speeches. Another thought that has occurred to us is, at the beginning of the school year, to have the president make an address of an inspirational character, which students throughout the land may hear, while they watch his every move and gesture.

"Apart from this activity, which will naturally be carried out over a far-flung field, and which is made possible through the portable feature of the Movietone apparatus, we are, of course, planning great innovations in the world of entertainment. It is our thought eventually to reproduce famous grand operas. Early production will be the light operas, such as 'The Dollar Princess' and 'Blossom Time.' Part of 'Blossom Time' will be made in Vienna. Janet Gaynor will appear in this picture, and in case she doesn't develop a singing voice between now and the time it is made, which in view of her manifest talents is not an undreamt of possibility," he smiled, "the singing part of the role can be doubled with Miss Gaynor enacting the pantomime.

"We have advanced in a great many ways in our plans for the building of the stages. It was our original idea that these would have to be made air-tight, but later developments indicated this will not be necessary.

Acoustical controls have been devised whereby it will be possible to eliminate certain sounds that are not wanted. These sounds will be actually present but will not be recorded. These acoustical devices will also eventually play an important part in making of Movietone pictures on location."

Mr. Sheehan also announced that early decision will be reached on the construction of a theatre in Los Angeles. This house will be completed by the summer of 1929, will have a capacity of 5000 to 6000, and will be similar to the Roxy Theatre in New York.

Demonstration in Schenectady of General Electric Co's. Television Shows Machine's Possibilities

By C. L. GRANT

Albany Correspondent, Motion Picture News

Albany, Jan. 17.

MOTION pictures may be transmitted by radio. There was a demonstration in Schenectady, N. Y. last week, of Television, which in common everyday language, means the transmission or projection of both sight and sound, synchronized, without the aid of photography.

The latest invention on the part of the General Electric Company, follows a year or more of experimenting at the laboratories. The very fact that the General Electric Company has acquired an interest in F B O, and the inventions that are being made at Schenectady, is of prime interest to the entire motion picture industry. While Television is not as yet directly linked with the motion picture, its possibilities are admittedly great along that line.

Television may become a competitor of the motion picture, in that it will make the radio just so much more attractive and entertaining by presenting before the listener the artist in actual performance at the broadcasting station. The first Television set to be turned out by the General Electric Company, and which was given its tryout last week, is the work of Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, a Schenectady resident, and likewise a consulting engineer of the Radio Corporation of America.

Needs Simplification

It is admitted that there must be some further simplification of the device, and also a reduction in the producing cost of the apparatus, which carried synchronized pictures and sound a distance of three miles last week, before it will come in general household use.

A small group of people, seated in three different homes in Schenectady last week, at varying distances up to three miles from the broadcasting station, saw in detail the actions of the artists whose voices came to them through an ordinary radio loud speaker.

The apparatus used was housed in a cabinet similar to that of a phonograph. A three-inch shutter in the Television permitted a view of the radio picture. At first appeared merely a streak, but under the manipulation of the operator, this disappeared and a luminous field took its place. As a voice came over the loud speaker, stating that a demonstration was about to begin, the face of the speaker at the W G Y broadcasting station appeared. The speaker lighted a cigarette and the smoke of it was plainly visible. At the same time the radio receiving instrument was carrying the sounds, both the latter and the image of the speaker being co-ordinated.

Emelka Independent Deal

Purchase of German Concern Entirely Without First National Interest, Says Johnson

THE deal under which a controlling interest in Emelka and the Phoebus Film Co., two large German film producing and theatre operating organizations, has been acquired by J. Von Lustig and Richard Weininger—partners of First National in the production and distribution of films in Germany—is entirely independent of the American concern, and leaves First National in the position it has occupied in that country from the start, without any interest whatsoever in any theatre properties or operations, E. Bruce Johnson, vice-president of First National Pictures and head of its foreign department, told a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in an interview last week at the Home Office of the company in New York.

Purchase of these two companies by Von Lustig and Weininger was concluded recently, and consolidation of their theatre resources already has been accomplished. The merger places the organization close to Ufa—largest of the German companies—with regard to the number of theatres under its control. About fifty theatres, among which are some of the best houses in Germany, are now consolidated. The total seating capacity is about 50,000, and the theatres are located in the principal cities in Germany, including Berlin, Dresden, Munich, Cologne, Hamburg and Nuremberg. Both Phoebus and Emelka carried on large producing operations, which, likewise, may be consolidated.

Mr. Johnson, who returned to America on his annual visit to the Home Office some time ago, said that First National was in no way represented in the deal, explaining that Von Lustig and Weininger, who are fifty-fifty partners with First National in the Defina, a distributing organization, and Defu, producing company, are investment bankers with wide business interests and operations entirely independent of their affiliation with Defina and Defu.

Emelka and Phoebus, he said, have been on the market for some time. Negotiations looking toward their purchase were carried on without any arrangement or agreements between Von Lustig and Weininger and First National. Mr. Johnson indicated that the only change the deal might bring about as far as First National's interests are concerned may be connected with the distribution organization Defina, as neither Emelka nor Phoebus has distribution machinery. "For all I know to the contrary, Von Lustig and Weininger may have bought the companies with a view to reselling them," he declared.

Mr. Johnson, in reply to questions regarding the reports in this country that German newspapers were sponsoring legislation to prevent First National's acquisition of the Emelka and Phoebus theatre interests, said that he had not been appraised of any such action. Any expression of fears that America or any other country outside Germany might flood the country with foreign films proceeded, he said, from ignorance of the established laws regarding quota. The number of films that may be imported from any foreign country is regulated for the next two years, he pointed out.

E. Bruce Johnson, Vice-president of First National pictures and head of that company's foreign department gives an account of the Emelka-Phoebus deal in a story on this page

Ohio Grand Jury Ignores Sunday Violation Cases

The Tuscarawas grand jury, which very recently made its report, ignored the five cases growing out of the operation of motion pictures on Sunday at Dover, Ohio. The body took no action on the charges against George Chrest, Roscoe Spidell and Edward F. Allman, exhibitors, for having violated the Sunday labor laws, and having promoted theatrical performances on Sunday.

Incidentally, Allman, who manages the Ohio theatre, at Dover, has secured upwards of 2,000 signatures to a petition through which he hopes to "feel the pulse of the public" as to Sunday showings. When Allman, with the other two exhibitors, was arrested recently, Mayor Groh handed down a decision to the effect that the exhibitors were innocent of any violation of the blue laws.

Vitaphone Branch Opened in San Francisco

An exchange has been established by Vitaphone Corporation in San Francisco to handle the business of the Pacific Coast and environs. Paul J. Swift, sales manager of the Vitaphone left last Saturday, January 14, for California. The San Francisco office is the third Vitaphone branch to be opened since the establishment of the corporation.

While on his way to the Coast, Mr. Swift will stop at Chicago where he will remain for one week to direct the expansion of the branch there.

Gray Bequeathed Bulk of Fortune to Religion

Every church in Lewiston, Me., his home city, and in Auburn, Me., which is just across the river from Lewiston, two Hebrew synagogues and the Salvation Army receive the bulk of the estate of William P. Gray, late head of the Paramount-Gray circuit of some 150 theatres in New England, according to the terms of his will filed at Lewiston. The will makes provision for a modest trust fund, the income to go to his daughter, Monita Gray Lawton of New York City, after she attains the age of 30. It provides for Mr. Gray's father and mother. The rest is disposed of by public bequests. Central Maine General hospital is made residuary legatee. The estate is estimated at about $750,000.

ica, said that the experiment was fully as notable as Marconi's first wireless signal. The Television sets used were stationed at the homes of E. W. Allen, vice-president of the General Electric Company; Dr. Alexanderson, and E. W. Rice, Jr., who is honorary chairman of the board of directors of the company.

According to the engineers at the General Electric plant, Television is based on conversion of light beams into radio impulses through the use of photo-electric cells. Through a rotating disc in which there are more than forty holes, is projected a brilliant light, and this light passing through a rotating disc, throws fleeting beams of brilliancy across the subject's face, literally painting a complete picture, the high speed of the disc rendering such continuity that it virtually becomes a moving picture.

New Officers of Better Films Committee Chosen

The annual meeting of the Better Films Committee was held at the Axis Club Birmingham, Ala., Monday afternoon. Officers elected to serve the coming year are Mrs. B. T. Rochester, chairman; Mrs. J. L. Smith, vice chairman; Mrs. C. B. Yandle, second vice chairman; Mrs. W. M. Snell, secretary-treasurer.

A resume of work showed number of theatres open January 1, 1928 as 32. Number of other theatres open part of the year 1927, four. One new theatre will open February 1. Total number of films shown, 16,000. Average number of films shown each month, 1,333. Number of first run pictures viewed in the downtown theatres, 575. Number of first run pictures endorsed by the reviewing committee, 436. Number of pictures viewed but not endorsed, 139. Number of pictures suitable for young people shown on Saturdays, 219.

Additions to Universal Circuit Open Doors

The Moreland, at Buckeye Road and East 119th Street, Cleveland, and the Aztec, at Ednid, Oklahoma, were two new links of the Universal chain of theatres that opened for the first time last Thursday and Wednesday nights, respectively, January 11 and 12.

The Baby Grand Theatre, Winter Park, Florida, was re-opened Friday evening, January 13, after having been completely remodelled and redecorated.

M-G-M 1927 Profits Are Lower Than 1926's

The financial report of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation and its subsidiaries for the year ended August 31, 1927, indicates a net profit of $2,946,600 after charges and Federal taxes, which is equivalent to $17.30 per share earned on 176,617 shares at 7 per cent preferred stock.

This compares with net profits of $3,055,229, or $16.94 per share on the 180,358 shares of preferred stock in 1926.

L. P. Kramer Dies on Coast After Brief Illness

LOUIS P. KRAMER, well-known advertising and publicity man, died in Hollywood this week. Kramer's death followed a brief illness of pneumonia. He went to the coast some time ago from Detroit where he had been publicity director for the Michigan theatre, and in association with Harry Heustis established "West Coast Amusement News," a magazine distributed in theatres of the West Coast circuit.

For several years Kramer has been prominently associated in the industry as a publicity and exploitation director for distributing and theatre concerns. He went to New York from Chicago to join the F B O publicity staff and later returned to the latter city as publicity chief for the Lubliner and Trinz theatres. When that chain was taken over by B&K he became associated with the firm, and then went to Detroit. He had a wide acquaintance among newspaper and film men.

Keith-Albee-Orpheum Merger O. K.'d by Dept. of Justice

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

Washington Correspondent, Motion Picture News

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18.—Merger of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum interests does not meet the disapproval of the Department of Justice, according to Assistant to the Attorney General, William J. Donovan, in charge of anti-trust activities.

Discussing the situation with the Washington representative of Motion Picture News, Colonel Donovan explained that the department made a thorough inquiry into the probable results of the merger to determine what the effect would be upon competitive conditions. This inquiry disclosed that the motion picture theaters had been hitting the vaudeville houses by the introduction of presentation acts and that the adoption of pictures by the latter would merely serve to put the two on a parity. Failing to take this step, it was indicated at the department, the vaudeville houses would have found themselves in a parlous situation. Conferences with important motion picture men disclosed that the film industry is not greatly concerned over the effects of the merger.

Equity Flays Free-Lance Contract as Unfair

Points Discriminations Against Players in Document Arranged by M. P. Arts and Sciences

FRANK GILLMORE, executive secretary of Actors' Equity, is still hopeful of putting into effect an Equity contract that will be binding to producers and actors alike. He still considers it likely that a film branch of Equity can be built up to such a strong point as to negotiate such a contract with producers.

Equity is far from pleased with the free-lance contract negotiated by players through the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. In the current issue of "Equity" an article points out many discrepancies in the free-lance contract detrimental to the players.

After pointing out the real advantages of an Equity contract, the article reads in part:

"It is notorious that in motion picture free lance work, most work is short-lived. In the Academy contract, there is no provision for continuous work the first and last weeks.

"The real unfairness of this contract is first apparent in Paragraph Number Two. You will find by reading it closely, which you may be sure a great many actors in search of a job will not take the trouble to do, that the producer may do anything he likes to a part, and the actor has nothing whatever to say about it. He may be engaged upon the basis of a small part, and that may be expanded to any proportion—his salary meanwhile remaining stationary. Or he may take a part at a low salary because he sees a chance to make himself stand out in it, only to find that it has been whittled away to nothing.

Furthermore, that same paragraph has, instead of the absolute starting date sought by Equity, a leeway of forty-eight hours either way. The practical effect of this regulation is that for a period of four days about the estimated date of beginning a production, two days before and two after, an actor may not accept employment because he is subject to call at any moment. For these four days, however, the Academy contract makes no provision for payment. If Sundays and holidays intervene the free period is automatically extended. And since in a subsequent clause the first week and the last of a production may be prorated, the actor may actually get one day's pay for one week's waiting around under this contract.

"Before we leave this paragraph, into which a lot of meat has been packed, it may be noted that retakes may be called for 'as and when the producer may request' to be paid for only according to the number of days the actor works. A competent legal authority when asked to give his opinion on this section answered:

"'The actor is obliged to give retakes whether he is otherwise employed or not. In fact, there is a question as to whether or not he can accept other employment until the retake period has expired.'

"Paragraph Number Six is well worth study. Here is our old friend, 'The Satisfaction Clause,' in disguise. For the player agrees in it 'to furnish all modern wardrobe and wearing apparel necessary in the judgment of the producer for the portrayal of said character.' You see, if a producer finds a certain actor undesirable in a part, all he has to say is 'I'm sorry, Mr. Dash, but that costume isn't satisfactory.' And let Mr. Dash try to make it satisfactory!"

With regard to paragraph eight, the article reads:

"That paragraph is probably the prize one of the entire contract and there is one more little provision in the prize package.

To Fight Sunday Closing

Many Exhibitors in Iowa Plan Putting Matter Up to People for Direct Vote

IN CITIES and states where the Sunday blue laws obtain some real battles will be waged in the near future by exhibitors who feel that the popular sentiment is for Sunday picture shows. This is true of several towns in Iowa, while in Baltimore, a test case in defiance of the law is said to be contemplated.

Several Iowa theatre men are considering trying out the Sunday movie question by the vote of the people, since the successful outcome of the vote in many of the districts over the state. No further developments have been reported in the case of the theatre at Villisca, Iowa, where the owner of the theatre has shown that he is being discriminated against in the enforcement of the Blue Laws at his theatre while other places of business are allowed to remain open on Sunday.

At Bloomfield, Iowa, Harvey Graham, manager of the Iowa theatre there, has served notice on the merchants of the city that he will file information against any who open their places of business on Sunday. He made this assertion after all city council had ignored the petition signed by over 200 in which permission was asked of the city council for the Sunday showings.

At Cumberland, Iowa, where a petition was presented to the city council asking for the closing of the Sunday shows, this petition was ignored by the city council. The theatre at Cumberland is owned by T. H. Thundershot, who reports that the Sunday shows are continuing without any opposition. He has the Lyric at Cumberland.

Assisted by a number of girls from New York and Washington, a motion picture entertainment was given at the New Garden theatre, Baltimore, on Sunday night, January 8, after midnight, at which admission was charged, by the Liberty Defense League and the Sunday Amusement League.

John G. Callan, president of the former, was responsible for the move of having literature and questionnaires delivered by the girls in the lobby of the house and having a number of thousands mailed out to citizens of Maryland.

The questionnaires asked the views of the recipients on Sunday golf, baseball, bowling and movies. It is understood that arrangements have been made with an unnamed theatre for a moving picture show to be given on a Sunday soon with a charge for admission in defiance of the law.

Louis M. Sagal to Retire from Poli Theatre Chain

When the Poli circuit of theatres passes into the hands of the Schoolman syndicate, Louis M. Sagal, for 30 years general manager of the Poli theatre interests, will retire. Schoolman is scheduled to take over the circuit for 20 New England houses late this month, it is said. No decision has been made by Mr. Sagal regarding his future plans. He has declined a position with the new company. He is said to be considering offers to enter the banking business.

Poli Theatres and Realty Company, Boston, has been formed by the syndicate to operate the houses. Incorporators of the firm are Max Schoolman, Herman A. Mintz and Andrew A. Stone. The firm has 1,000 shares of stock of no par value. Poli Theatres and Realty Company will have its headquarters in New Haven.

Paramount Studio Forces to Get Group Insurance

A large group of insurance projects are being placed in effect among the 1500 workers at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. The insurance, secured by the Paramount Studio Club, covers death, sickness and accident and will cost the studio workers but a small amount deducted weekly from the pay envelopes. The Club takes care of the balance, the members paying only a portion of the premium.

The insurance is wholly apart from that carried by the company under the California employer's liability laws. Workers incapacitated by accident or sickness will receive from $20 to $40 weekly and in case of death from $2500 to $5000 is paid, depending upon the amount of the premium paid.

N. G. Rothstein, Universal Executive, Ill

A severe case of la grippe has kept Nat. G. Rothstein, director of advertising and exploitation for Universal Pictures, in bed at his home in the Park Central Hotel in New York.

Large House Rumored for St. Louis

THERE are persistent rumors along the film and realty row in St. Louis that the Keith-Albee-Orpheum-Pathe combination will erect a 5000 or 6000-seat theatre in the down town section of St. Louis.

Sites along Washington Avenue and Locust Street have been mentioned in this connection and one report is that the vaudeville-picture combine have already purchased the key lot to a site on Washington Avenue in the Vicinity of Ninth Street.

Curb stone gossip has it that the Skouras interests have under consideration the erection of a large theatre and hotel on the site of the Board of Education building at Ninth and Locust Streets. Naturally confirmation of that transaction has not been obtained.

In the meantime the construction of the William Fox theatre at Grand and Washington boulevard has been temporarily retarded by a strike of structural steel workers. This squabble has been under way for two weeks and efforts to effect a compromise have so far proved futile.

Burbank Studios to Place 8 in Work in February

The First National Burbank studio is now grooming eight pictures to go into production during February. Almost every star on the First National roster is represented in this new octet of films except Colleen Moore and Corinne Griffith, who will not start a film marking her reassociation with the company until March, at which time Johnny Hines, Ken Maynard and others now engaged in various vehicles will also begin new pictures.

Richard Barthelmess' next picture will be "Roulette," scheduled to start February 6 with Alfred Santell directing and Henry Hobart as production manager. A week later four pictures, "The Yellow Lilly," "The Butter and Egg Man," an untitled Milton Sills vehicle and Dorothy Mackaill's new film, also untitled, will be placed into work. About two days later will follow Harry Langdon's new comedy.

Actors' Equity Flays Free Lance Contract

It is that employment during the first and last week's work is pro-rated. If an actor does not work the whole six days he does not get his whole week's pay, but only such part of it as he was actually employed. Now, let us consider what this might mean to you . . . or you . . . or anyone working under it.

"Bad as the arrangement is for an actor in the studio, it is worse when he goes on location. An actor can travel twenty-four hours, or more, wait two days for his first appearance before the camera, work a couple of days during that first week, wait around some more, work a couple of days during the next week, and be sent home to find that, having been away for two weeks and a half, he has just four days' pay coming to him. It's quite, quite simple when you know how it is done."

Seven Firms Secure New York State Charters

Newly incorporated motion picture companies chartered in Albany, New York, during the past week, included the following: Lafayette Concessions, Inc., $25,000, Everett Kirsten, Herman Schoenbach, Samuel Silberglet, Brooklyn; Willow Amusement Corporation, capitalization not stated, Benjamin Berson, Henry Liman, Brooklyn; Rosalind M. Abeles, New York City; Jaysae Amusement Corporation, $9,000, William J. and Sydney M. Rose, Peter Dohm, New York City; Chain Vaudeville Agency, Inc., capitalization not stated, Samuel Sedran, Helen E. Hughes, Willam Stephens, New York City; Hurtjam Realty Corporation, capitalization not stated, Morris Pomeranz, Gussie Cohen, David Muhlstock, New York; Jama Holding Corporation, Morris Pomeranz, same as above.

Columbia Studio to Start New Films Shortly

With the completion in December of the cutting and titling of "The Wife's Relations," and the shooting of the final scenes of "So This Is Love" the first week of January, the Columbia studio in Hollywood is now producing "Lady Raffles," preparatory to actual camera work on several more productions.

An augmented scenario department is now engaged on several original stories and adaptations. Three scripts, completed this week, are now in the hands of the production department ready for casting.

M-G-M Acquires Rights to Beth Brown Novel

"Ballyhoo," Beth Brown's latest novel, published in book form last year by the Dial Press, has been purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for screening. No announcement has been made as to who will have the important role in the story which deals with carnival life in America.

Miss Brown writes the titles for "Curiosities," the Educational series, and "Rarebits," another series released by Pathe.

3 "U" Houses Released to Arkansas Company

IN a deal engineered last Friday in New York on January 13, by M. A. Lightman, of Jonesboro, Ark., and officials of Universal Chain Theatres, acting for Tribute Theatres, Inc., the three Universal houses, the Strand, Empire and Liberty in Jonesboro, have been released to State Theatres, Inc., local operating company, of which Mr. Lightman is president and general manager.

Last year the theatres were taken over by Tribute Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary of Universal Chain Theatres, and leased for 15 years. Mr. Lightman's company is acquiring them for the remaining years of the lease. The Strand, the newest of the three houses, was built by Eli Whitney Collins.

Mr. Lightman is president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Arkansas. The town of Jonesboro has a population of about 10,000.

Fairbanks Suggests Housecleaning of Picture Industry

A THOROUGH housecleaning in the motion picture industry is advocated by Douglas Fairbanks, as president of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Sciences. In a statement just issued, in which he welcomes foreign pictures as competition that will foster the making of only the better grade of pictures, Fairbanks says:

"I believe the industry needs a thorough housecleaning. In many instances salaries are out of proportion and the cost sheets of production show almost wanton wastage. However, I feel sure that it a bad time to cut the cost of individual productions, because the public has become more discriminating and shows a tendency to shop for its entertainment.

"If the expenditure has proved too great for the returns on pictures, then, in my opinion, fewer pictures should be made, with more time and effort put on each one.

"I would like to see more pictures made abroad, and I say it in all loyalty to my own country. With the present stir in foreign legislative bodies toward encouraging their own national picture production, I believe a new impetus will be evident along this line of endeavor. I sincerely feel that this competition will foster the making of only the better grade picture here and the gradual weeding out of inferior grade of entertainment."

Vocafilm Busy Preparing Many New Acts

Production Staff Is Enlarged and Company Is Looking About for Best of Talent

FOLLOWING the announcement that Vocafilm will be placed on the market through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., comes the word now that the Vocafilm staff is being considerably enlarged, and negotiations are under way for various types of acts, in addition to these numbers already completed. It is probable that some of these acts will be released in the near future by Educational.

A completely-equipped and ideally-arranged studio now adjoins the Vocafilm offices in Fifth Avenue, New York City. On the staff in charge of the studio production are skilled technicians and trained cameramen who have been making acts and pictures since the company began producing.

It is not the intention of the company to confine itself to the making of picture and sound entertainment to the famous artists of opera, vaudeville and musical comedy. It will be guided to a certain extent by the experience of various radio broadcasting stations, which have found it is not always the famous artist who registers best before the "mike."

Famous stars who have been found pleasing over the radio, or who register well on Vocafilm, will be on the company's program of releases, but others whose voices or musical or histrionic abilty register most perfectly will be used more extensively.

Vocafilm production experts believe that this is a new art, and that new artists can and will be created for Vocafilm, just as the radio has created new artists with tremendous appeal to radio listeners.

As a result of this idea Vocafilm already has contracted for and is now booking many popular attractions for future acts. The company is also on the lookout for new faces and new material. In addition to the acts and other numbers now being arranged Vocafilm is planning to synchronize a number of regular motion picture releases with symphony orchestral music.

In speaking of this phase of Vocafilm, E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., said:

"This synchronization of symphony orchestral music to regular pictures presages a new era in motion picture musical accompaniment when even the smallest theatres will be able to have the music of a fine symphony orchestra accompany the pictures at a minimum cost."

R. Felker, Universal's New Theatre Head in West

Announcement was made in Seattle, Washington, last week of the resignation of L. Jack Schlaifer, general manager of Universal Film Company's Theatres in the West and Pacific Northwest, with jurisdiction over all Universal chain houses from Denver westward. His position as supervisor over the ten Universal suburban houses in Seattle, the downtown Winter Garden Theatre, and the Corvallis and Eugene, Oregon, theatres, will be taken over by Ray Felker, former manager of the Winter Garden, who in turn will be succeeded by John Peterson, assistant manager.

Mr. Schlaifer plans a vacation of a few weeks, following a new connection.

Rembusch New President Screen Club of India

Frank J. Rembusch, Shelbyville, Indiana, is the new president of the Screen Club of Indiana. Other officers are William Willman, vice-president; A. C. Zaring, treasurer, and H. C. Dressendorfer, secretary.

William Esch is the retiring president.

Sunday Church Pictures

Emporia Exhibitors Win When Men's Club of Church Takes Over Houses for Showings

EXHIBITOR has ceased to fight minister and church now is battling church in the Sunday closing row at Emporia, Kas., which bids fair to establish a precedent in the Sunday labor law and which is attracting attention throughout Kansas and Missouri.

The Sunday closing fight, which has been in newspaper headlines for three weeks, no longer is a case of exhibitor versus ministers. With William Allen White, nationally known writer, as chairman of the committee which will select the films, the men's club of the St. Andrews Episcopal church in Emporia has organized what is to be known as the Emporia Screen Club. The club will show Sunday pictures only, leasing theatres from exhibitors, and the attendance will be by membership. Membership may be obtained by any one who desires it. The billiard balls of many Kansas towns for years have thwarted blue law advocators through the membership plan, which has been ruled legal in Kansas, so when Emporia ministers decided to close up all motion picture theatres on Sunday the exhibitors found a ready friend in the Episcopal club. The profits of the shows will be used in improvements in church work.

Following the announcement of the plan, a wail which echoed around the state of Kansas came from the blue noses, who saw themselves outwitted at their own game and saw a rival church reaping benefits from the folly of other churches. Such a condition, of course, is not expected by exhibitors to be permanent, but it undoubtedly will last long enough to show the citizens of Kansas the ridiculous side of the stand taken by radical ministers who fear the opposition of Sunday shows. All of which eventually will lead to an election on Sunday shows, it is believed.

Frederick W. Lewis, president of the College of Emporia, branded the club plan as an attempt to evade the law and denounced the movement.

W. R. Coulson, president of the screen club and cashier of one of Emporia's largest banks, replied that the members of the club viewed the move as an honorable means of obtaining funds through the presentation of high class feature pictures on Sunday afternoons to "a limited number of good friends." Listed among those supporting the club plan are some of the most widely known persons of Kansas.

The move is considered a signal victory for the exhibitors of Emporia, a town of about 20,000 population.

Paramount Working on 14 Features for Release

The Paramount studios in Hollywood are preparing 14 films for release. All camera work has been completed on the films and all they await are titles and bits of editing work.

The productions now being made ready for release include "Speedy," "The Wedding March," "Tillie's Punctured Romance" and "The Pioneer Scout." In addition there are: "The Last Command," "Sporting Goods," "The Legion of the Condemned," "Under the Tonto Rim," "Feel My Pulse," "The Secret Hour," "Doomsday," "The Street of Sin," and George Bancroft's first starring vehicle, as yet untitled.

In production on the Paramount stages are "Abie's Irish Rose," "Red Hair," "Partners in Crime" and "The Patriot."

M-G-M Studio Preparing for Busy Schedule

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Culver City forces are now preparing for a comprehensive schedule of picture making. Several specials have been produced and others are in work, but within a short time seven new productions will go on the stages in addition to a like number now occupying them.

Awaiting presentations in the near future are King Vidor's "The Crowd," a 12-reel production, and "The Trail of '98." Two other specials, "The Enemy" and "Rose Marie," will be given release dates soon.

In the cutting and titling process are "The Patsy" and "The Latest From Paris." John Gilbert is finishing "The Cossacks," Norma Shearer is just beginning "The Actress," while William Haines has almost completed "The Smart Set." Ramon Novarro has started work on "China Bound," Lon Chaney is starring in "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," Robert S. Flaherty and W. S. Van Dyke are making "Southern Skies," George K. Arthur and Karl Dane are practically finished with "Monkey Business" and Greta Garbo is preparing for an original story which, it is said, may be filmed in the Dutch East Indies. John Gilbert will soon be starred in an original screen play of ante-bellum days along the Mississippi. Arthur and Dane will do "Detectives," Marion Davies will be featured in a new production, untitled, and Joan Crawford is to star in "The Tide of the Empire." In addition to the above program, several screen stories are being written for Tim McCoy.

New Stern Program to Cost Close to Million

BEFORE leaving New York for California this week, accompanied by Sigmund Newfield, his studio chief, Julius Stern, president of the Stern Film Corporation, makers of comedies for Universal, announced that as a result of conferences with Universal executives appropriations for the new schedule of comedies will mount very close to $1,000,000. The increase will be spent on the improvement of pictures that are to be made at the Stern studio. No increase in the number of comedies is contemplated.

Particular attention, said Mr. Stern, will be devoted to improving the "Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedies. New writers, technicians and studio facilities will play their part in the development of this series. The present line-up of Stern Bros. comedies probably will be continued, it was said.

Upon his arrival in Hollywood, Mr. Stern plans to increase the number of companies now working there. There will be five companies at least, promises Mr. Stern, engaged in pictures for the 1927-28 season within the next few weeks. The Stern Bros. company is ready to cope with the new schedule, as there are but a few comedies yet to be produced for the current season.

Jolson to Start June 1st on New Warner Film

Al Jolson and the Warner Brothers signed final contracts this week for the former's next screen appearance in a Warner Bros. production. The agreement provides that the comedian and entertainer begin work on the Coast on June 1st. It is likely, says the Warner Bros., that the greater portion of the summer will be taken up with the making of the second film. Preparations for the production will begin when the studio reopens in February.

Renee Adoree Injured En Route to Location

Renee Adoree was painfully injured last Thursday while on her way in a taxi to location at Mount Lowe for work in the Universal feature, "The Michigan Kid," in which she is to co-star with Conrad Nagel. The cab in which she was riding was struck and Miss Adoree was thrown violently against the driver's seat. Her eye was badly cut. She will be laid up for about a week.

Large Picture Program Planned by Gotham

Following the completion of the remaining six Gotham pictures to be released during the current season, Gotham Productions will launch a film program of approximately 30 productions—four of them to be specials. The major details of the program have been decided upon, although, at the present time, the company is not prepared to impart a definite announcement relating to stories, titles and players.

Sam Sax, president of Gotham and Lumas, stated that it had taken four years to develop to its present state of growth, and that it had now reached a stage where its faciltiies can easily handle 30 productions as a season's output. "There is only one class of theatre the producer can cater to nowadays—and that is the very biggest and best," said Mr. Sax.

C. S. Pinkerton Eastern Agent for Caddo

Charles S. Pinkerton has been made eastern representative for Caddo Productions, the company which made "Two Arabian Knights" for United Artists release.

"Hell's Bells," with Greta Nissen, George Cooper, James Hall and Thelma Todd, is now being made by Caddo Productions under the direction of Luther Reed. It, also, will be released by United Artists.

David Selznick Member of Schulberg Staff

David Selznick, the son of Louis J. Selznick, has joined the production staff of B. P. Schulberg at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. He has already taken over his new executive duties there.

Mr. Selznick goes to Paramount from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, where he first served as assistant to Harry Rapf, finally becoming a supervisor.

Orpheum Negotiations Denied by Pantages

WHILE visiting New Orleans for a rest and for the purpose of viewing the Fair Grounds races, Alexander Pantages, theatre and motion picture magnate, denied the rumor that he had come to New Orleans to meet Marcus Heiman, of the Keith-Albee-Orpheum theatrical chain, to negotiate the purchase of the New Orleans and Memphis Orpheum theatres.

The News correspondent was told by Mr. Pantages that he had come to New Orleans to see a stable of horses that he recently shipped. "I already have one theatre in Memphis," said Mr. Pantages, "and have not considered purchasing another house there. Neither have I considered purchasing any interests of the Orpheum chain in New Orleans. I at one time operated a Pantages theatre here and helped an option on the site on which the new Loew's State was built. If I had intended returning to the New Orleans theatrical field it does not seem logical that I would relinquish a site that is second to none in the city for that purpose."

Another Cincinnati Picture Palace Planned by Albee Interests

ALMOST concurrently with the opening of the new E. F. Albee theatre in Cincinnati, one of the most pretentious and best equipped motion picture houses in that section of the country, comes the announcement that Cincinnati is to have another theatre which will be comparable in every way with the Albee, and built by the same interests, namely, E. F. Albee, Ben Heidingsfeld, Isaac Libson and associates. Heidingsfeld and Libson are both Cincinnatians.

The house is to be located at the northwest corner of Melrose avenue and McMillan street, in the Walnut Hills, suburban district. It will occupy a lot 149 x 300 feet, having its main entrance on McMillan street. In addition to the auditorium with a seating capacity of 3,000, the building also will contain on the upper floors a number of ultra-modern apartments.

Thomas Lamb, New York architect, who designed the new Albee theatre on Fountain Square, Cincinnati, and other recent palatial buildings for the Keith-Albee interests, will, with a Cincinnati firm of architects, draw the plans.

Aside from the architectural importance of the new structure, the plan indicates a new policy of suburban expansion in Cincinnati, similar to that in other cities, where large first-run theatres are being erected in the residential sections. The new theatre, like the Albee, will, according to those in the know, feature a picture and stage presentation policy.

"U" Studios Will Close

Carl Laemmle Announces Production So Far Advanced Suspension Will Be Necessary

FOR a novel but practical and commonsense reason, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, from his studio in Universal City yesterday authorized the following statement be given out from the company's headquarters in New York:

"Production activity at Universal City will be greatly curtailed or entirely suspended sometime in February. Our production program is so far in advance of our requirements that such a program for the year beginning September, 1928, has been completed. And, of course, the entire quota of pictures for the current year is finished. 'We Americans' was the only production of this year which was not completed by last September. It has just been finished.

"It would be possible for us to finish our entire year's program of pictures for 1928-1929 by June or July, if the studios were operated at the present rate of production. But there is grave danger in making pictures a year and a half to two years in advance of their release dates. Women's styles change so rapidly and Los Angeles is so far away from the source of these styles that a producer is incurring the penalty of having his pictures look old and out of style when they finally reach the screen.

"Two of our Super or Road Show pictures have been completed—'Uncle Tom's Cabin' and 'The Man Who Laughs'—on which the last shot was taken this week. 'Show Boat' is not scheduled to go into production for some little time yet, and 'Broadway' is not ready to be shot. There are fifteen companies working at the present time, and ten pictures ready to go into production. But from the standpoint of releasing, it would be possible to wait an entire year before these were put into work. We are doing our utmost to terminate as much production activity as possible sometime in February without working a hardship to any of our employes.

"Pictures which will be completed before the end of this month are 'The Michigan Kid' by Rex Beach, 'Honeymoon Flats' by Earl Derr Biggers, 'Home, James' with Laura La Plante, 'Cream of the Earth' by Percy Marks, 'Fallen Angels'' by Arthur Somers Roche and 'Freedom of the Press' by Peter B. Kyne."

First National Releasing 4 Films in February

First National's features scheduled for February release consist of a love drama, a comedy of the air, a characterization farce, and a western.

On February 5 Allan Dwan's "The Whip Woman," presented by Robert T. Kane, will be released. Estelle Taylor and Antonio Moreno have the leads. On February 12 will come Harry Langdon's latest comedy, "The Chaser," in which Gladys McConnell has the leading female role.

On February 19 First National has scheduled "The Wagon Show," a Ken Maynard western with Tarzan, the horse, in support. The last release, to come on February 26, will be "Flying Romeo," a new co-starring comedy for Charlie Murray and George Sidney that Mervyn Leroy directed.

Columbia Signs Leads for "Paris Nights"

Margaret Livingston and Warner Baxter have signed contracts with Columbia Pictures to appear in the leading roles in "Paris Nights," the tentative title of a forthcoming picture on which production is scheduled to begin as soon as the rest of the cast and the director have been chosen.

National Theatre Supply Holds Convention

Chicago Meeting Voted Highly Successful; All Commend "One Contract Plan"

THE largest gathering of supply and equipment men ever brought together in Chicago, attended the first annual sales meeting of branch managers and salesmen of the National Theatre Supply Company, which was held at the Stevens Hotel, January 11th to 19th, inclusive.

Not only the executives, branch managers and salesmen of National Theatre Supply Company participated in the meetings, but more than fifty representatives of equipment and supply manufacturing companies were on hand, many of them making interesting talks and demonstrations of their products.

The first four days of the meetings were devoted to the salesmen who, one hundred and twenty-five strong and representing all the branches of the company from coast to coast, were on hand when President H. A. R. Dutton gave his introductory talk on January 11th. The salesmen returned to their various branches on Saturday, the branch managers being on hand for the second series of meetings which started on Monday, the 16th.

Encouraged by the prestige and good will created during the first months of its existence, the company is forging ahead with new vigor and today is giving to its customers the best service ever known in the history of the motion picture industry, according to statements of President Dutton and other officers of the company, at the convention.

At all meetings the determination of National to be strictly a service organization was stressed, and it was pointed out that sales of picture machines or the many other items of equipment were only of secondary importance and incidental to the rendering of service.

An Achievement

An outstanding achievement of National during its first year, it was pointed out, was the establishment of the one contract plan sales department. Through this department collaborating with the engineering division National offers a complete service to both the owners and prospective owners of theatres.

The necessity for specializing in each branch of theatre outfitting was recognized in forming the one contract organization, therefore interior decorating, stage scenery and drapery departments were installed in each of the four National divisions, in addition to the departments handling booth equipment, Kilgen Organs and the many other items of equipment going into a modern theatre.

Another important advance in the operation of National during the year was the installation of a twenty-four hour service policy in each of the thirty-one branch stores of National.

The various meetings were highly educational and it is safe to say that the personnel of National Theatre Supply Company returned to their respective headquarters with a closer knowledge of the products this company is offering to exhibitors than ever before. This knowledge was gained through actual demonstrations by factory representatives and engineers of the more important equipment handled by the company. Illuminating talks were also made on business methods by many of National's officers and department heads, so that the entire organization is prepared to function even more efficiently and smoothly than during the first year of its existence.

Orchestraphone Drive

An important subject of discussion at the convention was the plan for a drive on Orchestraphone, the musical device designed to do the work of either an organ or orchestra, in the theatre, two entire evening programs being devoted to the demonstration of his instrument at the Eighth Street theatre, under the direction of Miss Marie Pierson, showing that the Orchestraphone is not only well adapted to playing the feature, but is effective as music for dancers or an accompaniment to vocal solos. It was announced that the price of Orchestraphone would be $2,500 instead of $3,500, as originally planned, economies in the manufacturing of it having been effected to such an extent that this cut was possible.

H. A. R. Dutton, President of National Theatre Supply Co.

Aside from the Orchestraphone demonstrations which were so interesting that the crowd regarded them as entertainment; a trip to the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, manufacturers of Motiograph, where President O. F. Spahr conducted the entire party of two hundred in motor buses and took them through the factory; and the midnight trip to the Piccadilly theatre for demonstration of the Kilgen Organ; the meetings were all all strictly business, and those who attended were on the job from 9:00 A. M. to midnight each day of the convention.

Among Those Present

Manufacturers who were present and made addresses included Albert Kindelmann of International Projector Company; L. M. Woolman of Forest Electric Company; John Hertner of Hertner Electric Company; W. W. Reddie and Mr. Hancock of Westinghouse Electric; I. L. Nixon of Bausch & Lomb; Larry Strong of Essanay Electric Company; Mr. Kurlander of the Brenkert Light Projection Company; Joseph Cohen of the Sentry Safety Control Corporation; J. E. McAuley of the McAuley Manufacturing Company; O. F. Spahr of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company; H. C. Woods of the American Silversheet Company; Mrs. Deberrie of the Da-Lite Screen and Scenic Company; E. J. Vallen of Vallen Electric Company; M. J. Mulroy of National Lamp Works; F. M. Falge and W. C. Brown of Nela Park; D. J. Burns of the Ward-Leonard Company; E. J. Geib of National Carbon Company; Ed. Wolk of Chicago Cinema Equipment Company; R. F. Winegar of Steel Furniture Company; Samuel Weinstein of Menger, Ring & Weinstein; F. Goodwin of the Willey Sign Company; F. G. Diffin of the Longsign Company; Morton L. Clark of the Lustrolite Sign Company; C. R. Morse of the American Blower Company; F. C. Largen of the Blizzard Sales Company; Mr. Knudsen of the Page Belting Company; Marshall Seeburg of the Seeburg Organ Company; Alfred Kilgen and Max Hess of George Kilgen & Sons.

National Theatre Supply Company officers and branch managers present at the meetings included President H. A. R. Dutton, Vice-Presidents Walter E. Green, George De Kruif, Oscar Oldknow, George A. Lincoln, Joseph Hornstein and L. G. Dolliver, and Branch Managers A. G. Smith, Kansas City; A. T. Crawmer, Minneapolis; A. Thiel and R. G. Faulds, Omaha; L. D. Edwards, St. Louis; J. J. Morgan, Denver; J. C. Brown, Cleveland; Don K. Smith, Indianapolis; R. G. Colvin, Detroit; Jack Stallings, Cincinnati; H. R. Vogel, Milwaukee; E. B. National Board Review Lists 40 Best Films

The National Board of Review, in accordance with its custom of selecting the best films of the year, has issued its list of 40 productions, considered the best of the cinema output for 1927 as viewed from a national viewpoint. The pictures are selected for either all around excellence, or worthwhile acting, plot or setting. They are as follows:

"The Boy Rider," "The Cat and the Canary," "Chang," "Flesh and the Devil," "The Forbidden Woman," "The Gaucho," "The King of Kings," "Les Miserables," "London After Midnight," "Love," "The Loves of Sunya," "The Loves of Carmen," "Madame Wants No Children," "The Magic Flame,"' "Man, Woman, and Sin," "Manon Lescaut," "The Moon of Israel," "The Music Master," "No Man's Law," "The Patent Leather Kid," "The Potters," "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," "Quality Street," "Resurrection," "The Rough Riders," "Service for Ladies," "Soft Cushions," "Seventh Heaven," "Stark Love," "Sunrise," "Two Arabian Knights," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Underworld," "The Way of All Flesh," "White Gold," "Wild Geese," "Wings," "The Woman on Trial" and "The Yankee Clipper."

As a supplement to the above group the Board includes five foreign films as examples of artistic merit. They are: "Carmen," "Chronicles of the Gray House," "Crime and Punishment," "The Power of Darkness" and "The Street."

Films Only for Loew Reading Houses

The Colonial and Regent, Loew's houses in Reading, Pa., have both dropped the presentation and returned to a straight motion picture policy. If this reversion to pictures is found to be profitable, it is considered likely that Loew's will adopt the straight film policy in other Pennsylvania houses.

Joe Brandt, President of Columbia Pictures

New Holding Company Will Acquire Skouras Real Estate Interests

THE real estate interests of Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., will be taken over by a new holding company just organized under the title of the St. Louis Properties Corporation. Included in the St. Louis property are the Ambassador Theatre and office building and the Grand Central Theatre building. The new concern will also acquire the Missouri Theatre and office building, now held by the Famous Players Missouri Corp.

A controlling interest in the St. Louis Properties Corporation will be held by Spyros, Charles and George Skouras and Clarence Turley, who will be vice-president and general manager of the new corporation.

Skouras Brothers Enterprises will receive $500,000 in cash and $1,000,000 in debenture bonds for its equity in the theatres, and, in addition, will own a one-third interest in the St. Louis Properties Corporation. The bonds will yield the Skouras company $60,000 in annual dividends, and will meet the bulk of the $75,000 annual dividend requirements of Skouras Enterprises.

The price to be paid the Paramount-Famous Lasky Corporation for the Missouri Theatre building has not been revealed. The theatre section of this structure alone was under lease for 25 years at an annual rental of $230,000.

Joe Brandt Issues Open Letter to Producers

Columbia President Advocates Fewer Pictures With Same Amount of Money As Now Being Spent

JOE BRANDT, president of Columbia Pictures Corp., has issued an open letter to producers of the motion picture industry in which he advocates fewer pictures, with the same amount of money being expended on the reduced programs as is now applied to the larger number of pictures being produced. In other words, as a protection to both the producer and exhibitor he would increase the quality of pictures correspondingly with the decrease in quantity.

The Brandt letter, which is direct to the point, is as follows:

"Don't you honestly believe that if every producing company were to take immediate steps to reduce the number of pictures it is making, and put just as much money and energy into making less pictures, the resultant product would be much better than that which is now being produced?

"You certainly must know that the motion picture industry is suffering from the evils of over-production.

"Prominent theatre managers have told me that they are compelled to turn down good box-office pictures that would please their patrons and show a profit to the stockholders, because under the present system their hands are tied. They are forced to run poor pictures made by producers who are more interested in quantity than in quality. The net result to these theatre-owners is loss of prestige, patronage and profits.

"You certainly must agree with me when I say that the only theatres that can hope to show real profits are those in a position to select good pictures from among all product offered every season—and reject the bad ones.

"No theatre-owner has the right to betray the public trust by running a bad picture when he has the choice of playing better ones.

"No producer should be so blind to his own best interests as to want to stifle competition, because every good picture that is shown creates new customers for the industry as a whole. Money alone doesn't make pictures. It takes brain-power.

"When you drive that brain-power to working overtime, there can be but one result—mediocrity.

"Most poor pictures are in that class because there hasn't been enough time given to story development, casting, direction, and other necessary details.

"Why should millions of dollars continue to be wasted every year in the making of so many pictures? By concentrating on fewer pictures the quality could be vastly improved.

"What is more important, theatre-owners would willingly pay more money for fewer good pictures.

"I am thoroughly convinced that a decreased production schedule for the industry will work out for the constructive good and best interests of every factor in it.

"We are ready to make 'Better Pictures' the policy for the coming season.

"What are you producers going to do about it?"

Nagel Signs Joint Contract With M-G-M, Warners

Something unique in contracts is that signed by Conrad Nagel, who will divide his services between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers. Last week Warner Bros. completed negotiations with M-G-M, whereby he will act for them both.

30 On Gotham Schedule

Sam Sax Announces Twenty-Six Program Pictures and Four Specials for 1928-29

SAM SAX, president of Gotham and Lumas, who is in New York for a series of conferences with his associate, Budd Rogers, announces a production schedule of thirty pictures for the 1928-29 season. There will be twenty-six Gotham productions and four specials. Definite plans for these productions and the releasing policy have not yet been determined in all details, but all final arrangements are now being completed.

According to Mr. Sax the company has been four years in reaching the point where it can attain this magnitude of production and still maintain both the high class of pictures released and the capable distributing arrangements.

In discussing the forthcoming program Mr. Sax said:

"While we are not prepared at the present moment to definitely announce the complete lineup so far as stories, titles and personnel are concerned, we plan a concrete program with all guess work eliminated as far as is humanly possible, so that a title announced by Gotham means a picture actually to be produced by that title and from the story mentioned.

"We are now in final process of elimination as far as story material is concerned and have progressed quite a ways in many other plans which will be made known soon."

Gotham still has six productions to be completed on the schedule for the current season. Mr. Sax was due to leave for California this week and upon his arrival work is scheduled to be rushed on these unfinished pictures. As soon as they are out of the way the production forces will get busy with the making of the thirty productions on the 1928-29 schedule.

Finish F B O Schedule; Release Dates Set

WITH production well advanced on "Sally of the Scandals," starring Bessie Love, F B O's schedule for 1927-28 is complete except for this one picture. The other productions intended for the current schedule, and recently completed at the studio, include: "Alex the Great" and "Crooks Can't Win," starring "Skeets" Gallagher and Ralph Lewis, respectively.

Release dates have been set on the following pictures:

"Her Summer Hero," February 12th; "Wallflowers," February 16th; "Chicago After Midnight," March 4th; "Beyond London's Lights," March 18th; "Freckles," March 21st; "Crooks Can't Win," April 7th; "Red Riders of Canada," April 15th; "The Little Yellow House," April 24th; "Skinner's Big Idea," May 11th; "Alex the Great," May 13th; "The Devil's Trade Mark," May 28th; "Loves of Ricardo," June 17th; and "Sally of the Scandals," July 15th.

The company has scheduled as specials "Driftin' Sands," January 1st; "Wizard of the Saddle," January 22nd; "Fangs of the Wild," February 5th; "The Riding Renegade," February 19th, and "When the Law Rides," February 26th.

"The Little Buckaroo," March 11th; "Breed of the Sunsets," April 1st; "Law of Fear," April 8th; "Phantom of the Range," April 22nd; "The Pinto Kid," April 29th; "Man in the Rough," May 20th; "Dog Justice," June 10th; "The Texas Tornado," June 24th; "The Fighting Redhead," July 1st; "The Trail of Courage," July 8th, and "The Bantam Cowboy," August 12th.

First National British and German Units at Work

With regard to First National's producing operations in Germany and England, Bruce Johnson, foreign manager, said this week that Defu had completed five pictures and was started well along on a second group of six, and that in England the organization was now at work on the second feature.

Out of the five produced in Germany it now appears, Mr. Johnson said, that at least three of them will receive world-wide distribution. "Dancing Vienna," starring Lyra Mara and Ben Lyon and directed by Frederich Zellnic, has had such enthusiastic receptions in both Germany and England that it is asured of world distribution. The picture has been previewed by First National executives here and is now being titled and prepared for presentation in the United States. The picture may be given a Broadway run as a two-a-day attraction. The second German work which is to be given world distribution stars Paul Wegener and its title is translated into English as "The Wild Man." "Train de Luxe," a comedy, which Mr. Johnson said was not produced with a view to giving it world distribution, attracted such notice at its trade show in England that it now appears probable that this film also will be shown in all countries. A fourth picture, "Menege," has been voted by the German critics one of the best pictures of the year.

The First National production units in Germany are under the supervision of Ray Rockett. The company has under contract several stars and directors and plans some ambitious productions to be included in the group of five features now under way. Among these will be a screen version of Suderman's "Frau Sorge," and one of Zola's "Raquin," the latter to be directed by Jacques Feyder, a French director.

Graham Cutts has completed the first of the productions First National is making in England and has started on the second. The completed work, "Confetti," will be distributed in the United States, Germany, France and other countries in addition, of course, to Great Britain. The English production activities of First National are under the supervision of Harry Ham.

Among the future works to be produced by this organization will be a screen version of Sem Bellini's "La Oena della Beffe," which was translated and produced on the stage in America under the title of "The Jest."

E. A. Eschmann, who has joined Columbia Pictures as General Sales Manager

E. A. Eschmann Columbia Sales-Distribution Head

E. A. Eschmann, former general manager of distribution for First National and Pathe, has joined Columbia Pictures and will have complete charge of sales and distribution. His official title is that of General Sales Manager and it is understood that he enters the company under an agreement that assures him of a participating share in the business.

Besides having been connected with First National and Pathe, Mr. Eschmann was also with United Artists as assistant to Hiram Abrams. When Pathe and De Mille were consolidated he became eastern division manager.

Another change in the Columbia personnel is the transfer of C. H. Macgowan from the position of sales executive for Columbia to that of general manager of the company.

"Blossom Time" for Gaynor and Farrell

NOW that Janet Gaynor has signed a new five-year contract with Fox Films following a slight salary dispute, Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox, has rapidly formulated plans for future pictures in which the young actress will appear.

She and Charles Farrell, who appeared with her in "Seventh Heaven," and who also plays opposite her in "The Street Angel," will co-star in the film dealing with the life and love of Franz Schubert and entitled "Blossom Time." Scenes will be taken in the original setting of the story. The two young players will be sent to Vienna and France after they have finished their present picture work. Frank Borzage will direct them for the third time. He will sail abroad some time in March to select locations and shooting will start later in the spring. He will, in the meantime, direct another film for Fox.

In and Out of Town

MAY McAVOY, Warner Bros. star, left New York last week for the west, stopping en route at the Madison Theatre in Detroit and the Garrick Theatre in Chicago to make personal appearances in conjunction with "The Jazz Singer."

ABRAHAM LEHR, vice-president and general manager for Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., arrived in New York last Monday morning to make arrangements for the world premiere of "The Passionate Adventure" at one of the Broadway theatres.

IRENE RICH, Warner Bros. star, has terminated her vacation in New York and this week departed for Hollywood. During her stay in the east she looked over the new theatrical productions for possible vehicles.

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of Paramount in charge of production, and Walter Wanger, general manager of production, left Hollywood last Monday evening, January 16, for New York.

MONTA BELL, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, returned last week on the SS Paris from a trip of two months abroad. He left New York Sunday, January 15, for the Coast studio.

TOD BROWNING, accompanied by Mrs. Browning, sailed from New York on the SS Paris last Sunday for a tour of Europe that will combine vacation with a search for new screen material. He will visit London, Berlin, Vienna, Budapest and the Riviera.

AL LICHTMAN, United Artists vice-president and general manager of distribution, returned this week from Hollywood, where he discussed future releases with Joseph M. Schenck.

NAT L. MINTZ, vice-president of Charles B. Mintz Pictures, making the "Krazy Kat" cartoons for Paramount, this week began a three weeks' tour of the Paramount exchanges in the east.

W. E. CALLAWAY, southern sales manager for First National, left last Thursday for a trip through his territory. His first stop was Kansas City, with Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Memphis, Atlanta and Charlotte his other stops.

DAVID WARK GRIFFITH, director and producer, arrived in New York last Thursday, January 19, on the Century from Hollywood. Accompanying him was Gerrit J. Lloyd, scenarist. Griffith brought with him a print of his new picture for United Artists, "Drums of Love," the premiere of which he will attend while in New York. Among those who met him at the depot was Morris Gest.

Sennett Aviation Comedy Heads Pathe Shorts

A Sennet film about aviation entitled "Love at First Flight" is the headliner on the Pathe group of short subjects scheduled for the week of January 29th. Other numbers included are Pathe Review, No. 5; the third chapter of the serial, "The Man Without a Face"; "The Wandering Minstrel," an Aesop cartoon; Topics of the Day No. 5, and issues Nos. 12 and 13 of the Pathe newsreel.

In the Sennett comedy is a cast composed of Daphne Pollard, Joe Young, Lige Connolly, Madeline Hurlock and Pussums, the cat, in addition to the Sennett bathing girls. Eddie Cline directed the picture and John A. Waldron supervised. The issue of the Review offers: "Interesting People the Editor Meets," "Besides the Blue Nile," and "Monsters of the Past." "The Death Shell" is the title of the new chapter of the serial.

News Reel Resume

Studio Briefs

Kathryn McGuire, who has been appearing as leading lady in Educational comedies, has changed her name to Kathryn Landy. She has acted in a Colleen Moore film and is now in "Lilac Time" with that star. James Montgomery Flagg, the illustrator, recently pronounced her "the most beautiful blonde in Hollywood."

Bert Roach, comedian, has signed a new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. His latest role is in "Wickedness Preferred."

Lowell Sherman, Mildred Harris, Josephine Dunn and Clarissa Selwynne have been signed by First National to support Billie Dove in "The Heart of a Follies Girl."

Charley Chase is working on another of his comedies at the Hal Roach studio. This time he is being directed by Fred Guiol instead of James Parrott, who is now megaphoning a new Max Davidson comedy.

John Farrow, scenarist and writer of original screen stories, has been added to the writing staff of the Paramount studio. Farrow wrote "The Blue Danube" and "Wreck of the Hesperus" for Pathe-De Mille.

Mary Turner, who years ago acted in films before suffering a severe accident, is now recovered and has been cast for an important role in "The Actress," a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle.

Johnnie Morris will play the mysterious role of George, the Dummy, in Paramount's "Something Always Happens."

Instead of "Captain Ferreol" Adolphe Menjou's new picture, about to be made by Paramount, will be released under the title of "Code of Honor."

Tiffany-Stahl has another Jack London story, "The Devil Skipper," in production. The principal role is being portrayed by Belle Bennett, while the others in the cast include Montagu Love, Mary McAllister, Malcolm McGregor, Gino Corrade and Frank Leigh. John Adolphi is doing the direction under the supervision of Roy Fitz Roy.

Neil Hamilton will play the Crown Prince in "The Patriot" for Paramount. Robert Brower has also joined the cast.

John Ford, Fox Films director, began production last week on the Donn Byrne novel of Ireland, "Hangman's House." Larry Kent and June Collyer have the leads and William Farnum the principal character part. Earle Foxe and Hobart Bosworth also have roles.

Reginald Barker will start his new special production for Tiffany-Stahl under the temporary title of "Power."

Among the stories by famous masters that Frank P. Donovan of Hollywood plans to produce are: "Nobody's Luggage," by Charles Dickens; "The Bet," by Chekov; "A Piece of String," by De Maupassant; "The Wreck," by Balzac; "The Deserted Village," by Oliver Goldsmith; "The Mystery of Marie Roget," by Poe; "A Cigarette Maker's Romance," by F. Marion Crawford; "God Sees Truth," by Tolstoi; "Will-'o-the-Wisp," by Stevenson; "The Girl with the Golden Eyes," by Balzac; "The Cloak," by Gogol; "The Forgotten Lady,' by Balzac; and "The District Doctor," by Turgenev.

Winifred Landis and Ernest Hilliard complete the cast of players selected by Columbia for supporting roles in "Lady Raffles," starring Estelle Taylor, now in its final week of production.

Guy Oliver will play a role in Paramount's picturization of "Abie's Irish Rose." George Marion, Jr., will do the titles, which, it is said, will include excerpts from the play.

Columbia has loaned Dorothy Revier, one of its contract players, to Fox Films for a role in "The Red Dancer of Moscow." Last year she was loaned for a part in "The Loves of Carmen."

Frank Urson, assistant to Cecil B. De Mille and director of "Chicago," will act as De Mille's aide during the filming of "The Godless Girl." Urson was also directorial aide during the making of "The King of Kings."

Nancy Carroll, who is the Rosemary Murphy of Paramount's "Abie's Irish Rose," will be the feminine lead in Richard Dix' "Easy Come, Easy Go" which Gregory La Cava will direct.

Marie Prevost will have a dramatic role in Pathe-De Mille's "The Godless Girl," thus deserting, temporarily, her comedy characterizations. Mitchell Leisen, who designed the sets for "The King of Kings," will be art director for the new De Mille vehicle.

"Hold Everything," announced by Paramount as the title for Bebe Daniels' next vehicle to follow "Feel My Pulse," is not available. Studio officials are now hunting a substitute.

William Boyd has the stellar role in "The Cop," a story of the New York police force. Elliott Clawson and Tay Garnett, who scenarized "Skyscraper," Boyd's current starring vehicle, are now working on the scenario. Donald Crisp, associate producer, will direct.

Julian Johnson will do the titles for Paramount's "Doomsday."

Gladden James, one of the supporting players in the Pathe serial, "The Man Without a Face," has been working steadily in motion pictures since 1910. He has specialized in playing well dressed young villains.

Another underworld story will come to the screen in Tiffany-Stahl's "The Clash," now being made under the direction of Christy Cabanne. Antonio Moreno and Eddie Gribbon have been cast as the thieves in the story.

Sam Hardy and Ned Sparks have been added to the cast of "The Headliner," the First National production which Robert Kane and Allan Dwan are making. Chester Conklin has the leading role in the production. The story deals with yellow journalism.

Hobart Henley has signed a contract with Paramount. His first directorial work will be to handle the megaphone over the next Paramount picture to star Adolphe Menjou, who is now working under the direction of Lothar Mendes.

Louise Lorraine, M-G-M player, has been loaned to Johnny Hines' unit making "Chinatown Charlie" to play the leading feminine role. Others who will figure in the cast are Harry Gribbon, Edna May, George Kuwa, Jack Burdette and "Scooter" Lowry, the kid actor.

Publix Encourage Advertising of Short Subjects

THE heads of Publix Theatres are encouraging the use of good advertising for short subjects in the newspaper displays for shows at theatres in the circuit. This week there is being launched a contest, open to managers of Publix houses, in which $1,000 in cash prizes will be distributed among those whose advertising on Christie comedies, incorporated into their general newspaper campaigns, is judged the best.

The contest will extend from January 16 to March 17th, and awards will be made thereafter when judging of the managers and theatre advertising men's efforts will be done by a committee composed of Sam Katz, president of Publix; Sam Dembow, Jr., vice-president; D. J. Chatkin, of the Publix booking department; A. M. Botsford, director of Publix advertising and publicity; Ed Olmstead, and Pat Dowling, publicity and sales director for the Christie company.

The contest is being staged by the Publix home office advertising department in conjunction with the Christie Film Company.

The Publix manager originating the best newspaper ad will receive the first prize of $400; second, $150.00; third, $75.00; and fourth, $50.00. There will be three prizes of $25.00 each for the next most representative advertising efforts.

The manager who originates the best exploitation stunt will receive a cash award of $150.00; the second, $50.00; and the third and fourth, $25.00 each.

In case of a tie in any of these campaigns, a similar prize will be awarded.

Sam Katz, president of Publix, stated: "Many theatres have in the past overlooked the fact that comedies, properly advertised in connection with the bill, can sell not only many extra tickets on their own strength, but aid in showing that the theatres are presenting a well rounded bill of entertainment on both the screen and stage. In my opinion theatres have often been lax in taking full advantage of selling the fact that there is a comedy on the bill, a unit which is very often played but lost sight of in the advertising. Our effort will be to assist in righting this condition and pointing out the very advantageous policy of selling the whole show."

Projected Shadow Feature of "Gorilla" Sign

Manager T. Y. Walker of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ill., caught public attention to the showing of "The Gorilla," by throwing at night a large shadow of a gorilla holding a woman in its arms upon a large banner.

Two banners were stretched across the front of two stores, on the second floor, signs were painted on the banners, but a large white space was left so that at night a spotlight on a building directly opposite threw the shadowgraph upon the white-space.

A man dressed as a gorilla made the rounds of stores and other public places during the day time. While the picture was being shown the "gorilla" climbed atop the marquee, where he went through various antics to attract attention.

Briefs

A CATCHY stunt was devised by Charles J. Jones, manager of the Colonial theatre, Harrisburgh, Pa., to advertise "The Poor Nut," shown on the screen there the week of January 16. Through an arrangement with the local Imperial Tea Company store, one thousand peanuts, each with a shipping tag attached to it, were sent through the mails to prospective theatre patrons the week before the date of the opening of "The Poor Nut." The reverse side of the tags contained this inscription: "This is a good nut from the Imperial Tea Store. You can see 'The Poor Nut' at the Colonial Theatre all next week."

FINKELSTEIN & RUBEN is cooperating with a great number of organizations in arranging theatre parties. This month, for example, they are cooperating with the Implement Dealers' Association, the Minnesota Retail Hardware Association and the Northwestern Lumbermen. The latter have arranged for a party of 400 at the State. Recently F. & R. helped arrange theatre parties for the National Creamery Buttermakers' Association, the Ice Cream Supply Men, and the Minnesota Canners' Association. This proves an excellent way of creating good will.

GENERAL excitement over Lindbergh's flight to Mexico added zest to the exploitation of "The Lone Eagle" at Yost's Broadway Theatre in Santa Ana, California. Newspaper ads embodying the wing of a plane with copy reading "winging his way to Santa Ana—The Lone Eagle arrives Tuesday" were run six days in advance, with follow up leading to the smash ad on the day of the opening.

LOCKE CRUMLEY, manager of the New Republic, Jacksonville, is working out a series of newspaper exploitation campaigns for his house in conjunction with the Springfield News, a community newspaper of 5,000 circulation in the great middle class district of Jacksonville.

E. A. PHILLIPS, F. & R. manager at Fargo, N. D., made fast friends of the church element when he had three trailers made and shown in his theatre. These trailers were shown on Saturday and urged church attendance on the following day. The Fargo Ministerial association wrote Mr. Philips a fine letter of appreciation.

W. L. WEAVER, of the Automatic Sprinkler Company, Cleveland, is the winner of the Ford automobile offered by Keith's Palace theatre there to the writer of the best 500-word essay telling why Keith vaudeville and the new Ford car are outstanding achievements. Manager John Royal will give Weaver a presentation party at the Palace as soon as the car is ready for delivery.

A CHECKUP of the sale of West Coast Scrip, which gives West Coast Theatre patrons a ten per cent reduction on the box office price when admissions are purchased in "bulk" shows that it was exceptionally heavy during the holiday shopping rush.

"See It Twice" Drive for Return Showing

Builds Interest in "Ben Hur" Come Back at Salt Lake City

"See it twice" was the slogan used to exploit "Ben Hur," when it played for the second time in five weeks in Salt Lake City, Utah. The line of argument used in the promotion campaign by Manager Grant Pemberton of the Pantages Theatre, where the M-G-M spectacle was shown, was that "Ben Hur" should be seen twice to be fully appreciated. Pemberton was assisted in his promotion work by a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer exploiteer.

One week prior to the picture's opening, the regular trailer was supplemented by a special trailer stressing the fact that "Ben Hur" should be seen more than once to give full enjoyment.

Manager Grant Pemberton received a wire from Ramon Novarro in which the latter expressed his personal appreciation to the Salt Lake public for having requested a second showing of "Ben Hur." The Postal Telegraph furnished 5,000 blanks for a reproduction of the message and distribution was made throughout the downtown district of the city. The wire which was enlarged on a 22 x 28 card, was also used in connection with a window display by the Postal company..

An announcement relative to the engagement of the picture was made before two thousand five hundred delegates attending the Utah State Teachers' convention.

Supplies Horn and Passes to "Bugle Call" Blowers

Manager N. Prager got a lot of noise out of a stunt he worked for "The Bugle Call" at the Publix Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex.

Prager had a mat made with copy reading, "Play any of the U. S. Army bugle calls and win a free ticket to see Jackie Coogan in 'THE BUGLE CALL.' "

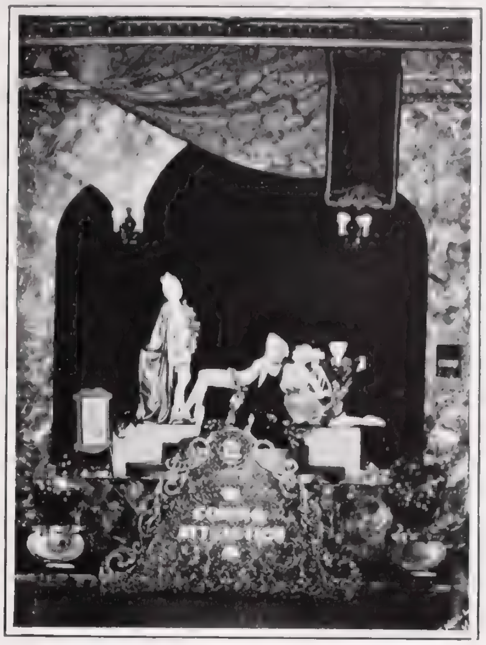
This stunt resulted in a steady stream of near-buglers who didn't win a ticket and a sufficient number of real buglers who blew themselves to a free ticket.

News Distributing Book on Theatre Management

THROUGH arrangement with the George H. Doran company, publishers, Motion Picture News will act as distributing agent for Harold B. Franklin's book "Motion Picture Theatre Management."

In this work Mr. Franklin, who is president of West Coast Theatres, Inc., and formerly vice-president of Publix Theatres, offers the results of his wide experience as a theatre executive on all subjects pertaining to the operation and maintenance of a motion picture playhouse.

Particular interest has centered in Mr. Franklin's book because of its significance as an authentic reflection of the value which the leading circuits of the day place upon the various phases of management in addition to its complete exposition of the scientific methods applied to the operation of the modern motion picture theatre.



An attractive advance lobby display featuring "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" used at the Main Street theatre, Kansas City. The figures were cutouts of photographic enlargements shown against a black velvet background.

Novel Display for "London After Midnight"

Manager Raymond B. Jones used one of the most novel shadow boxes ever displayed in Fort Worth to advertise Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight" at the Publix Worth Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex.

The box represented a room in a haunted house and the spooky nature of the picture was depicted by having the two doors of the room open and shut intermittently.

A small rocking chair, obtained at a toy store, also rocked back and forth occasionally as a ghost-like figure in the background waved its arms. All this motion was obtained by the use of a small electric motor and a series of belts and pulleys concealed in the base of the box.

Folk Dances Presented as Local Stage Feature

Manager Harry Brown, Jr., of the Majestic theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, recently repeated the "Dance of the Nations" contest which several weeks ago won wide publicity for his house. In this contest, couples of foreign extraction, attired in their native costumes, are invited to participate, the audience acting as the judges as to the best costumes, and the most gifted dancers.

Radio Memory Contest for Passes to "Serenade"

Ross A. Wiegand of the Publix Rialto Theatre, Denver, Colo., tied up with KLZ radio broadcasting station in a stunt to advertise Adolphe Menjou in "Serenade."

Every evening at 8 o'clock during the first three days of picture, the organist played three serenades. These serenades were broadcasted through the local station and all those sending in the correct title of serenades were given a pair of tickets.

Promotions Announced By Publix Theatres

J. J. Fitzgibbons, Eastern division manager of Publix Theatres, announced in Jacksonville last week several important promotions in the organization in that district.

Among those who will assume new duties with the company here are Frank Dowler, been district manager for Florida, who becomes Southeastern manager of theatres in Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and North and South Carolina. Jesse L. Clark, for several years manager of the Palace and Temple theatres, succeeds Mr. Dowler as Florida district manager.

Charles S. Morrison succeeds to the position vacated by Clark as city manager in Jacksonville. He will be assisted at the Palace by Charles Miller, at the Temple by James Schumann and at the Arcade by James Newman. Walter Lloyd, who has been city manager at Daytona Beach for Publix, has been named assistant to Mr. Clark and Newton L. Treece, formerly manager of the Imperial and Rialto theatres in Jacksonville, has been made city manager at Gainesville, Fla., where a new Publix house is being built.

Screen Test for Entry in Pathe Rooster Contest

A Black Jersey Giant Rooster, entered in the Pathe Rooster contest to find a new star for that company's trade mark, received his screen test last week at Matawan, N. J., amid impressive pageantry supplied by youngsters attending a local dancing school. The Jersey Giant has been entered in the contest by the Marcy Farm, Matawan. He was concealed in a huge oyster shell, around which the youngsters performed a "war dance." The shell was opened by one of the young dancers clad in a cadet uniform and the rooster stepped forth into the glare of lights and posed for the motion picture cameras.

Key City Reports

New York City

AS predicted in these columns last week Charlie Chaplin's "The Circus" at the Strand proved to be the money-getter along Broadway, grossing $81,206 for the first seven days, and doing more business over the first week-end than the Strand does for a full week on an average showing. The above gross is a record for this theatre, being $6,000 more than the customers paid to see Charlie in "The Gold Rush." Nine shows are being reeled off daily at regular prices, and it is said that a four weeks' guarantee is in order.

Whether it suited the greater part of the Paramount's 3,500 or not "Helen of Troy" kept the figures for this house well up to the point where the bookkeepers write in black. "Helen" came in here fresh from a $2 house, and the Paramount has them coming anyway. "The Gateway of the Moon" (Fox), has not been talked about as being anything out of ordinary run 'o mine, but, with the help of an excellent presentation, "Joan of Arc," a special, the Roxy went over to an average week's trade. This means that over $100,000 was checked up.

Rated by many as chock full of laughs, "Baby Mine" (M-G-M), gave the Capitol a pretty good week, though, of course, not holding marks. The team of Clark and McCullough, naturally, helped things along on the presentation end. Gilda Gray and "The Devil Dancer" skimmed their way out of the Rivoli at the end of the week, and the Publix-U. A. management lost nothing by the four weeks' engagement. "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" (Par.), from the story which has provided Anita Loos with an income for the balance of her life, followed in. "Lorelei" Ruth Taylor will make personal appearances. "The Dove" (U. A.), is still at the Rialto, but fluttering along on the final lap of its pretty fair run.

Gilbert-Garbo admirers, and there are many, are still clamoring to pay from 50c to $1 to see "Love" at the Embassy. There seems to be no let up here. At the Colony, "On Your Toes" (U.), gave that house a fair week, and down at the Cameo they gave "Serenade" (Par.), another chance, after a week in the Paramount, and did well enough.

"The Jazz Singer" (W. B.), is past its third month at Warner's theatre, and still going well, and Uncle Carl's Uncle Tom show is still at the Central, and doing better than some of the boys in this town predicted. At the Astor, "The Enemy" (M-G-M), continues at a fair pace, and "Wings" is still good enough to keep the small Criterion well filled. There is evidently such a remarkable note of optimism in the title or else it's a lease or something, but anyway "Sunrise" (Fox), continues at the Times Square with plenty of advertising space in the dailies. "The Gaucho" (U. A.), is nearing the end of a good run at the Liberty.

Los Angeles

THE second week of "The Jazz Singer" at the Criterion was great. The demand for reservations is reported to be so heavy that seats are being sold four weeks in advance.

"Love" is immensely popular at the Million Dollar Theatre. There is a steady line of ticket buyers at the box office during the afternoons and evenings.

"My Best Girl" continues its run at the United Artists' Theatre. Ever since the opening of the magnificent new theatre on December 26th, crowds have been pouring into it. The theatre is attracting an unusually high type of patronage, "home folks" predominating.

"Seventh Heaven" is still popular in its return visit to Los Angeles. It is now showing at Pantages, where it is drawing unusually large crowds.

"The Gaucho" is nearing the end of its engagement at the Grauman's Chinese Theatre, Hollywood. The picture kept the house very well filled during the past week.

"Sunrise" at Carthay Circle held the box office record for the past week with sustained success. It is reported that Fox' picture, "Four Sons," is booked to follow "Sunrise."

Three new screen attractions were billed as premieres last week at motion picture houses—"Baby Mine" at Loew's State, "Serenade" at the Metropolitan, and "A Reno Divorce" at the Boulevard. They all just brought in the average business, with "Baby Mine" probably doing better than the other two.

Kansas City

MATINEE attendance at most of the first run down town houses in Kansas City was good last week, but the night business showed a slump, due probably because of the fact that spring-like weather made night motoring popular temporarily.

At Loew's Midland Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight" played to fair attendance at night and good matinee crowds, which also can be said of "Legionaires in Paris" at the Liberty.

At the Mainstreet "French Dressing" did an average business, the night attendance not falling off so noticeable as was the case at some of the other theatres. "Two Girls Wanted" at the Pantages did a better business than usual, the afternoon attendance greatly bolstering up the week's total. Esther Ralston in "The Spotlight" at the Newman played to slightly better than average attendance, also, as did "Polly of the Movies" at the Capitol.

Milwaukee

IN comparison with the two previous weeks, last was an exceedingly quiet week in down town theatres. Business in most houses was just fair, in some not so fair. Weather has been balmy and spring-like with a suggestion of frost now and then.

"Surrender" played at the Alhambra to rather good houses. "The Jazz Singer" at the Garden continued to draw well in its second week. "Her Wild Oat" at the Wisconsin brought in just fair business. "A Texas Steer" at the Strand missed by just a little in bringing in average business. "The Fair Co-Ed" at the Merrill was popular. "Silk Legs" was well liked at the Orpheum.

The National theatre opening on Thursday took honors for the largest crowds among the outskirt theatres. "Becky" was the photoplay chosen for the opening program of the National. "7th Heaven" played to fairly good houses at the Milwaukee. "Man, Woman and Sin" failed to bring in business at the Tower and Uptown theatres. The Oriental offered "The Valley of Giants," which succeeded in bringing in average patronage. "Two Arabian Knights" was very well received at the Venetian and business was good. Fair patronage was accorded "Shanghai Bound" at the Egyptian.

Cincinnati

WHAT is considered the high-water mark for the current season for a regular booking, and excluding special events or pictures, is the attendance at the Capitol Theatre, where "Love" packed 'em in during a two weeks' run. Sellouts for every showing were the rule rather than the exception. The picture proved a natural for drawing power, and was, incidentally, the first one to be advertised in a big way for several months. In addition to the usual paper, several stands were in evidence on the more prominent bill boards throughout the city.

The new Albee Theatre continued to draw the customary crowds for the week, where "Her Wild Oat" was the screen attraction, aided and abetted by a new series of stage presentations. "Ben Hur" rounded out its second week at the Lyric with no appreciable let down in the attendance which characterized the first week's run. "Paid to Love" drew its customary quota of customers to the Walnut, where it was enjoyed, although the local critics were not overly lavish in their praise following the initial showing.

Gifts gave the natives another chance to see "The Covered Wagon" at popular prices, and got away with it on a satisfactory basis. The house cashed in on the advertising and prestige of the road-show run of a year or so ago, the picture attracting many who had not seen it previously, and quite a number who had.

Box office returns were quite satisfactory at the Strand, where "Honeymoon Hate" was the center of attraction. Ditto at the Family, on a split-week run, in which "Silk Stockings" and "The Branded Sombrero" were on view as two diametrically opposite themes.

Des Moines

AT the Des Moines Theatre "Sorrell and Son" did a very satisfactory business, following exploitation through a personal letter published in the papers and used as throwaways. The picture, as at other places, started slow, but built up strongly from show to show. At the Capitol the week was not quite as good. "The Love Mart" was well heralded. The stage show was "Florida," which did not make as big a hit as some of the other Publix shows. At the Strand, the two features did unusually good business, almost establishing a record for the house for attendance since the cut in price policy. The pictures, which evidently won because of real merit, were "The Thirteenth Hour" and "Smile, Brother, Smile."

Minneapolis

THERE were no particular outstanding film attractions starting in Minneapolis this week, and the theatres found business was just about average.

"Seventh Heaven" did a very good second week's business at the Garrick. Billie Dove in "The Love Mart" attracted good crowds at the State, but didn't come near records. Milton Sills in "The Valley of the Giants" proved just an average attraction from the box office standpoint, as did Thomas Meighan in "The City Gone Wild" at the Lyric. Pantages was fortunate in showing "The Magic Flame" with Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman, as this picture proved a very good drawing card. The Hennepin-Orpheum showed "The Rush Hour" with Marie Prevost, a comedy which added to the general attractiveness of the program.

"Underworld," which showed for two weeks recently at the Garrick, came into the Grand, a loop theatre, and continued to draw the crowds. "Wings" entered its second week at the Metropolitan and showed to fine houses all week, concluding its engagement Saturday. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., in "Dead Man's Curve," was the attraction at the Seventh Street theatre. Some of the neighborhood theatres were showing big pictures and profited accordingly. The Rialto and Loring, for example, featured "The Big Parade" and the Lagoon showed "Ben Hur." The weather was unusually mild during the entire week.

Pittsburgh

A GENERAL simmering down to normal after two weeks of holidays and usual holiday bustle. Probably most important was the fine business the Nixon, road show house, did on "The King of Kings" in its second week and probably could have played a third if bookings would allow this. Next in importance was the business Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight" did at the Penn. Shaney in "Mockery" and "The Unknown" did not do so well but his latest brought the gross well up to above normal, with help by the stage revue "Bagdad" having a cast of 43, all good talent. "Wild Geese," first independent production to play the Stanley Grand in more than a year, did better than even the most optimistic person expected and speaks well for Tiffany-Stahl. "Man Crazy" at the Davis did well but the Lee Kids in person are responsible for this.

At the Aldine "The Fighting Eagle," first of the Pathe pictures to play outside Stanley combine, flopped because of costume angle. Olympia booked "Honeymoon Hate," but any picture unless a super is lost at this house, and the same might be said at the State, which played "The Girl in the Pullman' ' with Marie Prevost. Cameo had "Moon of Israel," which may play three weeks, and business done the first week was as good as other attractions that have played longer. The Harris theatre celebrated their thirtieth anniversary with all houses doing big business; the Harris breaking records.

New Orleans

WITH spring-like weather prevailing all week, and the first-run picture houses showing excellent films, New Orleans theatre business took a big spurt.

The New Saenger Theatre's business went soaring higher than it has during the past few weeks. The world premier of "Sadie Thompson," starring Gloria Swanson, was the film attraction. Miss Swanson has a huge following in this city, and her fans flocked to the palatial house in large numbers. On Thursday, Ruth Taylor, star of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," made a personal appearance on the stage, and this helped swell the week's receipts. In addition to the Swanson film, six N. Y. New Idea Publix stage acts were presented with Ben Black as master of ceremonies. Either the film or the stage show could have attracted patrons, that's how good both were.

Loew's State Theatre, the across the street neighbor of the New Saenger, continues to do its share of the business. This house has been playing strong stage and screen bills for many weeks. Last week the film feature was "Wife Savers," with Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton starred, with Sally Blaine. Excellent exploitation by the theatre's press department put the film over in good style. Five strong Loew acts were presented, but the picture was sufficient to attrack patrons.

"Beau Sabreur" was the Strand Theatre feature, and this romance of the Foreign Legion did an excellent week's business.

With Norman Kerry and Lois Moran in "The Irresistible Lover," business was above the average at the Liberty Theatre, while "Lovelorn pulled them in at the Globe, despite the fact that the picture had its local premiere at the Liberty the week previous.

"Man Crazy" was the Trianon offering featuring Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall. Business was good. "The Rush Hour" was the Orpheum feature and with six Orpheum vadeville acts in addition, the house did a nice week's business.

San Francisco

NEW YEAR'S EVE, in the San 'Francisco motion picture theatres and the week following were good. In spite of the fact that a heavy rain storm visited San Francisco on the Eve, business was not affected. All the theatres were crowded and all the first run theatres, as well as some of the residential theatres, kept open till after midnight. Higher prices were charged and seats were reserved in these motion picture theatres. Special performances, besides the pictures, were shown.

"The Texas Steer" at the Granada, together with the presentation act, "Lace Ideas," filled the house, practically for every performance, and more than filled it in the evenings, one reason being the exceptional popularity of Will Rogers here. "Love" at the California theatre, attracted many, as the story was well known.

"Serenade" at Loew's Warfield, together with the University of California Glee Club, more than filled the theatre. Menjou always attracts good crowds to local theatres. "Old Ironsides," held over for a second week at the St. Francis theatre, did very well, as many high school children made it a point to see that picture during their two weeks' vacation.

"The Main Event," together with the acts of vaudeville at the Golden Gate theatre, attracted well. "The Golden Snare," "Lost in a Pullman" and vaudeville acts more than filled the Union Square theatre.

In the second run houses, good reports were given out by the Cameo theatre, which showed "McFadden's Flats;" by the Bayview, which showed "The Social Highwayman;" the Alexandria, which showed "Shanghai Bound" and by the Alhambra theatre, which showed "The Prince of Headwaiters."

Salt Lake City

DOWNTOWN theatre business is still picking up to a marked degree since the first of the year in Salt Lake City. The weather, after having been like spring for a couple of weeks, has experienced a drop in temperature again this week.

"The Love Mart" at the Capitol theatre has been received in a most favorable manner by capacity houses every night. Billie Dove is the star in this production. The Fanchon and Marco stage productions are always a big drawing card at this house as is Alberti and his band, which appeared on the stage. The stage presentation this week was billed as the "Peacock Idea" and was a spectacular extravaganza of beauty and art.

Rex Ingram's production "The Garden of Allah" with Alice Terry, did a tremendous business at the Pantages theatre, having been exploited here for some time past and looked forward to with great expectation by the public. Adolph Menjou in "Serenade" drew good crowds to the Paramount Empress theatre here in connection with a stage offering in the form of "The Master Cellist," Ferenz Steiner. All records of the Gem theatre were broken last week during the showing of "Wild Geese," with Belle Bennett, Anita Stewart, Russell Simpson and all star cast. Anna Q. Nilsson and Francis X. Bushman in "The Thirteenth Juror" was well liked at the American theatre and good houses were the rule.

Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Wife Savers" went over big at the Victory. This picture was exploited somewhat unusually here, a tieup having been arranged with the Utah Power and Light Company regarding their electric ranges. "Camille," starring Norma Talmadge, was an exceptionally good drawing card for the Rialto, a second run house.

The Mission, a neighborhood house here, enjoyed good results from the second showing of Marion Davies in "Tillie the Toiler."

Ottawa

THE pick of the pictures at Ottawa, Ontario, theatres during the week of January 9th depended a great deal upon the point of view of the individual and the taste of the theatre patron. Our own "board of strategy" reached the decision that "Rose of the Golden West,' at the Century Theatre was the genuine choice of the connoisseurs during the week. But opposed to this opinion of three, comprising our wife, our niece and your correspondent, was the fact that crowds jammed into the Regent Theatre all week to see Lon Chaney in "London After Midnight."

"A Harp in Hock" held close attention at B. F. Keith's Theatre, and, combined with good vaudeville and a fur fashion show, it drew heavy patronage from all classes, who walked out pleased. "The Thirteenth Hour," a mystery thriller, was the attraction at the Imperial Theatre. It was a daring thing on the part of Manager Ray Tubman to play a picture with this title during a week having a Friday the 13th, but the connection aroused comment. There were fair crowds here, and Lionel Barrymore's name had something to do with attracting the people.

"The Blonde Saint," with Lewis Stone and Doris Kenyon, made a strong attraction for the Fern Theatre. The Columbia Theatre was a busy place, and Milton Sills in "The Sea Tiger" was the cause of patronage increase. Lon Chaney in "Mr. Wu" also brought a throng to the Rex Theatre.

Opposition to the moving picture houses was provided by Sir John Martin Harvey at the Russell Theatre, but the crowds were disappointing to the knighted actor.

St. Louis, Mo.

RUTH ELDER, the first woman to almost fly across the Atlantic Ocean, was the headliner on the program of the Loew's State Theatre at Eighth and Washington avenue last week, and is reported to have packed 'em in. She had to, for it is reported from the public department of the Loew's organization that Ruth is being paid $1,000 a day. And that's flying high in the salary air routes for even Ruth.

As an entertainer Ruth is still an excellent aviatrix. She takes a bigger chance in tripping across a vaudeville stage than on her momentous air flight. But her personality or past performances, or something, holds her up. William Haines in "West Point" was the screen feature of the State during the week.

At the Ambassador the screen attraction was Conrad Nagel and May McAvoy in "Slightly Used." It did fairly good business supported by Publix Follies headed by Ed Lowry.

The Missouri Theatre offered Gary Cooper and Evelyn Brent in "Beau Sabreur," the sequel to "Beau Geste." This picture did not do so well as "Beau Geste," but, on the whole, had a satisfactory week.

The St. Louis, in conjunction with Orpheum vaudeville, showed as its screen attraction Marie Prevost in "The Rush Hour." At the Orpheum theatre showed "Not for Publication" on its screen. The Grand Opera, as the city's third vaudeville-picture house, had as its film feature "Wolf Fangs."

Boston

LAST WEEK was one of the best in Boston in years. Practically all of the first run houses have been doing a real week's business and exhibitors are happy once more after the brief dull spell of the holiday weeks.

By far the most talked-of picture in Boston is "Love," which is showing at Loew's Orpheum. This Metro-Goldwyn feature first appeared at Loew's State Christmas week. Despite a general dullness for the week in other theatres, the State smashed all records in its gross on "Love." Even the mark made by "The Big Parade" went by the boards. It was natural that the Loew circuit should immediately book the film for one of its other houses and the Orpheum has been shattering all its records during the week. The picture has taken Boston by storm and will be shown again in some of the first run houses before the season is over.

The Metropolitan, for the first time in months, went outside Paramount's productions this week to show Warner Brothers "Old San Francisco." Whether it was the picture, or the personal appearance of that stage favorite, Fannie Ward, or the latest innovation in the musical section, the new Metropolitan Salon Ensemble, or the whole program combined that did it, the Metropolitan grossed one of the best weeks for many moons. The Metropolitan plays another trump card next week when Miss Ruth Taylor appears in person to witness her latest picture, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Boston's only road show, "Wings," has so far proven the most successful road show for several years. This has been showing at the Tremont and is now on its third week. So great has been the demand for seats that the customary press courtesies have been curtailed to the extent of requiring them to be filled by mail instead of by personal presentation at the box office, something that has happened only a couple of times before in Boston's road show history.

Loew's State's feature, another Lon Chaney, "London After Midnight," while not grossing as heavy as "Love," showed itself to be a real feature and did return one of the best figures for the year for this theatre for one of the best weeks for this house Beauties provided a sharp contrast to the feature film for the stage number, resulting in general approval of the entire bill. "The Forbidden Woman" was shown to similarly large houses at the Keith-Albee Boston theatre for one of the best week's for this house in months.. The Modern and Beacon twin houses played double features, "The 13th Juror" and "Flying Luck" for one of the heaviest week's grosses this season.

Other features showing in Boston are "The Angel of Broadway" at the Exeter, "Les Miserables" at the University, following its road showing at the Colonial some weeks ago; "Dress Parade" at the Bowdoin and, "Lonesome Ladies" at the Scollay Square Olympia.

Portland, Ore.

A MUCH better week was registered last week by the local first-run houses. The Broadway went along to a profitable intake on the week, having as its main cinema attraction, "Becky," and a Fanchon and Marco presentation, featuring Edna Covey. The Liberty, which has always been in the "red," staged somewhat of a come-back, with F B O's "Clancy's Kosher Wedding," with five acts of inferior vaudeville.

The town's big noise was over at the Blue Mouse, where Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer" was holding forth in its second week. The Jolson picture proved a real box-office card, as it came near duplicating the gross done on the first week. Tebbett's new Oriental, which is the town's largest cinema playhouse, broke the opening week's record with William Boyd's "Dress Parade." Josef Srodka's orchestra and Glenn Shelley at the organ, are both proving house assets.

"Ben Hur" went along to only a fair gross, in the second week, while there was nothing startling over at Universal's Columbia, which exhibited "A Man's Past." The Orpheum came through with one of the best weeks in the history of the house, with Theodore Roberts in person, and the picture attraction, "The Girl from Rio."

Pantages could not, for some reason, get started. "The Gateway of the Moon" (Fox) with Delores Del Rio, did not furnish much stimulus to the gate, but the vaudeville portion of the program was much better than average.

Tampa

WARMER weather last week gave the theatres a better break, though the increase wasn't anything startling at that. Two theatres report "big" business on Sunday, with the others holding up just about normal or a little over.

"Beau Sabreur" was the feature attraction at the Tampa for the first half and it failed to develop a draw, business running just about average. "Serenade" did better the last half, Menjou being one of the favorites here.

"The Love Mart" went over big at the Victory for the Sunday opening and held up very good for the following three days. "Coney Island" and the five act vaudeville bill, used the last half, drew the usual good business.

The Strand also had a big Sunday, with "Ladies Must Dress" featured, and the following day was good. "The Lone Eagle," featured the next three days, brought very good returns. Manager Hussey gave it a great flash with an illuminated airplane, propeller spinning, on the marquee and a flock of real propellers displayed in the lobby. "The Opening Night" did nicely the last two days.

The Franklin had about an average week. The three features used were well liked but they didn't seem to be able to pull anything extra. The pictures featured were "Peaks of Destiny," "The Love-lorn," and "The Spoilers of the West."

Albany

CONTRARY to the predictions of many self-appointed and so-called picture sharks of the city, the week's run of "Helen of Troy" at the Mark Strand, in Albany, proved one of the biggest business getters for that theatre in several weeks, with receipts running close to "Beau Geste" and "Seventh Heaven," Monday night started off well and during the week there were hold out crowds each evening, while matinees were also well above the average. Two exceptionally good Vitaphone presentations no doubt helped business.

At the Leland, "The Shepherd of the Hills" started off big on Monday, jumped on Tuesday and by Wednesday the walls of the theatre were fairly bulging. Much of this business probably came from word of mouth advertising, for the picture pleased, and matinees, as well as evenings, were away above the average. At the Clinton Square theatre in Albany, "No Place to Go" played to big business throughout the entire week. At the Mark Ritz "Topsy and Eva" did not pan out quite as well as was expected and created no great amount of talk or in fact business. Proctor's Grand used "Angel of Broadway," along with its vaudeville, during the last part of the week. Ordinary business was reported from neighborhood houses.

The outstanding feature of the week in Troy was Clara Bow, a red hot favorite in the Collar City in "Get Your Man." In Troy the week starts on Saturday, and by Saturday night Clara was drawing them in by the hundreds, while Sunday was a topnotcher.

In Schenectady, "Sorrell and Son," which played to tremendous business two weeks ago at the Mark Strand in Albany, proved little more than a fair drawing card at the State theatre. In both Troy and Schenectady, the neighborhood houses have been heard of late to complain about business.

Baltimore

DURING the week beginning Monday, January 9th, the high points for business in Baltimore were "The Jazz Singer," starring Al Jolson, presented with Vitaphone accompaniment and interspersed with songs by Jolson and Cantor Rosenblatt, as presented at Warners' Metropolitan, and "Get Your Man," starring Clara Bow, at the Rivoli with Harriett and Marie McConnell, songsters, on the same bill. Patronage at the Metropolitan was so strong that the picture was continued for another week, and Clara Bow, always a strong drawing card in Baltimore, proved a strong woman getter as well as a man getter at the Rivoli.

Milton Sills, another Baltimore favorite, in "The Valley of the Giants," and a revue All Around the Town with a large cast, proved a very good patron puller there. "Sorrell and Son," at Loew's Valencia, starring H. B. Warner, kept all seats comfortably filled and built up toward the end of the week with the Warwick Deeping story. "On Your Toes," with Reginald Denny, and eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville proved a very good puller at the New Garden. And at Keith's Hippodrome, where five acts of Keith-Albee family time vaudeville is shown, that house had "The Tigress," with Jack Holt and Dorothy Revier. That was another high point in business for the week, the show playing to excellent houses each day.

At the Little Theatre, "Crainquebille," a French production from the Anatole France story, and "Grass," showing the migration of a tribe of Asiatics, did good business with an old Harold Lloyd comedy an added small feature. "On to Reno," starring Marie Prevost, proved only a fair drawing card at the New Theatre with the Four Chileanos on the same bill, but the matinee business was better than the nights'. "Becky," with Sally O'Neill and Owen Moore in the leading parts, and Sammy Kahn from Chicago acting as master of ceremonies for the stage presentations, proved a fairly good patron puller at Loew's Century. Sammy was handicapped, however, by having to make up his band from the theatre.

Harrisburg, Pa.

BUSINESS of the Harrisburg theatres continued above the average notwithstanding there is much unemployment in the big industrial establishments there. For the third successive week, or ever since Christmas, the picture shows drew crowds larger, in most cases, than even the most optimistic managers had hoped for. At the Colonial the feature attraction was John Barrymore and Dolores Costello in "When a Man Loves," and receipts all week were far above normal. At Loew's Regent, where the program was featured by William Haines in "West Point," similar gratifying box office conditions prevailed.

In the last half of the week, at the State, Virginia Valli appeared on the screen in "Ladies Must Dress," from which big audiences got a big kick. At the Victoria the box office returns were only fairly satisfactory. The feature film was Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton in "Wife Savers," which, some patrons thought, did not quite measure up to the standard of some of the previous pictures in which these two funny men have appeared. The comment was heard in some quarters that perhaps the producers have been attempting to turn out Beery-Hatton productions in too rapid succession, to the detriment of the quality of the plays.

"Drums of the Desert" drew big crowds to the New Rialto in its second week under the new control of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Krupa, former Lancaster theatre owners, and the National, which also has just come into the hands of the Krupas, had a quite successful week with "Open Range" as the chief drawing card.

"Sorrell and Son" did well at the Russell theatre, while the Grand offered "Three Hours," starring Corinne Griffith, with much financial succss.

Seattle

THIS city had more than its share of big pictures this week, and business as a result was exceptionally strong. Four houses, in particular, piled up extra large box office grosses, and the remainder kept well up in the running.

At the Fifth Avenue theatre, a remarkably entertaining and well-rounded program came close to reaching the house record, grossing close to $20,000 for the week. "Her Wild Oat" was the screen attraction that seemed to please everyone, and Fanchon-Marco's "Oil Idea" on the stage had unusual merit. Hermie King and His Orchestra, with incidental features, was an attraction in itself.

Second in the running as far as gross is concerned, but probably first if capacity is considered, came John Hamrick's Blue Mouse theatre with "The Jazz Singer" and a program of Vitaphone and Movietone shorts. The feature is taking Seattle by storm, and long waiting lines for every performance, matinee and night, indicate a possible new house and city record for this picture. Admission is 50c. at any time, and six shows are given each day. Absolute capacity the first week.

"Sorrell and Son" played its second week at the United Artists theatre, and despite the strong competition of other first week films managed to keep up a very strong box office record. The picture was highly praised in all quarters, and the total fourteen-day run brought in a highly satisfactory box office gross.

The fourth of the big films was "Seventh Heaven," playing at regular admission prices at the Pantages Theatre, in conjunction with a fairly strong vaudeville bill. The picture piled up the best gross that this house had had since "What Price Glory," and goes into a second week with indications that the strong business will continue. Total gross very well above average.

At the Columbia Theatre, "A Hero for a Night," made a very satisfactory showing, despite the strong competition on all sides. The picture was well liked, and a decided feature of the program was Manager Bender's annual 1927 Song Revue as presented by the Columbia All-Artists Orchestra. This revue arranged by Director Francesco Longo, and featuring Pinkerton Day, local tenor, made a decided hit with all audiences. The week's gross was slightly above average.

"In Old Kentucky" was the attraction at the Liberty theatre, and it played to fairly good houses for the week. This was a film with a good title and cast, and business was slightly better than during previous weeks.

At the Orpheum theatre, "The Main Event" and vaudeville, headlined by Theodore Roberts, combined to establish a better than average gross, but business was not as strong as it should have been during this time of year. Roberts' appearance in the same sketch he used last year was decided detrimental.

"The Isle of Forgotten Women" at the Embassy theatre, in conjunction with a big girl revue and special soloists, played to very pleasing business. "South Sea Love" at the Winter Garden was a fairly good attraction, and "Pretty Clothes" at the Palace Hip was nothing to shout about as far as gross is concerned.

Cleveland

BUSINESS picked up locally last week. All along the line, theatres report that the post-Christmas slump lifted slightly last week, and business is rapidly nearing normalcy again.

The Stillman reached a new house record last Sunday with the opening of "The Student Prince," a magnificent picture, told simply and backed by gorgeous settings. The former record was made the preceding week with "Love." Keith's Palace also reported excellent business with "The Spotlight," average movie material, which gains interest through careful handling and good staging. Waring's Pennsylvanians, held over a second week, helped to boost business. "The Gay Defender," historical romance of the early west, coupled with excellent presentation acts, did average business at the Allen. The State did just fairly well with "The Lovelorn" as the featured screen attraction, a light trite tale, especially in style and story, but with an appeal to a class of patrons who dote on the Beatrice Fairfax brand of literature. Keith's Hippodrome had very big matinees, but rather meagre evening attendance for "Clancy's Kosher Wedding," just another Irish-Jewish farce. Keith's East 105th St. had a good week with "Nevada," good popular western, giving Gary Cooper a fine opportunity for fast action and restrained love making. The Park had a very good total for the week with a first-run neighborhood engagement of "Sorrell and Son," listed by the "Plain Dealer" among the season's best pictures.

Neighborhood houses reported that business last week showed a slight increase over previous weeks, although far below last year at this time.

Legitimate theatre competition was keen.

Salt Lake City

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS," with Alec B. Francis and Molly O'Day, filled the house to overflowing at the Capitol. The stage attraction billed as Fanchon and Marco's "Idea," Moonlit Waters, featuring The Foursome and Mme. Iki, and also Alberti and his band were also big drawing cards here, the stage presentation having been exceptionally high class and artistic.

Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle in "Tea for Three" did exceptionally well at the Pantages Theatre, it is announced. "Les Miserables" was the classic offered at the American and very good attendance was the rule throughout the week. "Sorrell and Son," with H. B. Warner, Alice Joyce, Carmel Myers, Nils Asher, Anna Q. Nilsson and Mickey McBan, went over unusually big at the Paramount Empress Theatre. A splendid business was enjoyed at the Gem Theatre during the run of "On to Reno," with Marie Prevost and Cullen Landis. The Victor Theatre had its share of the crowds this past week, the feature picture having been Dolores Del Rio in "The Gateway of the Moon." They also ran a series of "The Collegians."

The second rate theatres also did well, with the Rialto perhaps in the lead during the presentation of "Beau Geste."

Desperate Courage

Average Entertainment

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

JUST about average is the appeal of Wally Wales' newest western vehicle, certainly not up to par with some of his others. The story is the weak spot. It employs so much of the old, old stuff that has been seen in westerns time and time again. It tells the story of wicked ranchers who desired the grazing grounds of a fellow herdsman, but who were foiled in their foul attempts to rob the land through the heroism of a young puncher. Wales is called upon to play not an inconspicuous role in the task of repulsing the villains and reducing them to a submissive state. As a general thing, western heroes in the films are asked to carry on like veritable supermen and to display daredevilness and effrontery in the face of danger. Young Wales is no exception. You have more than enough of the customary heroics.

. All kinds of attempts are made by the enemy ranchers to obtain the land. They fake a land grant and bring the case to court where they would have reaped a victory if it had not been for a cigarette butt which ignited the building and burned it to the ground. After that fiasco they decide to lay siege to the ranch and drive its occupants out by force.

Wales breaks through their lines when they have captured his girl and goes to the stockade where she is being kept a prisoner. Menaced by the unscrupulous gang, the girl is saved in the nick of time by Wales and the villains are dazed and helpless when the sheriff arrives.

Drawing Power: Fair. For the neighborhood trade. Exploitation Angles: Exploit the action.

THEME: Western drama of villainous ranchers who attempt to steal the land of another rancher. They are defeated through the efforts of a young cow hand, who is in love with the daughter of the rancher defending his land.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Distributed by Pathe. Released, January 15, 1928. Length, 4398 feet. The Cast: Wally Wales, Olive Hasbrouck, Tom Bay, Lafe McKee, Fanchon Frankel, Bill Dyer, Chas. Whitaker, Al Taylor and S. S. Simon. Story by Grant Taylor. Director, Richard Thorpe.

The Fortune Hunter

Dull and Uninteresting

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

SYD CHAPLIN has come to be regarded as quite a genius as a character comedian. He was accepted at his true value in such pictures as "The Better 'Ole" and "Charley's Aunt" and he would do well to stick by such types as those rather than the portrayal of such a role as he has in "The Fortune Hunter."

The Warner version of this one differs materially from a previous screen presentation, as it does from the original stage farce. They eliminated much of the farcical angle and injected instead more straight drama interspersed here and there with a bit of comedy.

Chaplin has a sort of he-flapper role, in which he is decidedly miscast. It is only when he steps into the comedy sequences that he seems to be at all himself. Otherwise he is just silly when he attempts to sheik the fair damsels of the small town he invades in search of a rich wife.

The picture seems both poorly adapted and poorly directed. Little of the farce is retained and some of the sequences are so prolonged as to become boresome. That is particularly so of the supposed fire and also where the star makes love to the dummy.

Helene Costello is beautiful and charming as usual, though in a role that does not fit her as well as some that have gone before. As a matter of fact she has little opportunity to display other than her beauty and charm.

Drawing Power: The popularity of Chaplin, Miss Costello and the story as a stage play may make it a fair draw, but it cannot have much success on the real merits of the picture. Exploitation Angles: There is little to be exploited outside of the leading players and the original success as a stage play.

THEME: Comedy drama in which former convict and cafe bouncer is advised by a fellow ex-convict to adjourn to a small town, put on airs and marry a girl with money. He follows instructions, is sought by many of the town's wealthiest girls, but really falls in love with and marries the daughter of the drug store proprietor, whom he helps to make rich.

Distributed by Warner Bros. Released, November 7th, 1927. Length, 6,639 feet. The Cast: Syd Chaplin, Helene Costello, Clara Horton, Duke Martin, Thomas Jefferson, Erville Anderson, Paul Kruger, Nora Cecil, Louise Carver, Bob Perry, Babe London. Director, Charles F. Reisner; from story by Winchell Smith; scenario by Bryan Foy and Robert Dillon.

The Road to Romance

Production Falls Short

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

IN their attempts to translate Conrad into celluloid, movie producers have not succeeded very well in conveying the characterizations and the ingenious unravelment of plot that stamp the stories of the master spinner of yarns. It is a difficult task, of course, to attempt to capture the spirit of any work in an element foreign to that for which the work was intended. So you cannot very well be harsh in criticising attempts to accomplish what seems to be an impossible task. For if in anything, Conrad lives in the beauty of his prose and his keen insight into psychology.

From our point of view this production fails where the other Conrad movies ("Lord Jim" and "Nostromo—The Silver Treasure") failed. The bare skeleton of a plot unaccompanied by Conrad's magic prose is not very convincing. It is the same as if you drained the life blood out of something and expected it to function as before. Then again, you can foretell what is coming when you see the screen work. That is something that does not happen when you read the story. To explain further: in a story by Conrad you are not told at once that such and such is a rogue. You learn of things as you go along. In the picture when Novarro gets into one tight situation after another you know very well that he will get out of them easily enough. When you first glimpse D'Arcy's sneering countenance you know immediately that he is an arch villain.

There is romance in the picture—romance pictured against a background of swashbuckling pirates and villainy that one associates with the Spanish Main. They have handsomely mounted the piece and given it technical finish. But there is one thing sadly lacking and that is soul, or fire or movement or whatever you may choose to call it.

Drawing Power: In neighborhoods where Novarro is liked it may bring results. However, it is a doubtful proposition. Exploitation Angles: Play up the star and leading lady. Tell 'em it's about pirates bold and swashbuckling romance. Book store tie-ups. Author's fame.

THEME: Romantic drama of the days of the Spanish Main. Young Spaniard saves girl from cruel governor of colony and bests him in a duel.

Produced and distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Released, September, 1927. Length, 6544 feet. The Cast: Ramon Novarro, Marceline Day, Roy D'Arcy, Marc McDermott, Cesare Gravina, Otto Matieson and Jules Cowles. Director, John S. Robertson.

Isle of Forgotten Women

A Story of the Tropics

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

COLUMBIA PICTURES has produced an entertaining story of the tropical isles in "The Isle of Forgotten Women," one which does not make any pretensions other than to be a nice little picture. It may not boast much action and it may drag at times but when all is said and done it is a good little tid bit. The fans ought to find it pleasing, although it can not be said to be ripe for the applause of those who want the shoot-em-up action films.

Conway Tearle, with his serious mien, is seen as the man who fled civilization to go to the South Seas. Having been accused of embezzlement, Tearle hopes to find happiness in a pretty little island with its palms and inviting shores. Holding himself aloof from a gang of degenerate men, he almost succumbs to the lure of a native girl, competently played by Dorothy Sebastian. She had been the property of Gibson Gowland, a brutal white man, but Tearle had won her when he defended her from the other's cruelty.

It is the fate of the native girl to love in vain, for the white man will have nothing to do with her. When he is sick and near to death (as the result of the battle with Gowland) she nurses him and when Gowland, in a drunken rage, tries to jab him with a poisoned spear, intervenes, willingly taking the death thrust herself to protect the man she loves.

It's a tragedy, you see. But the movie audiences have become educated so that at the present time they can even take in pictures with a tragic note. George B. Seitz has directed smoothly and effectively. Gibson Gowland takes off his drunken role well. Alice Calhoun has the part of the girl from civilization, but very little is seen of her during the film's unwinding.

Drawing Power: About good. Names in cast are known to movie fans. Exploitation Angles: Create atmosphere of the South Seas, Hawaiian ukuleles, leis, palms, etc.

THEME: Drama of love in a South Sea isle. Native girl, protected by white man from a brutal master, gives her life to save her benefactor. He never knows her sacrifice and returns to civilization.

Produced and distributed by Columbia Pictures. Released, September, 1927. Length, 5645 feet. The Cast: Conway Tearle, Dorothy Sebastian, Gibson Gowland, Alice Calhoun, Harry Semele, William Welch and Eddie Harris. Scenarist, Norman Springer. Director, George B. Seitz.

Dare Devil's Reward

A Typical Mix Vehicle

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

TOM MIX has had a lot better stories than this one, but stories mean little to a Mix picture. If there are enough thrills that seems to be what his fans want, and there are surely enough in this one. They are literally hurled in here and there, and in his customary fashion the hero makes his exploits most realistic. Mix is nothing if not sincere in his work and that, undoubtedly, is why he has such a tremendous following.

It would be difficult to conceive more illogical incidents in a story than are found in this one. When a ranger starts for his man or his men it seems that any sort of hokum is legitimate to the prolongation of the story to feature length. But barring the hokum there is everything that a Mix tale requires Three or four real thrilling episodes bring it up to all the requirements.

As a matter of fact the essentials of this one are the same as scores of others that have served the Western heroes before. There is the desperate band of highwaymen headed by the uncle of the girl the hero eventually falls in love with; there is the abduction of the girl by the remaining bandits when their leader falls shot, and there is the thrilling rescue as the uncontrollable automobile dashes down the mountainside when it is overtaken by Tom and his faithful Tony.

There are other incidents too, of the more or less thrilling variety. The hero effects a marvelous rescue of the girl in a runaway stage coach when he crawls beneath the vehicle and grasps the dangling reins. Comedy relief is injected here and there in the picture, but the least said of that the better. Natalie Joyce is the Mix leading lady and she submits in the true style of a heroine to the numerous hair raising rescues.

Drawing Power: There is no reason why this one should not draw as well as the usual run of Mix pictures. Exploitation Angles: The star and the many thrilling incidents lend themselves to the usual line of exploitation.

THEME: Western in which the Texas Ranger rounds up a band of desperate highwaymen, headed by the uncle of the girl with whom he eventually falls in love. She is abducted by the bandits after her uncle is shot and is rescued by the hero in a mad plunge down the mountainside in an uncontrollable automobile.

Distributed by Fox. Released January 15th, 1928. Length, 4,987 feet. The Cast: Tom Mix, Natalie Joyce, Lawford Davidson, Billy Bletcher, Harry Cording, William Welch. Director, Gene Forde. Story and scenario by John Stone.

Peaks of Destiny

A Weak Story Against a Powerful Setting

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

IT is not often that one sees such gorgeous views of mountains in their fierce beauty, their stern ruggedness and their awful grandeur as are to be found in this production from Ufa. Bunched together in the film are long stretches dealing with the snow covered peaks, the cloud dusted sky and the various winter sports that have made famous such places as St. Moritz and similar towns in mountain fastnesses.

What a background these jagged rocks are for this somewhat weak story! The natural grandeur of the scenes dwarf the characters and make their little misunderstandings seem trivial. It is that idea precisely that the producers had in mind—to show how everlasting, how impervious to time and storm are the mountains in comparison with weak humans.

A rugged son of nature finds that a woman has shifted her favor to his dearest friend. Feeling himself disregarded he dares his friend to scale with him a dangerous stretch of rock. On a fearful night, when the weather makes such an undertaking suicidal, they venture forth into the cold and treacherous snow. They achieve the peak and the one who took the dare is shoved over an ice ledge by his friend. Luckily the two were connected with the mountaineer's rope, so that the unfortunate one does not drop immediately but is held suspended. The other holds onto the rope all through the night until a rescue party has reached them.

In the meantime the girl has gone through mental agony. Feeling that she is responsible for sending the two into the mountains on such a night she climbs through the snow drifts until she has reached the cabin of a group of skiers, who effect the rescue. The turmoil soothes down after this. The man loses the hatred in his heart, the friend effaces himself, and the girl, too, is purged of flirty inclinations.

The scenes of the rescue and the plight of the two men atop the icy ledge are wonderfully and realistically done. Leni Riefenstahl, as the fickle girl, gives a good performance, although she overacts in the emotional scenes. Ernst Peterson as the stalwart mountaineer is as stern and masculine as his role demands.

The camera work is first class.

Drawing Power: It is poor because of the fact there are no names that exhibitors can advertise. Exploitation Angles: The picture was made in the Swiss Alps. It was produced by the makers of "Variety" and "Metropolis."

THEME: Drama of the mountains and the people who live on their slopes. Believing his friend has alienated the affections of his girl, man is about to kill him but regains his mental balance and saves the friend from destruction. He wins back the girl.

Produced by Ufa. Distributed by Paramount. Released, January, 1928. Length, 6940 feet. The Cast: Leni Riefenstahl, Louis Trenker, Ernst Peterson, Frida Richard, Friedrich, Hannes Schneider, Edmund Niesel. Director, Dr. Arnold Fanck.

"Mistakes Will Happen"

(Universal—One Reel)

THIS is one of the so-called Snappy Comedy series with Bennie Hall and Lydia Yeamans Titus featured. It is better than usual.

Lacking news, Harold, star reporter of the Sap Center Clarion, draws upon his imagination for a sensational story, which conceives an escaped desperate character in the vicinity. Annie, the office janitress, discovers the story on Harold's desk before it is printed, and spreads the news. All of which results in the capture of a real desperate character.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes

Entertaining Enough But Lacks Color

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IT'S reached the screen at last, this sketch of a gold digger and her disarming attitudes toward collecting from her gentlemen friends. It shapes up well enough in situations and characters, but for the life of it the sparkle of the book and the play was unable to be captured. The wise-cracks are there, the story is adapted faithfully enough, but somewhere something is lacking. Perhaps the fault is due to so many sophisticated comedies racing across the screen. This one has wide publicity to build upon and probably it appears too familiar.

It is good entertainment and stirs up some good humor. Besides, Ruth Taylor fits the famous blonde gold-digger as if Anita Loos had her in mind when she sketched the figure. Others acquit themselves well, namely Alice White as the hard boiled Dorothy Ford Sterling, Mack Swain and Chester Conklin. The love interest is most negligent and the piece lacks spontaneity. But Mal St. Clair has done a good rough job.

If there is any weakness it can be placed against the idea of adapting an episodic story in the first place and giving life to a single-track characterization.

It should make money. There's its popularity to begin with and the title and Miss Taylor's personality. But between the introduction and the finish it lacks the necessary screen color to project it apart from the mass of celluloid documents.

Drawing Power: Title and vast publicity of book and play will attract them. O. K. for any house. Exploitation Angles: Use teaser campaign with title. Exploit author, star and title. Treat in comedy manner.

THEME: Romantic comedy of gold-digger who gets her man among men.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. Cast: Ruth Lee Taylor, Alice White, Margaret Seddon, Holmes Herbert. Director, Mal St. Clair.

The Divine Woman

Effective Drama with Garbo at Her Best

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE languorous Swede, Greta Garbo, demonstrates that she doesn't need John Gilbert to attract them. At New York's Capitol she has been playing to standing room. That shows Greta's hold on the hearts of her public. Supported by a cast that is well-balanced she makes this orthodox story of a warped romance that comes out of the clouds into the strong sunlight of happiness, a work of real consequence.

The idea isn't so new. It depicts a girl in search of the comforts, luxuries and fame—and who doesn't care how she gets them even though it wrecks a couple of hearts. For a counterplot a youth is revealed as a poor, but honest soldier. He gives her his love and then misunderstanding comes to him when he places a wrong conclusion on her affaire d'amour. In an effort to show his affections he resorts to theft. And then his eyes are opened to the real state of things.

Though the woman climbs to the heights she realizes eventually that love has escaped her. Which is time to trot out the happy ending—an ending necessary in a picture which moved truthfully and dramatically up to its conclusion. But it is good entertainment, finely acted by the star, Lars Hanson (who is always real and sincere), Dorothy Cummings and Lowell Sherman. The picture should do some business. Garbo is surely over.

Drawing Power: The star's popularity and the cast. Suitable for any type of theatre. Exploitation Angles: Feature star and Hanson. Bill as dramatic story of real heart-beats, etc.

THEME: Romantic drama of misguided girl who after worshiping at shrine of wealth and fame realizes that love can only be won through trust and honesty.

Produced and distributed by Metro Goldwyn. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: Greta Garbo, Lars Hanson, Dorothy Cummings, Lowell Sherman, Polly Moran, Johnny Mack Brown, Cesare Gravina. Director, Victor Seastrom.

Wife Savers

Slapstick and Some Laughs

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

NO time is being wasted in giving Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton plenty of opportunity to function as slapstick comedians. Having demonstrated themselves as perfect foils (one to the other) their sponsors are seeing to it that Wally and Ray are not vacationing 'tween pictures.

Like a previous opus, "Behind the Front," the comedians are thrust into action pertaining to warfare. The current film was adapted from "Louis the Fourteenth," and places the comics as a lieutenant and private who, when the war is over, remain behind in the Alps to carry on their high jinks. There isn't much semblance of continuity—it being a hit-or-miss affair—but Beery and Hatton know their comedy too well to have it miss fire. Wally turns into an Alpine guide and Ray is his foil. And the object of both is to win the pretty girl.

The piece, naturally, being "alpy," calls for unadulterated gags and wise-cracks. And no opportunity is missed in putting it over. George Marion's captions are pithy and pointed, the scenery is appropriate—and taken altogether, it succeeds in clicking very well.

Drawing Power: Stars are popular. Should draw in any house not too high-brow in its clientele. For average houses. Exploitation Angles: Play up title by teasing it. Exploit the Alps through teaser campaign. Ballyhoo the story.

THEME: Farce-comedy of soldiers who became involved with romance in the Alps.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: Wallace Beery, Raymond Hatton, ZaSu Pitts, Sally Blane, Tom Kennedy, Ford Sterling, George Harvey. Director, Ralph Cedar.

"Jungles of the Amazon"

(Fox—1,063 Feet)

IN this Fox Variety, which is a second part of an expedition to the headwaters of the Amazon, many of the hardships encountered by the explorers are revealed, as well as some beautiful shots of this little known country and the animal life abounding therein.

The camera has caught a reel of beauty, swift movement and natural life in this remote corner of the earth. It should prove particularly interesting because of the slight knowledge civilization has of the region.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Love At First Flight"

(Sennett-Pathe—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS latest Mack Sennett effort is a conglomeration of air stuff, water stuff, bathing girls and comedians. The latter, headed by Daphne Pollard and Lige Conley, strive hard to be funny with little in the way of successful results. If the bathing girls are an attraction the picture can be recommended on that score only. They are particularly beautiful in the color sequences, but they are far from lacking in appeal with or without color.

Joe Young and Lige Conley are a pair of aviators who drop in parachutes to rescue the fair maidens when their pleasure boat is wrecked. They effect the rescue and are lionized by the girls, who are the pupils of Daphne Pollard's dancing class. The girls are put through their paces and Miss Pollard does a somewhat humorous eccentric dance with the assistance of Lige Conley, whose main comedy contribution is to be continuously knocked into a pool of water.

The picture is credited to the direction of Eddie Cline, under the supervision of John A. Waldron. It is unfortunate that a little more thought was not put into the comedy sequences. With some real humor injected here and there it would have been quite passable.

"The Cloud Buster"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THE usual lot of ridiculous fun is on display in this Gump comedy, with Joe Murphy in the role of Andy Gump. There is nothing to it but a lot of nonsense of the slapstick variety, but the antics of Andy are really mirth-provoking.

Andy returns to his home town, Surburba, and is met with the Ford by Min and little Chester. They give the local banker a lift and start for home, but Andy loses control of the car and the banker lands in his library instead of at the front door. All of which is entirely disjointed from what follows.

Arrived at home, Andy decides upon a nap, and immediately his bed is transposed into an airplane, which soars through the window and eventually lands in Hawaii among the Hula dancers, whom Andy thoroughly enjoys. The hero is feted and awarded the $25,000 prize for the trans-Pacifis flight. All of which is fine until Andy is awakened by Min and Chester.

While, of course, it is all very silly, Murphy puts a lot of fun into the thing, and it is well above the average of the series of stories that have gone before.

"The Prince and the Papa"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is some real good material in this comedy, in which Charles Puffy and Gloria Gray are featured. Puffy is burdened with most of the comedy and to his credit it must be said that he shows to better advantage than usual. There is all sorts of hokum injected, and a great abundance of slapstick. In fact the comedy is a trifle overdone in an effort to make it too continuous.

Puffy's girl takes him to a polo match, and on the way their sympathy is aroused by a poor woman who is being beaten by a ruffian. They pick her up and take her to the game, and then to Puffy's home. The rotund comedian decided to take up polo and installs an electric horse, which develops much of the comedy. The rescued woman is of the meddlesome type, and eventually endeavors to control the house. She makes trouble between Puffy and the girl, and the former is haled into court and sentenced to care for the woman indefinitely. Here and there, as the story progresses, there is a real laugh, and it may be that the comedy lovers will like it all.

Regional News from Correspondents

New York & New Jersey

KEITH'S Chester theatre, a fine house of the de luxe neighborhood type, located on West Farms road, upper section of New York City, is under the management of H. J. Federman. From all reports this theatre has gotten away to a whirlwind business which, if continued, will prove a serious handicap to some of the older theatres in that section.

All of which bears out our contention in last week's NEWS that a certain type of theatre will soon pass on. We refer to the middle-sized and somewhat antiquated.

One New York exhibitor-manager made a remark this week that the "shooting gallery" would probably survive all theatres—and there may be a great deal of truth in his statement. Certainly, the small, unpretentious movie with the inevitable big, lurid sheets pasted over the front of the lobby, and a small admission, still manages to get along and catch the family trade of those in more adverse circumstances and make a pretty fair living for the owner.

Harry Blinders will soon open a new 1.800 seat theatre up around Moshula Parkway, New York City. Mr. Blinders also operates the Canarsie theatre, Canarsie.

Tony Costa has resigned his position as manager of the Endicott theatre, Brooklyn, and is now connected with Henry Grossman's New United. Auster Scully is in charge of the Endicott.

"Billy" Mauro, owner of the Plaza theatre, High street, Brooklyn, is still confined to his home with a severe attack of the grippe.

Louis Barbash is the new manager of the Tiffany theatre, Chester street, Brooklyn.

The Amphion theatre, lower Bedford avenue, Brooklyn, is again open with a program of Sunday pictures and weekly shows. The old policy, according to report, was a show for a week's stand and Sunday concerts.

Manager Myerson, formerly with Loew's 86th street theatre, is in charge of the Amphion.

Charles Fischer and associates, present lessees of the Fulton theatre, Fulton street and Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn, have added the De Kalb theatre to their holdings. Stock shows will be presented at both houses.

Seymour Schussel, manager of the Commonwealth exchange, New York, left this week for a vacation in the mountains.

Loew's new theatre at Yonkers will open the early part of February with a program of pictures and vaudeville.

Schwartz' new Queens theatre, recently opened, makes the twenty-third link in the A. H. Schwartz circuit. Henry Clay Miner has been elected president of the board of directors of this theatre chain.

The Lyric theatre of Asbury Park has closed for the winter months.

Manager Smith of the Mount Morris theatre is recuperating from a recent automobile accident.

George Ellis, formerly with the Orpheum theatre, is now with Loew's Park Lane theatre, and Geo. Latimer has left the Tilyou to become connected with the Orpheum. The Tilyou will be in charge of Sam Kaplan.

The Colonial theatre, Haddonfield, N. J., is reported as temporaily closed.

Anthony Williams, associated with the Pastime theatre, Union City, N. J., for 15 years almost without interruption, was appointed manager of the theatre last week by C. W. Jones, the owner. Back in 1914, Williams left the Pastime a few months to go on the road with "The Birth of a Nation." With that brief exception, he has been with the theatre constantly since the time he started carrying film until his present appointment as manager. At the time he began, the Pastime, the only theatre in Union City, was one of First National's original franchise holders and the Fabians were closely associated with it. Today it caters to a drawing territory of more than 60,000 with the keenest competition from theatres that have sprung up around it. Williams is 31 years old, unmarried and lives in Union City with his mother and sister.

When Fox Films defeated Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer 37 to 26 and Paramount won from Pathe 34 to 31 in the Movie League basketball contests Thursday night at Savage gym, an already close race was made even more thrilling, as a margin of only one game separates the first four teams.

"Lou" Diamond, an executive of Paramount, tossed out the first ball of the Pathe-Paramount game in which Keenan, Shultz and Helt starred for Paramount, while Snyder, Bushell and Katzoff did fine work for the Roosters. In the Metro-Fox contest, Weiner, Star, Theaman and Press were the outstanding players of the Fox blue and gold team, with Van Dohlen and Shreiber of Metro starring for their side. Dance music was provided by the Paramount orchestra.

Fox will play Consolidated and Metro will tackle Paramount in the next basketball games scheduled for Thursday, January 19, at the Savage gymnasium. The club's standing for January 14th follows:

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Pathe	3	1	.750
Fox	2	2	.500
Paramount ...	2	2	.500
Consolidated ..	2	2	.500
Metro	1	3	.250

Cleveland

THE Monarch theatre, Euclid avenue and East 105th street, is closed to make way for a Five-and-Ten Cent store. B. C. Steele, E. C. Flanigan and S. Rosenthal, head of a company which controls a circuit of theatres in which the Monarch was included, have leased a piece of property east of 105th street, on Euclid avenue, next to Keith, East 105th street, for a new theatre, which will be built right away. The Monarch was one of the first picture houses in the East 105th street locality. It has always confined its policy to pictures unalloyed. Some of the time it played first-run releases. Most often it played subsequent engagements.

The Moreland theatre, Buckeye Road and East 119th street, opened last Thursday, increasing the city's seating capacity by 1,600 seats. The house belongs to the Universal-Variety circuit, which now controls twenty houses in Cleveland and throughout Ohio. In addition to the theatres in operation at the present time, the company will open the new Ohio theatre, Mansfield, on January 19th; the Palace, Lorain, on March 1st, and the Uptown, St. Clair avenue and East 105th street, on June 1st. Negotiations are under way for building and acquiring other houses in Cleveland and in the state. Officers of the Universal-Variety circuit are: President, J. Silverman; vice-president, Meyer Fine; secretary-treasurer, A. Kramer. The Moreland is one of the city's most beautiful neighborhood houses. All seats are on one floor. The great width of the houses is one of its important features as it allows almost perfect vision from every seat. It is ornate in style and decoration, but does not follow the atmospheric type of architecture. William Michaelson, formerly of Chicago, is manager of the house.

Dwight Smith has been appointed representative of the Universal interests of the Universal-Variety theatres. His headquarters are in the office of the Universal-Variety circuit, Union building, Cleveland.

Martin G. Smith of Toledo was in town last week conferring with the powers-that-be of the National Theatre Supply Co. concerning equipment for the new Westwood theatre which Smith and Beidler are building in Toledo. The new house will be completed by February 1st, according to Smith.

Mrs. Bertha Fish last week bought the Alhambra theatre, Akron, at a receiver's sale.

Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., held its annual employees' ball in the State theatre lobby Thursday, January 12th. More than 1,200 people, associates of the theatres and their friends, attended. Prizes were awarded for competitive dancing bouts. Joseph Laronge, vice-president of Loew's State theatres, was host. The guests were theatre managers, stage employees, musicians, ushers, etc., of the Stillman, State, Cameo, Park, Allen, Liberty, Dean, Mall, Circle and Granada theatres.

Paul Gusdanovic's new theatre at East 185th street, near Lake Shore boulevard, which will open about March 1st, has been named LaSalle. It will have 1,600 seats. Gusdanovic also has the Orpheum, Regent, Corlett and Norwood.

Frank Greenwald, who used to operate an independent exchange, is now managing the Orpheum theatre, East Ninth street, which belongs to Paul Gusdanovic. Jack Sliney is now concentrating on the Regent instead of managing both Regent and Orpheum theatres.

The Cincinnati office of Security Pictures has moved into the Film building in the space formerly occupied by the Lande Film Company. Victor Schram is manager.

The Cincinnati office of the Standard Film Company won first prize in the Bookers' Contest, which extended from November 6 to December 31. Leslie P. Hudson is booker of the Cincinnati exchange and gets the cash prize offered the winner by Harry Charnas, president of the company. Cleveland, under the bookership of Howard Roth, finished in second place.

The Allen theatre is now starting its week on Saturday, instead of Sunday. Complete changes of program will henceforth be offered on Saturday.

New England

THE New England Community Theatres, Inc., has purchased the Maverick Square Hotel in East Boston. The structure will be almost entirely rebuilt, only the present front of the building retained. In the rear a motion picture theatre will be erected, while a hotel will occupy the front, with theatre lobby balancing the hotel lobby in the architectural scheme. The theatre will be known as the Maverick Square theatre. Plans are being prepared by William J. Freethy and President James E. Rich will have general charge.

Joseph McKenney, formerly assistant shipper at Paramount exchange, who resigned to become assistant coach at Boston College, has been advanced to head coach for the college athletics.

Miss Florence Sullivan, secretary to Branch Manager W. C. Erb of Famous Players, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

Sunshine, Inc., for the manufacture of theatre illuminating devices, has been organized with $50,000 capital at Lynn, Mass. Incorporators are Everett L. Finkelstein of Roxbury, Elizabeth M. Carlton and Owen Jones, both of Lynn.

Plans are being drawn for a new theatre in Leominster for Arthur McEvoy by Architect John Edmund Kelly. Contracts will be let this month.

The Metropolitan theatre, Boston, has decided to continue on the air throughout the winter, througn Station WBZ, Springfield, Mass.

There was a small fire in the Day Square theatre, East Boston, during the week when water leaked into the boiler pit until the flame of the oil burner ignited the floating oil. The boiler room is separated from the rest of the building by fireproof walls so that all damage was confined to the boiler room and there was no interference with the program.

The Conecticut Operating Co. has been organized with $15,000 capital tc oarry on theatrical enterprises. J. H. Boylston, [illegible] Park Place, Brooklyn, heads the company.

H. F. Dunn Motion Picture Co., Hartford, Conn., was incorporated with $10,000 capital. H. F. Dunn heads the company.

Jeremiah Campopiano, 8 Jackson street, Lawrence, Mass., is to erect a motion picture theatre at 139 Common street from plans by A. E. Steinert, Inc.

Bristol Theatre Operating Company, Cameo Theatre of Bristol, Inc., and Colonial Theatre Realty Company, all of Bristol, Conn., have been incorporated with D. A. Peters, 102 South street, Bristol, as head of the three companies.

Canton Theatre Co., Boston, has incorporated with capital of $5,000. Morris Pouzzner is president and treasurer.

E. F. Albee, head of the Keith-Albee interests, was the speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Boston Chamber of Commerce last week, telling of the growth of those enterprises and the development of the business in general.

Minneapolis

LAST week in the Gold Room of the Radison Hotel the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade held its annual meeting and banquet of the salesmen. The managers of all the film companies' local branches were present, also the salesmen, bookers and a few guests. In the afternoon there were short addresses by Tom Burke, president of the Film Board of Trade; W. H. Workman, Walter Liebmann, Ben Friedman, Micky Coen and others. Each local manager made a short talk upon being introduced by Ben Friedman.

At 6:30 an informal banquet was served and professional entertainers added to the pleasure. Short addresses were given reviewing the work of the past year and outlining new plans.

M. P. Kelly, advertising manager at the Wisconsin theatre, Milwaukee, is to have as his new assistant Eddie Kueppers, who was for two years in charge of publicity for F & R in St. Paul. Kueppers will also be in charge of publicity at the Wisconsin theatre, which is now operated by Midwesco.

S. J. Ronning of Pelican Rapids is repairing and improving the Bijou theatre at Blackduck, Minn., which he recently purchased from Fred Sherberg. The theatre will be reopened immediately.

Joseph H. Brummond, an exhibitor of Thief River Falls, Minn., died a week ago.

Mike Mayen, manager of the Tower theatre, St. Paul, arranged a show for inmates of the Minnesota state prison at Stillwater recently. The show was one of the most pretentious ever given there, including a movie, an orchestra, and the Twin City Kiddie revue.

Fraternities and sororities at the University of Minnesota took over the State theatre, Minneapolis, Friday night, and made a gala evening of it. The pledges were the guests of honor, with the fraternities occupying the lower floor and the sororities the balcony. About 3,000 students saw the program, which was featured by Billie Dove in "The Love Mart." Thirty co-eds put on a style show of their own, and a number of university acts supplemented the usual State program. Eddie Dunstadter made a big hit at the organ by playing Minnesota numbers.

St. Louis

ST. LOUIS film stocks closed January 14 as follows: Skouras Bros. Enterprises A, $38 bid and $40 asked, a decline of ½ a point for the week. A year ago this stock was held at $46. St. Louis Amusement A closed at $36 bid compared to $45 on the same date in 1927.

Ben Reingold, formerly with Fox in Des Moines, Iowa, has been appointed manager of the St. Louis Fox office to succeed Claude W. McKean, who resigned several weeks ago. McKean is now vice-president of the Premier Pictures Corporation.

Jimmy Shea is the new manager of the St. Louis F. B. O. branch. He is very well known in the St. Louis territory, formerly working here as city salesman for Metro-Goldwyn and also Universal. He was with F. B. O. in Omaha prior to coming to St. Louis.

F. J. (Barney) Fegan, who several years ago operated an independent motion picture exchange in St. Louis and later acted as manager of local motion picture houses, has been appointed advertising manager for "Patent Might," a new weekly magazine launched in St. Louis. The publishers, the St. Louis Technical Publishing Company, International Life Building, St. Louis, plan to devote the paper largely to patent and trade mark news, including lists of patents granted and rulings by the Commissioner of Patents.

Nat Steinberg, president of Premier Pictures Corporation, spent several days in New York the past week in connection with some very important business matters. It is understood that Premier may have some very interesting news for the motion picture exhibitors of this territory in the very, very near future, but details are not yet available.

Wolfram Schaeffer, formerly of Stuttgart, Germany, has been installed as organist for the Grand Opera House, St. Louis. A new organ designed especially by the organ department of the Orpheum circuit has been put into the Grand Opera House.

Chicago

W. H. RUDOLPH has been named managing director for United Artists Theatre in Detroit and Chicago. Max Cooper, who has been in charge of United Artists Theatre in Chicago since its opening, has returned to New York, leaving Mr. Goldberg as resident manager.

Dick Beck, of the Castle, Rose, Pastime and Alcazar Theatres, has been confined to his home for several days with an attack of diphtheria. He is reported on the highway to recovery, but is still quarantined.

Al Short, popular musical director, returns to the Capitol Theatre this week, and will wield the baton over an augmented orchestra.

W. B. Irons, of the Haymarket Theatre, left for Detroit on Sunday night, and, on his arrival there, will take over the Palace. It is understood that Mr. Irons plans to put in burlesque and pictures and pursue a policy similar to that which has proved successful at the Star and Garter, including a midnight show.

Lee Marcus, sales manager for F B O, was in Chicago last week for a conference with Manager Washburn, and then left to visit other exchanges in the central West.

Eddie Grainger, of Fox Film Corporation's sales department, spent several days at the Chicago exchange, and then left for a visit to the Milwaukee and Minneapolis exchanges of this company. He expects to be back in Chicago for a few days next week.

It is rumored that Manager Ansell, of the Star and Garter Theatre, is negotiating for a north side house, which he will operate on a burlesque and picture policy. Mr. Ansell recently closed a lease for the Columbia Theatre in New York, which he will operate from midnight on Saturday to early Sunday morning, putting on a big burlesque show.

Joe Leo, well known New York theatre man, has been appointed manager for the receivers, the Chicago Title & Trust Company, of the Ascher Enterprises' theatres.

The new owners of the Village Theatre, Wilmette, have decided to close this house and remodel it for commercial purposes, the closing date being January 21st. Joe Koppel has been managing this house for some years. Its closing will leave the Teatro Del Lago as the only theatre in this immediate territory.

William Homann, well known artist, has been added to National Screen Service staff by Manager H. C. Young.

May McAvoy, the petite and beautiful Warner Brothers star, stopped off in Chicago recently for a personal appearance at the Garrick Theatre.

The sales staff of Universal's Chicago exchange is up on its toes in readiness for Carl Laemmle's 22nd Anniversary drive, and are so confident of winning out that they have posted a forfeit of five hundred dollars that they will beat the record made by the New York exchange in the forthcoming drive.

Joe Zanft, managing director of Fox theatres, is scheduled to arrive in Chicago the latter part of the week, and will be here for several days.

Al Lyons, who has been successful as a manager of theatres around Chicago for many years, is now in charge at the Terminal Theatre.

The Film Board of Trade on Thursday night held a testimonial dinner at the Congress Hotel in honor of Bill Brumberg and Jack Sampson, both of whom were active members for many years, but who recently resigned.

Paul Busch, one of the veterans of film row, is now connected with Universal's sales staff, and will cover country territory.

Col. Tim McCoy, popular star of outdoor pictures, stopped off for a visit at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Chicago headquarters, en route from New York to the Coast.

Bill Brumberg, whose resignation as country sales manager of Universal came as a surprise to film row, has taken a similar position with Columbia Pictures. Mr. Brumberg for many years has been regarded as an expert country sales manager, and has made a splendid record with both Universal and First National. Bob Funk has been appointed country sales manager at Universal to fill the vacancy made by Mr. Brumberg's resignation. His appointment comes as a merited promotion as he had been doing well as a salesman in the country territory during his long connection with this company.

Indianapolis

THE Palace theatre on N. Pennsylvania street will reopen in about six weeks with a band presentation policy similar to that now being used at the Capitol theatre, New York, according to Joseph R. Vogel, general represenative of Loew's, Inc.

Vogel arrived from New York recently with Anne Dornan, decorator for Thomas W. Lamb, architect; W. A. Finney, western division manager, and Leon Flashman, in charge of the changes and improvements to be made in the Palace property here.

Improvements estimated to total about $150,000 will be made at once so that the Palace may reopen under the new policy within the next six weeks.

With Loewe. Inc., getting complete control of the Palace, Vogel states that a band presentation policy with feature pictures will be the policy.

Tentative plans are being made for a $5,000,000 hotel and theatre on the English Opera House site, on Monument Circle. The old English location is one of the finest theatre sites in the city. The Circle Theatre Company, operators of the Circle Indiana, Ohio and Uptown, has negotiated with the estate of Senator William E. English.

It is probable the new theatre, which will probably not be built for several years, will be a light house.

Miss Patricia Lynch, of Seattle, Wash., in new manager of the Indianapolis Film Board of Trade. She succeeds Mis Marion McCullough, who became traveling representative for the New York board office.

Ace Berry, manager of the Indiana, new Publix house, has been named manager of all Circle Theatre Company interests in Indianapolis. He has been here five years. Berry was Circle manager before he took the Indiana post. He will continue to direct the Indiana picture house.

The Walker, one of the finest colored theatres in the country, was opened here December 26. The theatre is located on Indiana avenue in the heart of the Negro district. Capacity, 1,500.

C. B. Erwin, former Philadelphia house manager, will manage the Walker. R. L. Brokenburr is vice-president and Violet D. Reynolds, secretary-treasurer.

F. B. Ransom is president of the Walker Theatre Company, operators for the Mme. C. J. Walker Manufacturing Company, which occupies remainder of the four-story building. Vaudeville and pictures to be offered.

Tentative plans for the opening of a new theatre on Keystone avenue, Bloomington, Ind., are being made for February 1, according to M. D. Wells, superintendent of construction. Spanish architecture and decorations are used.

The Granada theatre at Bloomington has recently been remodeled by William Blanchard, manager. It formerly was Cook's Opera House. Spanish style architecture sets off the remodeled structure.

L. M. Prewitt is manager of the new Prewitt picture house, which opened at Plainfield, Ind., a few weeks ago.

Seattle

ACCORDING to information received in this city last week, H. Neal East, manager of the Paramount-Famous Lasky enterprizes in Portland, is slated for the general managership of a new concern being organized to take over the picture theatre in Salem, Oregon. Mr. East, according to reports, has tendered his resignation to Paramount, to take effect within a few weeks.

Herschel Stuart, general manager of West Coast Theatres in the Pacific Northwest territory, returned to his local headquarters last week after a trip to the Middle West to look over the Finkelstein & Rubin interests for his company, prior to the reported merger of these chains.

Two former film men who have entered a new venture in Seattle and are making it decidedly worthwhile are Jesse Beckman and Rex Thompson, operating under the head of the Maritime Film Service, at 2419½ Second avenue. Their business involves the serving of ocean liners with film programs.

Fred B. Rivers, father of the well known Eddie Rivers of Spokane, plans to dispose of his interests in the Strand theatre at Walla Walla, according to late reports, and assume the job of business manager of the Seattle baseball team for the 1928 season. Mr. Rivers, several years ago, held the same position with the ball club, and is again expected to handle the financial details under the management of Bill Kleiper, new owner.

Film men over the entire Northwest were shocked last week to learn of the sudden death of R. C. Clint "Monty" Montgomery, well known through his former connections with several local film exchanges and his activity in the theatre profession generally. He was a member of the advertising staff of the Seattle Star at the time of his death.

Another new film exchange is soon to grace Seattle's film row—this time it is the branch of the Exhibtors' Mutual Producing Corporation, a Hollywood company headed by Harry Garson and Helge S. Sture Vasa. The exact time of opening here will be announced as soon as heads of the firm can visit the Northwest and line up their staff, according to reports from the South.

Matt Aparton, Universal branch executive in this territory, last week was pleased to receive a letter from one of the girls in the Home Office, thanking him for his work during the recent Short Products drive. It seems that because Mr. Aparton registered third in the national standing, the young lady in the Home Office and Stern Brothers.

Jockey Carruthers, local sales representative for the Fox Film Exchange, returned last week from Portland, where he spent a short time during the holidays visiting some of his friends in that territory.

John Stapleton, manager of the Pe Ell theatre at Pe Ell, Washington, was a visitor on film row last week, filling in some bookings for the first of the year.

At the last meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, a resolution was passed recommending to the Film Board Home Office that the Seattle body move from its present quarters in the Securities building to a new location on film row. An answer is now being awaited.

H. A. Andrews, owner of the La Center theatre, at La Center, Washington, last week advised local exchanges that he has closed his house and will soon begin dismantling it. No reason for the closing was given.

A recent visitor on the local row was Marvin Dryness, former Seattle resident, and now booker for the F. B. O. exchange in Portland. Mr. Dryness drove up to this city for a short visit in company with Lloyd Lamb, F. B. O. soles representative and brother of Ed. Lamb question received a prize from both of the local office.

The Whiteside theatre in Corvallis, Oregon, seriously damaged by fire some weeks ago, is understood to be opening up again this week, following a thorough remodeling and renovating. Manager Ernest Ludwig staged a rush job on the repairs in order to cash in on the early 1928 rush.

Manager Les Davis and his staff at the local First National exchange were expecting the arrival this week of Stanley Hatch, western sales director, who is visiting his leading offices during First National Month. Lo Lukan, First National's western district manager, has just left this city, after spending the holidays here with his family.

Word received last week from Eugene, Oregon, indicates that the Rex theatre in that city will soon be closed to undergo a thorough remodeling and redecorating. It is thought that the house will be put into shape for the housing of road shows and long run film productions.

With the ending of the chicken pox epidemic in Cloverdale, Oregon, Manager Myers has reopened his Cloverdale theatre, according to information received this week.

Cincinnati

FIRE for awhile threatened destruction of the Orpheum theatre, Xenia, Ohio, when a film exploded, due to the falling of an electric light extension cord, which broke the 75 watt electric lamp and caused the hot wires to come in contact with the film. The projection machine and booth were destroyed and the interior of the house considerably damaged. Thomas Neville, projectionist, and Louis Rachford, his assistant, although not burned, suffered by inhaling smoke and will be confined to their homes for several days. The house has been closed until repairs can be made and a new machine installed.

A defective flue set fire to the stage of the Grand Opera House, movie theatre, at Bellefontaine, O. Fire Chief H. S. Blair, who was in the audience, directed the patrons from the house in an orderly manner, and assisted in extinguishing the flames, thus confining the damage to the minimum.

The Fox Theatre Corporation, which recently closed negotiations for the site now occupied by the old Masonic Temple, at Dayton, Ohio, on which they are planning the erection of a very large motion picture theatre, are now trying to acquire additional ground at the rear of the present site. The theatre is to be built on Main street, but if the additional ground is acquired, a much larger house will be built, with two entrances, one on Main street and the other on Jefferson street, two of the city's leading thoroughfares.

John Schwalm, genial and general manager of the Jewel Photoplay Co., and also big chief at the Rialto theatre, is wearing an unusually large smile these days. The answer is that his young hopeful has been chosen leader of a prominent local football team, with his picture appearing in some of the local publications.

The Lido theatre, Mansfield, O., has installed a new two-manual Link organ, which, for the present, will be operated automatically. The orchestra has accordingly been dispensed with. The organ is one of the improvements promised by the management after changing the name of the house from the Royal.

George Smith, who holds down the managerial chair at Cincinnati Paramount branch, is again back on the job, after having spent some time in Florida.

The new name was selected by a popularity vote.

Headed by William Reehl, president, the Cincinnati Club will shortly tender a testimonial dinner to E. F. Albee in recognition of the new theatre in Cincinnati which bears his name, and which was recently opened to the public. A special committee has been named to arrange the affair, which promises to eclipse anything of a similar nature previously attempted in this city. Leading men of the theatrical and motion picture world, as well as prominent figures in industrial life, will be in attendance. The date has not yet been definitely decided upon.

The old Buick building, at Pomeroy, Ohio, is the site of a modern house which is being erected by Ross Filton. The house will be given over to pictures as well as road shows.

The Cinderella theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, has passed from possession of its former owners to Isaac Russell and A. V. Abel, who purchased the house.

The police at Mansfield, Ohio, in making their rounds discovered the door of the Ritz theatre office open, long after the house had closed for the night. Investigation disclosed that the office had been completely ransacked, although Manager Roberts reports that not a single thing is missing.

Harry Turberg, co-manager of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, O., is shaking off his managerial duties for awhile, and is enjoying life at Martinsville, Ind.

An epidemic of scarlet fever is raging at Rosewood, Ohio, on account of which motion picture theatres, as well as all schools and churches, have been ordered closed by the health authorities

San Francisco

THE old Portola theatre—once the pride of San Francisco's Rialto, "the only genuine picture palace in the city," will be remodeled. Built in 1908—the first theatre to rise from the ruins of the San Francisco fire, the Portola was the home of all superfeatures in its day. It was a "mint." First opened as a penny arcade by Alborn and Leahy, it was entertainment ground for slummer and yokel. Then it became the "picture palace," owned successively by H. G. Dernham, who was interested in the Emporium, Ralph Pincus, Herbert L. Rothschild, Publix, and West Coast Theatres.

A new projection screen has been sold to the Lincoln theatre, Stockton.

Out of the Portola coffers came the fortune it took to build the California and Granada theatres. For 15 years it was a first run house and a "money maker." In 1922 it took its seat on the toboggan, and since then has gone down steadily and rapidly.

Johnnie Dolezal, the Fox star salesman, is back in his old territory, the Sacramento Valley. He was recently transferred from the San Joaquin Valley.

Manager H. Pincus, of the Casino theatre, and assistant manager T. Manly, were recently complimented for the manner in which they managed the Casino theatre. All three theatres are part of the chain operated by the Chamberlain Amusement Company, with headquarters in Shamokin.

Ed. R. Moore, manager of the recently renovated York theatre, in York, has announced that hereafter jazz selections will be eliminated from the overtures played by the theatre's orchestra, and that instead selections will be taken from the more popular musical comedies. The orchestra is under the direction of Roman Shuman.

The business management of the Fulton theatre, Lancaster, which is leased by I. C. Mishler, who also operates several theatres in Altoona, will hereafter be in the hands of Guy S. Burley, for eight years manager of the Apollo theatre and Garden Pier, Atlantic City, N. J.

J. F. Van Devender, of Shamokin, was elected president of the Weist Amusement Company, owners of Island Park, at the annual meeting of the directors on January 9. Other officers are: S. M. Weist, Shamokin, vice-president; C. S. Weist, Island Park, treasurer, and A. M. Weist, Island Park, secretary. Raymond Dunkelberger, of Sunbury, was elected a new member of the board of directors. Plans were discussed for reopening the park in the spring and a number of improvements will be made to the amusement devices.

The new Earle theatre was formally opened in Allentown on December 15, when "talking movies" were introduced for the first time in the history of the city, both Vitaphone and Movietone having been installed. The Equity Theatres, Inc., which operates picture theatres in Philadelphia, Reading and in several cities in New Jersey, has leased the Earle theatre from William E. Seitz, the builder. Frank S. Mickley, formerly with the Jacobson Amusement Company, Atlantic City, N. J., has been made manager of the Earle. At one time he was associated with the Wilmer & Vincent theatres, in Allentown, and also managed the Rajah theatre in Reading for a number of years.

The Vitaphone was heard and seen for the first time in Shenandoah on January 9, when it was introduced in the Strand theatre.

The Savoy theatre, Wilkes-Barre, announces the permanent introduction of both Vitaphone and Movietone devices.

More than 600 Reading newsboys were guests at a movie show and Vitaphone entertainment given through the generosity of Charles E. Kirlin, a wealthy Reading business man. The parents of the boys were invited to attend the ceremony as the guests of Charles Latshaw, manager of the Arcadia.

Kansas City

E. W. WERNER is president of the newly incorporated Warwick Amusement Company, Kansas City, which resulted from the incorporation of the Warwick theatre, one of the larger suburban theatres. L. C. Walker will remain as manager. R. K. Dietrich wil be secretary-treasurer of the organization. The Warwick will be entirely rebuilt next summer, the work to start about June 1, Mr. Walker announced.

Following in the wake of the closing of the Royal theatre, first run house under lease to Loew interests, the Newman theatre has reduced its top price from 50 cents to 35 cents. Until the opening of the new $4,000,000 Loew's Midland theatre, the Newman was Kansas City's largest first run house and formerly charged 60 cents top price.

The Opera House at Lincoln, Kas., was badly damaged by fire the other night.

LeRoy Foster, of Greensburg, Kas., has leaded the Attica Opera House at Attica, Kas., from Biberstein Brothers.

The contract for the construction of the new Missouri theatre, Columbia, Mo., has been awarded to the Schultz Construction Co., of Chillicothe, Mo., at $133,755, J. D. Stone, of the Missouri Theatre Company, announced. The theatre contract calls for completion of the work in 180 working days.

J. C. Weigand is the new manager of the Lewis theatre, Independence, Mo., while M. Akin has been made manager of the Elliott theatre, also of Independence.

A. J. Wesley has succeeded H. Brodeur, who died recently, as manager of the Wurlitzer organ branch in Kansas City. Mr. Wesley comes from Cincinnati.

It was a profitable venture when K. S. Duncan, president of the Rialto Theatres Corp., Kansas City, arranged to hook up his Alamo, Broadmour and Roanoke theatres with the "Victory" broadcasting program of the Kansas City Star, arranged through Dodge Bros. Corp. Attendance at those three theatres was greater than it had been on any night thus far this winter.

Two young bandits stepped up to A. F. Gibbons, manager of the Prospect theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, who was in the box office Monday night, and, at the point of revolvers, robbed him of $90.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: Nick Kotsis, Chetopa, Kas.; Frank Weary, Farris theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Walter Wallace, Orpheum, Leavenworth, Kas.; G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; Glenn Dickinson Circus of Theatres, Lawrence, Kas.

Russell Borg and W. P. Bernfield, branch manager and salesman, respectively, of the Educational Exchange, Kansas City, were hustling in the territory this week. So were Bill Warner, First National branch manager, and Roy Churchill, F. B. O. branch manager.

Ben Abrams, former special representative for Paramount, but now affiliated with a road show of his, was a Kansas City visitor.

Marsh Wood, formerly of Oklahoma City, has been added to the Pathe-DeMille sales force, covering Southern Kansas.

C. A. "Red" Jones, Educational, went to Ponca City, Okla., last week with such a bad cold he hardly could speak above a whisper—and he was invited to speak at a banquet.

A. C. Schultz, Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., manager at Kansas City, has returned from Minneapolis, where he went to visit his parents.

Baltimore

ARTHUR B. PRICE, manager of the Aurora, Aldine, Avalon, New Preston, of Baltimore, has been reappointed on the boxing commission of Maryland.

Vernon Nolte, son of Charles E. Nolte, managing director of the Belnord Theatre Company, has been appointed manager of the Boulevard theatre to succeed Lee Whittle, who has resigned.

The Evening Sun newsboys' band was entertained at Loew's Valencia theatre here Monday night, January 16th, by Howard Price Kingsmore, Loew's city manager in Baltimore.

Louis Machat, managing director of the Little theatre in Baltimore, has been entertaining the pupils of various schools in Baltimore during the week beginning January 9.

A pocketbook containing $330 was found in the Avalon theatre one night recently by Robert Brooks, the janitor, who returned it to an excited man, who was waiting at the entrance of the playhouse next morning when he went to reopen the playhouse.

The man feared that it had been stolen and described it to Brooks who explained that it had been found on the floor under the seat which the man had occupied. The man thanked Brooks profusely.

48 Projecting Room Fires Occurred the First Nine Months of 1927

Destroying 76,750 feet of film, in addition to Projection Rooms and Apparatus.

The above is the Fire Commissioners Report of New York.

How many more have occurred during this period in the other parts of the country, whose Theatre is Next?

Ninety per cent of projector fires are caused by New Prints sticking (due to Emulsion Deposits) and weakened film sprockets of deteriorated prints.

Film Distributors carry a heavy responsibility in the matter of furnishing prints in condition for safer projection.

Unquestionably, film sprockets become much weakened when prints are brittle and lifeless, and easily rip-tear and break in the projector. This makes projection always dangerous.

Liquified Film Waxing Process

Perfectly waxes new prints. Will not stick, or gum up the projector. Preserves the strength and toughness of film stock, to better stand the strain of the projector. Cleans prints from all oil-grease, for brighter and clearer projection.

Exhibitors—Use precaution, for protection. Demand from Film Distributors, all prints processed with Liquified Film Wax, as film sprockets of deteriorated prints easily Rip-Tear and Break.

It is 100 per cent safer to secure prints processed with Liquified Film Wax, for print preservation, than to secure prints that have only received Film Sprocket Hole inspection and are in a state of deterioration, full of oil-grease and have a blurry-hazy, or cloudy picture upon the screen.

The Why of Stereoscopic Pictures

J. H. JENKINS, who owns the Douglas Theatre at Lee's Summit, Missouri, wishes to know if it is possible to project stereoscopic pictures by showing two slightly different views of the same scene at the same time. His letter is as follows:

Dear Sir:

I read your recent article on stereoscopic pictures and I, too, am of the opinion that it cannot be done with a single device such as a screen, a light source, or a projector.

Some years ago I was thinking this matter over and although I know very little about such things, I did have the idea that it might be possible to project stereoscopic pictures by taking a double picture and projecting this to the screen. Was this ever tried? Perhaps I can make myself clearer by saying that what I have in mind is to use a double dissolving lantern slide projector (or else two single lanterns) for showing two time photographic slides of the same scene.

These two photographs should be taken from slightly different angles in order that the two views be slightly different, thus giving the illusion of depth.

If these two pictures were projected to the screen at the same time, one offsetting the other a trifle, can you tell me if this would give the stereoscopic effect for which everybody is looking?

(Signed) J. H. Jenkins.

Not Entirely Clear

The idea of using two pictures of the same thing to obtain stereoscopic effects is quite all right, Friend Jenkins, but you do not make yourself entirely clear as to just how these double views are to be projected. By having "one offset the other a trifle," do you mean to project one on top of the other but have them slightly displaced? Something like the effect obtained when two lantern slide images are imperfectly matched on the screen?

Or do you intend to project these two pictures in such a manner that they are side by side on the screen?

Separate Viewing Necessary

No matter what method of projecting the pictures is used this much is absolutely necessary—that each eye see a separate picture and that the two pictures thus seen separately must show a slightly different perspective. In other words each picture must be photographed from a slightly different angle and then viewed separately—one picture for each eye.

The stereoscopic effect illusion is based wholly and entirely upon the ability of the brain to combine two pictures of the same object, as seen individually by each eye, and fuse them into one picture, with the result that final brain image weaves this depth present in the true scene.

In order to project stereoscopic pictures a system of projection is required, which will do what the two eyes, unaided will do.

For example, a person with normal eyesight sees all real objects as having three dimensions providing these objects are illuminated so as to reveal their natural shape. The principal reason why objects are seen in their three dimensional form is because both eyes see the same object, but these two eye images are slightly different because the eyes are separated by a distance of approximately 2½ inches.

Effect of Eye Separation

The effect of this separation distance of our eyes can be clearly demonstrated by the following simple test: Hold this book up at a distance of about 18 inches from the eyes and then, with one eye tightly closed, try to touch a given letter in a word with the point of a pencil. It will be found that this is exceedingly difficult to do on the first attempt.

Then try to do the same thing with both eyes open. Using both eyes, there is no trouble at all in touching any letter.

At short distances, the small distance of separation between the eyes (2½ inches) is sufficient to reveal great depth in the brain pictures so that objects appear clearly defined and sharply outlined. At great distances, however, this separation distance of the eyes is relatively small (as compared with the viewing distance) so that objects appear flat as in a photograph. For example, in a mountainous landscape which is viewed at a distance of ten or fifteen miles, the mountains appear flat in their outline against the skyline and there is practically no suggestion of depth. It is extremely difficult, for this reason, to accurately judge the distance to such objects.

Reversing the Process

In obtaining stereoscopic projection effects natural conditions must be created by artificial means. Since all photographic pictures are flat in that they consist of but two-dimensional objects, the element of depth must be obtained artificially by presenting separate pictures to each eye in such a manner that when the two pictures are fused into one by the brain, the missing third dimension will be incorporated in the final image.

This can be accomplished by first photographing an object from two different positions separated by a distance of about 2½ inches or else by using a double camera in which the photographic lenses are separated by the required distance.

These two slightly different pictures should then be projected alternately to the screen and then viewed alternately with each eye so that the left eye sees only the picture taken with the left photographic lens and the right eye sees only the picture taken with the right photographic lens.

The two pictures also could be projected at the same time, side by side, on the screen and then viewed so that the left eye sees only the left picture and the right eye sees only the right picture. If eye should see both pictures no illusion of depth will be had and the pictures will appear as any ordinary photograph.

The old-time stereoscopic viewing contraption so commonly found in the parlors of many homes employed double pictures mounted on a common background so that the photographs were placed side by side. Two eye prisms to assist the eyes in properly combining the two pictures, thus making it possible for each eye to see its own picture and transmit it to the brain for final fusion of the two.

This method could hardly be employed in a theatre because of the great distances involved, so that the stereoscopic viewer is essentially a one-man proposition.

Colored Pictures Used

Where the two pictures are projected alternately, one on top of the other, the trick lies in making each eye see only its proper picture without letting the second picture appear. If it were possible for a person to alternately open and close each eye in exact synchronism with the alternate projection of the two screen pictures so that each eye would see only the same picture and would be closed each time the second picture was projected stereoscopic effects might be obtained. A person afflicted with St. Vitus' Dance might be able to accomplish this but certainly no ordinary individual could do it.

The same effect is obtained, however, by using two colored pictures, one red, the other green. A pair of spectacles is then worn by each observer in which one lens is red and the other green. The pictures are then alternately projected and the eye with the red lens (gelatine is used in place of a lens) sees only the red picture and the eye with the green lense sees only the green picture. Each eye is blind to screen picture in which the picture color and lens color do not agree.

The effect obtained is in the nature of a stereoscopic silhouette.

Baby Grand Theatre Opens at Orlando, Fla.

The new Baby Grand theatre at Winter Park, the millionaire winter colony closely adjacent to Orlando, Fla., opened last week. Work on the new house has been in progress several months under the supervison of Roy A. Benjamin, Jacksonville architect, who designed the theatre.

Though having a seating capacity of only 360, the Baby Grand is a little gem. In design, decoration and appointments it is perfect and complete. The carpets are of luxurious quality and exquisite pattern; the chairs, especially designed and manufactured by the American Seating Company, are as fine as can be found anywhere in the country.

The new organ installed by the Robert-Morton Company is another attractive feature. The technical equipment throughout the house was furnished and installed by the National Theatre Supply Company.

Willard C. Patterson, southern divsion manager of Universal Theatres, who own and operate the Baby Grand, supervised the final preparations.

Reynolds Elec. Co. Opens New York Warehouse

A New York City warehouse and display room has been opened by the Reynolds Electric Company of Chicago, manufacturers of electric devices for motion picture theatres, at 256 West 31st Street and will be in charge of Geo. H. Erich and Leo A. Leissler. This new warehouse will greatly facilitate Reynolds service in eastern territory.

To Rebuild Old Theatre at Mayfield, Ky.

T. L. McNutt, owner of the old Unique theatre, property at Fifth and South Street, Mayfield, Ky., announces that he has arranged for the opening of a modern theatre there at an early date. Plans have been made for work to start immediately on rebuilding the house. It will be of brick veneer, with new floor and steel ceiling, and will be equipped with steam heat and fans.

Mr. McNutt announces that he has hooked up with a circuit of eight other large towns and will thus be enabled to supply his patrons with high class vaudeville, also with good repertoire stock companies.

Smalley Will Rebuild His Cooperstown Theatre

The Grand theatre, at Johnstown, N. Y., which was leased by William Smalley, of Cooperstown, and which was burned to the ground about two weeks ago, will be rebuilt, according to an announcement this week by Frank Empsall, of Watertown, part owner of the building who is spending the winter in Florida. Mr. Empsall was summoned north after the fire and viewed the ruins. It is said that Mr. Smalley lost about $18,000 in the fire, having carried no insurance on property that he had installed in the building and improvements that he had made.

Gallagher Equip't Opens West Coast Office

Thos. E. Gallagher, West Coast manager of the Gallagher Orchestra Equipment Company announces the opening of a West Coast office located at 1487 West Washington Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal., from which this firm will carry a full line of stock for service to theatres west of the Rocky mountains, F. O. B. Los Angeles. This move will result in a saving of time and money for their west coast customers.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"Sorrell and Son"—United Artists, Columbia Theatre, Washington

Daily News—"One of best. Will undoubtedly add much of pelf to coffers of chosen cinema houses. Great picture calculated to bring tears to eyes of even those who do not choose to be emotional. Direction must have been inspired. Story unfolds naturally and consistently; real big moments in no way forced or unnatural. Warner gives performance worthy of his considerable talents, than which there is no brighter praise. Decidedly one of best of year. After such emotional orgy, assembling of new Congress seemed a bit flat."

Times—"Neatly done. Photoplay of unusual distinction. Those who spent delightful few hours with book should enjoy film version. Warner dominates throughout. Devotion of Sorrell and Son is so all-embracing that there is no room for even mother in picture. Is from standpoint of story, photography and cast well-nigh perfect."

Star—"A great novel in its book form, is as great a picture. Audience almost unanimous in this decision. Picture is sufficient for any one and there is feeling of getting something for nothing when short subjects come on."

Herald—"Capably directed, splendidly acted. Thoroughly fine. Keen and sound plucking of strings of feeling and emotion rarely done in so masterly a manner. The sort of thing that even ready weepers won't weep over, because it seems too fine for that."

"Sorrell and Son"—United Artists, San Francisco

Plain Dealer—"Warner plays upon heartstrings. Brenon tells story with remarkable accuracy and terrific poignancy in brief confines of single photoplay. Has maintained strict contact with theme. Has told story with astounding fidelity and with almost reverential feeling. Greatest father-love story ever told on screen. Gentility without thought of self, nobility without snobbery, accented in Warner's portrayal. No finer portrayal of gentleman, scholar and father has been found on our screens. Nilsson gives rather remarkable portrayal of Sorrell's ex-wife. Wolheim does excellent work in short bit. Story sweeps before your eyes, one beautiful setting after another. Brenon's eye for pictorial beauty only eclipsed by great directional ability at catching true flavor of Deeping's 'Sorrell and Son.' I know of no greater screen love story than this one."

Press—"Here's a good picture. Excellent picture. Looking at finished picture, one wonders how anyone could have escaped seeing possibilities. Many in theatre were crying rather cheerfully long before finish."

News—"A fine drama. You'll have seen one of most absorbing and intensely interesting dramas you ever sat through. 'Sorrell and Son' sends us actor whose screen appearances are too infrequent—H. B. Warner. As Sorrell, man with but a single ambition—his son's success and happiness—his work was a treat to see and as fine a portrayal as he has ever done."

Plain Dealer—"Brenon makes remarkable picture from Deeping's novel. I came away more than ever astounded by Brenon's incredibly fine film version. Screen version builds and builds and holds interest as few other pictures this season have been able. Warner's work one of outstanding portrayals of year."

"The Jazz Singer" — Warner Bros., Garrick Theatre, Chicago

Tribune—"Tremendously effective—and affecting. Has been cannily directed, finely staged and splendidly photographed. As Jolson is in 'legit' so is he in movies. One hundred per cent there with personality plus that has anchored him so firmly in hearts of the world."

Chicago Journal — "Delightful and extraordinarily interesting. Every first nighter in crowded Garrick was certain that 'The Jazz Singer' was a good show. There's really no reason why theatre shouldn't be reserving seats now for film's performance in March. For 'The Jazz Singer' is going to be with us for long time."

Chicago Post—"Brilliantly effective entertainment. Aside from value in transferring famous player to new field and in marking an innovation in photoplays, has a world of emotional appeal. For all its novelty it fulfills old formula of showman 'makes 'em laugh, makes 'em cry, makes 'em wait.'"

Herald and Examiner—"Extremely fascinating picture. Jolson as good movie actor as you'll find in row of picture studios. Was applauded for several minutes after picture was finished and this is very, very unusual in film theatre."

"Man, Woman and Sin"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Capitol Theatre, New York City

Herald-Tribune—"One of most satisfying stories we ever have seen on screen, and it left us wondering just how soon one could reasonably expect to see Jeanne Eagles again. One of most interesting persons on screen—she has charm with certain strangeness which made her as fascinating to us as she was to impetuous boy who loved her. Gilbert does better acting than he ever has done before. . . . When it comes to direction Bell is a genius."

Sun—"Easily best of week-end rush of movies. . . . Dramatic and atmospherically correct. Bell's unusual cleverness supplied in almost every scene. Unquestionably one of ablest in his line."

Telegraph — "Will undoubtely prove box-office winner. Jeanne Eagles absolutely lovely. Photographs like million dollars and brings not only loveliness to interpretation but intelligence that is delightful. Gilbert also splendid."

Evening Post—"Remarkably moving story of disillusionment beautifully told in terms of pictures. Bell has framed story for camera and has presented it smoothly and convincingly. . . . most interesting motion picture to reach Broadway in several months."

American—"Boosts two fascinating backgrounds—newspaper office and habitat of Washington society. Gilbert gives one of best performances of career, and Jeanne Eagels splendid. She seems to have established very definite place for herself in picture world, and we are looking forward to seeing her in celluloid soon again."

Graphic—"Brings Gilbert in new type of role and introduces Jeanne Eagles as one of most fascinating recruits from legitimate for whom Hollywood doors have opened. She screens remarkably well and should be valuable material for future productions. Bell has attained real newspaper atmosphere and sequences carry excitement and action."

Journal—"If this column had a hat on, it would take it off to Bell, who wrote and directed 'Man, Woman and Sin.' There has been much talk of poignant characterization in European productions, but here is picture that is so real and strikes so true a note that one doesn't disguise tendency to sob by pretending to have a cold in head."

World—"Excellent motion picture dealing largely with newspaper life . . . Genuine flavor of newspaper office has been captured by Bell and his players. For first performance in films, Miss Eagles does extraordinary piece of work."

News—"A movie that any newspaper man or woman might see without feeling that he's being glorified—with feeling that his art is being depicted faithfully."

Evening World—"Picture one of most intelligent things seen on Broadway in many a moon. Bell, one of the few Hollywood directors who may be depended upon for consistently good entertainment, has prevailed upon Gilbert to put over some bits here which are by far best he has done. Miss Eagles photographs remarkably well, and of course her artistry is just as compelling here as it was in legitimate."

"Sorrell and Son"—United Artists, Cleveland

News—"Brenon has added one more masterpiece to his credit. Not only does this picture rank as masterpiece but it compares most favorably with greatest creations for silver sheet. Emphatically a powerful argument for motion picture as achievement of arts. Only few days ago I had completed my selection of the '10 best' pictures of year. Fortunately I had not sent my selection in. After viewing Brenon production, I put 'Sorrell and Son' well up on list, at sacrifice of another picture which it was no easy matter to eliminate. Seldom that reviewer is given opportunity and privilege of sitting through so entirely a worth while film-play. Sends one from theatre with tear-misted eye and pictured story so deeply impressed upon memory that this viewer, for one, expects to find it recurring to his mind's eye for many days to come. Masterly direction. Production that befits its greatness in every particular. Beautifully mounted. Sincerity is its keynote. Photoplay which should find place on entertainment schedule of every devotee of films with especial reference to those who have good of movies at heart. Warner superb."

"Sadie Thompson"—United Artists, Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C.

News—"We may indulge one of the happiest enthusiasms of our cinema experience, and be among the first to hail a prophet without particular artistic honor in her own country—Gloria Swanson! The Sennett bathing beauty is a fine actress! Her enactment of the title role is all but perfection. Her Sadie is real."

Herald—"I do not think she has ever had a vehicle comparable to 'Sadie Thompson' . . . nor do I recall any portrayal she has ever given to the screen that has more convincingly revealed her talents. This picture . . . is one of the best we are likely to get this year. 'Sadie Thompson' is the best thing she has done yet, and may very likely be the picture by which she will be remembered."

Times—"Prettier than she has ever appeared. Makes everything of her opportunities and holds you from start to finish. Gloria is marvellously good. Give her the material and she'll handle it."

INSIDE STUFF
ON PICTURES

Some doubt with exhibs whether it's policy to use lengthy trailers carrying one or more of the kick climaxes in coming pictures prior to exhibition. Some claims it hurts biz and have eliminated those with thrill scenes.

Which explains the rapid growth of

Advance Trailers

"The Press Sheet of the Screen"

MAJESTIC NOW HAS ADVANCE SERVICE

Something unique in film advertising is the advance feature service just inaugurated at the Majestic Theatre.

In reality an "animated ad," the film announcing the coming photoplay attractions for that theatre gives a peppy glimpse of the stars and locale of the story, with just enough action to arouse one's curiosity without "giving away" the high moments of the coming play.

From The Bulletin,
Okla. City, Okla.

When a newspaper comments on a trailer service it's worth sitting up and taking notice.

e first opportunity I have had since
KINGS to thank you for the very great en to our undertaking by the installutiful pipe organs on our stage number of our crucifixion scenes was very great thundering notes of the organ of the cross. The actors worked vering days and nights in the cold ration that I have never seen equalled.
ct we were working on is the most inertheless that inspiration was fanned
gan. It has never been my fortune scene that that great group on llbound with tears in their eyes the cross to the first Christmas carol cumstances.

bted to you for your very genuine

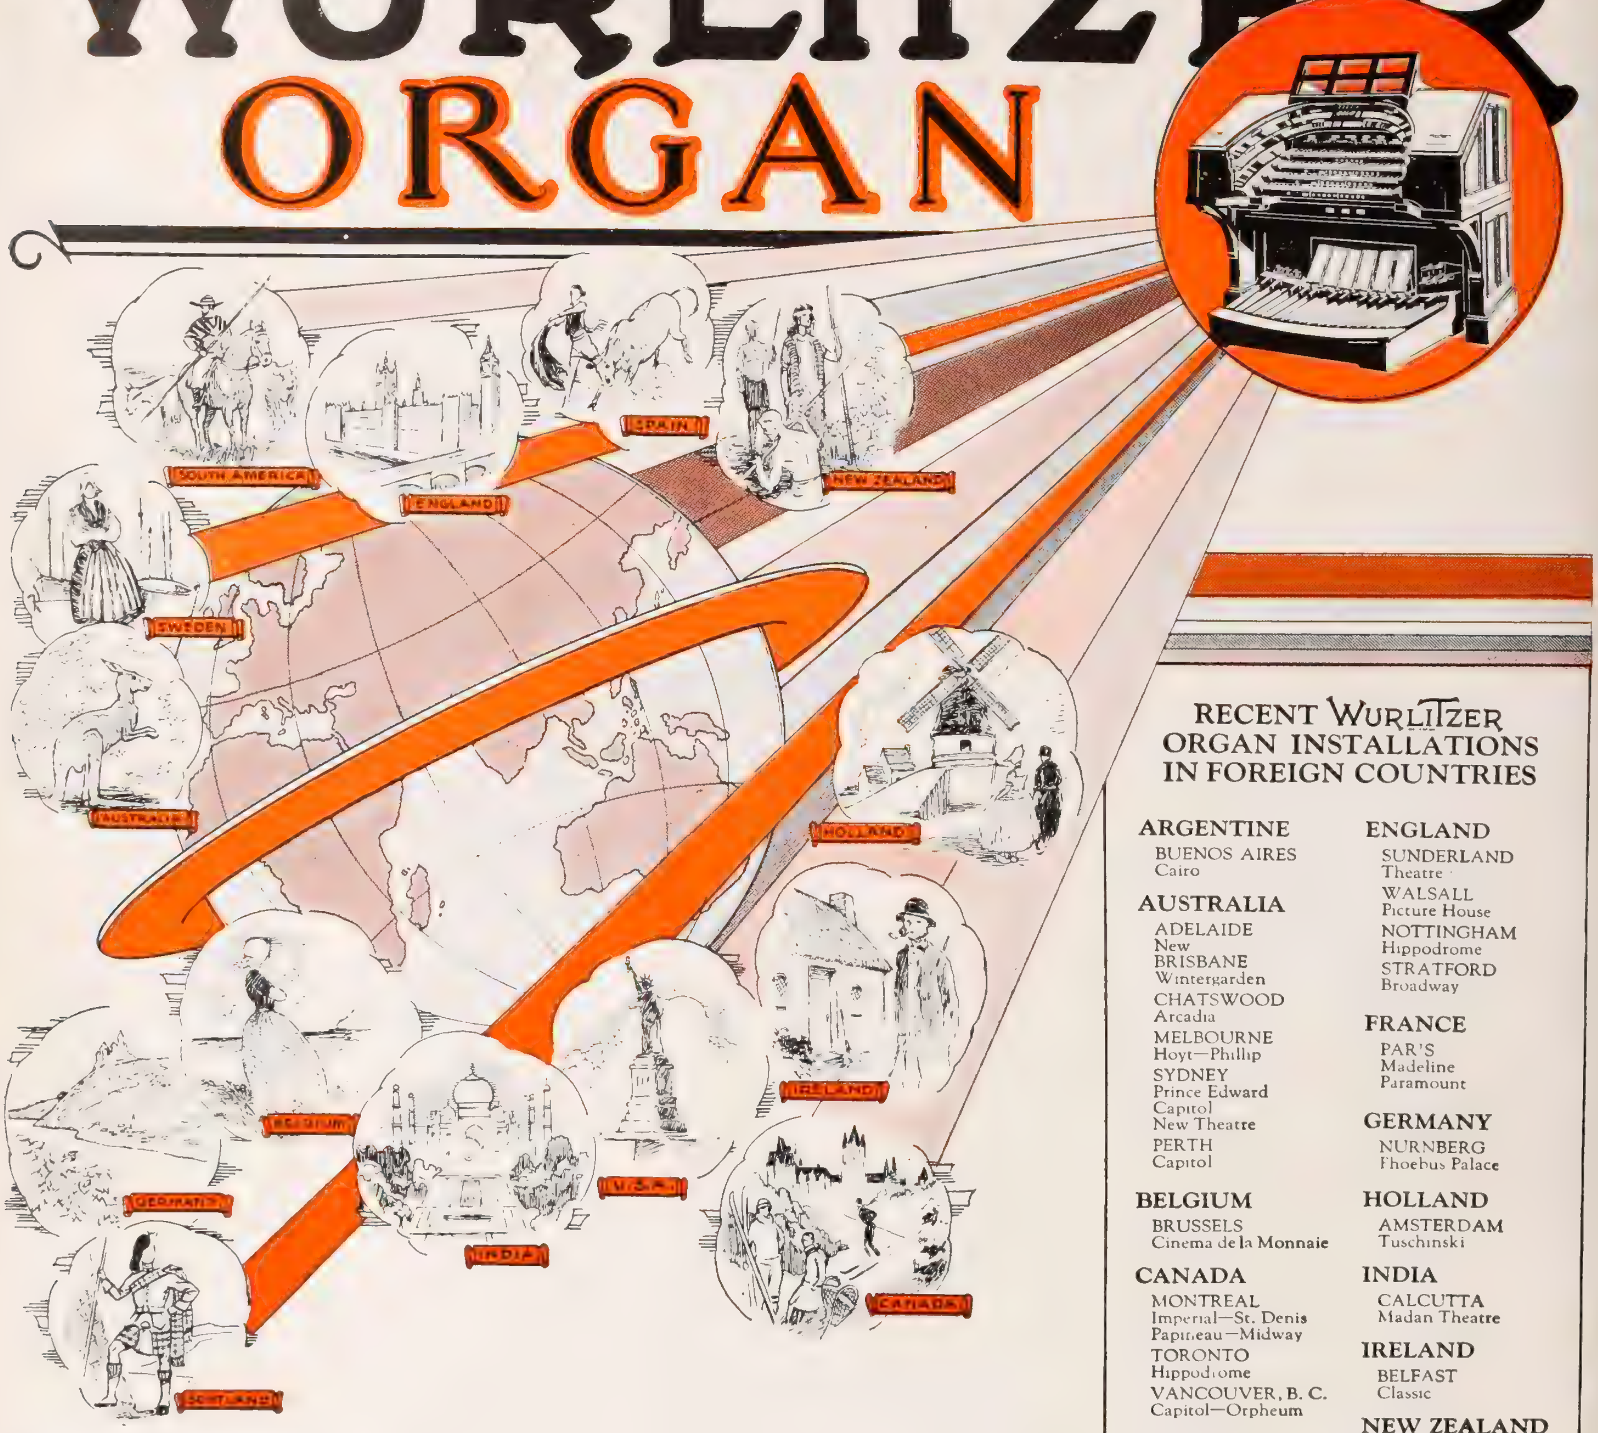
WURLITZER ORGAN



The fame of the Wurlitzer Organ as a musical attraction in the leading motion picture theatres of America has spread to the far corners of the civilized world. As a result the famous Wurlitzer Organ has been installed in many progressive theatres in foreign countries. The list of Wurlitzer installations throughout the country during the past year is evidence of Wurlitzer supremacy. Wurlitzer Organs are world famous—they possess exclusive features which give the organist an instrument of marvelous flexibility and instant responsiveness to the slightest touch.

THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN PARIS

took $3,862.75 on Monday January 16th $4,084.00 on Tuesday January 17th at Skouras Ambassador Theatre St. Louis; $21,710.00 first 6 days-$10,856.00 first 2 days at the Granada Theatre, San Francisco!

Latest wire news gives a grand total for 6 days at Skouras' Ambassador Theatre of $29,873.00, so while others give you "hooey" and Blah! Blah! about "breaking house records," Universal publishes actual cash receipts which any exhibitor anywhere can compare and quickly learn whether these receipts are something to talk about or not. Universal salesmen aren't selling "THE COHENS AND KELLYS IN PARIS;" they are accepting play dates in order of their receipt. This time, the line forms on the right, and if you're not in the line, that's just your bad luck. While the line is forming to receive bookings on Universal's box office specials, slap your play dates down NOW also for "THE CAT AND THE CANARY"—"LES MISERABLES"—"WE AMERICANS"—"LOVE ME AND THE WORLD IS MINE"—and—LAURA LA PLANTE, in her greatest box office hit in years, "FINDERS KEEPERS" which is slated to smash all box office records.

REEL REVIEWS

By George Gerhard

AT THE COLONY

Offhand, this being the age of labels and slogans, it would seem that Laura La Plante is by way of becoming the Elsie Janis of the screen. Certainly this reviewer can think of no other movie personage who is so expert in the art of mimicry.

It doesn't seem to matter to what the young woman puts her hand; always she passes the thing off as if she were born to it. She has a complete bag of tricks, and yet when she reaches into that bag and draws one out the trick takes on all the authenticity of something really substantial.

Thanks Brother Gerhard, all you've said is true!

How I Boosted Business 233% with "THE PATENT LEATHER KID"

Applause for The Patent Leather Kid
JAN 18th
Played at
Globe Theatre, New York - 4 months - $2.20
Woods Theatre, Chicago - 2 months
Miles Theatre, Detroit - 6 weeks
San Antonio is the first city in the United States to see it at regulation night
Aztec Prices

Mr. Epstein and his advance lobby display, used for ten days previous to the showing of "The Patent Leather Kid".

By WILLIAM EPSTEIN
Managing Director, Aztec Theatre, San Antonio

"WHEN I signed with First National for 'The Patent Leather Kid', I knew I had a picture with practically unlimited profit opportunities—and I determined to see just how much I could possibly get out of it.

"The record business of the 16-week run in New York, the 7 weeks in Chicago, and the 6 weeks in Detroit (at $2.20 and $1.65 top), and John Kumler's record-breaking extended run in Toledo, were tough marks to shoot at . . . But I was out to beat them if I could.

"Now, after the first three days of the run here at the Aztec, I can report a 233% INCREASE EVERY DAY, over my average daily gross!

"Does that lick the world or not? I ask you!

Practical Publicity Ideas

"This is no bull . . . 'The Patent Leather Kid' is a simon pure knock-out. It's a positive delight to show such a magnificent picture.

"Maybe you'd like to know just what kind of exploitation and publicity I used to more than triple my average gross. Well, here's the dope:—

"In the first place, I held a special preview for newspaper men and ex-Army officers.

"Then for ten days in advance I flashed an 80-foot locally made trailer at every show.

"I doubled my ad space in the San Antonio papers and used 21 out-of-town weeklies covering a radius of 100 miles.

"I took stories from the First National special press sheet to the newspapers, and have gotten over 250 inches of free publicity already, with more to come.

"But one of the best stunts, I think, was having the manager of a local prizefighter change his pug's name to 'The Patent Leather Kid'. He fought under that name shortly before the opening!

"I got 13 window tie-ups; and 10 book stores and the Somers Drug Stores are set for windows as soon as the photoplay edition of the story is received. I also worked a special tank tie-up that had them all staring.

"For the lobby I had special frames built with patent leather backgrounds.

"Besides all this, I used the following accessories:—

75 twenty-four sheets (instead of the usual 15)...40 three-sheets...5,000 regular heralds...10,000 special novelty heralds...3,000 hotel cards...5,000 special fight heralds for the Athletic Club, etc.

Sensational Profits at Negligible Cost

"The extra cost of this campaign was carfare compared to the increase in business.

"We went to capacity the very first day and have been turning away THOUSANDS at the night shows.

"The consensus of patrons' opinions is that it's the GREATEST PICTURE IN YEARS.

"My own opinion is that it's the biggest box-office picture yet.

"I recommend it to every exhibitor."

A Challenge

Will Coercive Block-Booking Be Abolished Voluntarily?

By William A. Johnston

WE said last week that the Brookhart Bill means nothing more or less than Federal control of this industry.

That, of course, was our opinion. Some people might quite rightly have decided that our estimate of the situation might be open to doubt.

But—we were right. Senator Brookhart himself has told an exhibitor delegation which conferred with him that his measure "surely provided for Government control and that to take this out would remove its strength."

So the issue is clear-cut. The bill does mean Government control of the business workings of this industry.

And—as we announced last week—we are unalterably opposed to any such thing.

The bill plainly provides for price-fixing under the supervision of a Federal commission. You can't fix prices in this industry without going to the heart of all its problems—and that means all its economic processes, from studio to theatre.

The bill would also give the Federal commission wide powers of regulation, for the enforcement of the act. The economics of this business are already badly tangled. By the time the Federal commission got through attempting to untangle them, we would be in a state of industrial chaos.

We say again—the Brookhart Bill, in our deliberate and carefully considered opinion, is not the solution.

The first step—and it must be taken—is the abolition of coercive block-booking, unfair allocation of product and all forms of coercion, intimidation and trade restraint by those in the industry who are responsible for these evils.

To us, that issue is just as clear-cut, just as imperative, as the issue of Governmental control.

What this industry needs is a new Bill of Rights—written by itself and enforced by itself.

Will such a document be created and put into effect? Perhaps it can be done at Chicago next week when the exhibitor-distributor committee on the revision of the contract meets.

This would seem to offer a real, practical opportunity, if it is grasped properly, with all political jockeying or any other kind of monkey business laid aside.

We shall watch the results of that meeting with great interest.

Meanwhile:

The challenge goes forth for every man to declare whether or not he is in favor of Federal control.

There is another challenge, just as imperious. We stated it last week; we repeat it now:

Will those in this industry who are responsible for coercive block booking abolish it voluntarily or will they not?

Richards Warns of Danger To Industry From Brookhart Bill

THE following telegram has been received by William A. Johnston dated New Orleans, January 25, from E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company:

"Just read your editorial after sending you wire on Brookhart Bill. You cover situation well but not as forcibly as the imminent danger of situation warrants and demands.

"Our industry, including the small independent exhibitor nationally, should be impressed with conditions that exist at Washington because of a thousand and one commissions, the personnel of which is selected politically as a reward for service with utter disregard of experience and application, attempting to regulate the nation's industry and commerce in general.

"It takes a commission of commissioners at Washington to keep them from running over one another. Once established, they are rarely ever abolished but are added to in the shifts of administrations and according to the lame ducks they have to feed, to whom our business, on the surface, appears as a luscious virgin green field they must shift to for their natural expansion. The number of them now exceeds the combined personnel of the army and navy.

"Don't let us open the gate if we can prevent it."

New Boston Corporation

$25,000,000 Theatre Operation Corporation to Expand Activities of Older Concern

A NEW corporation to expand the business already operated by the New England Theatres Operating Company has been launched at Boston, with an authorized capital of $25,000,000. It is known as the New England Theatres Operating Corporation. The authorized capital of $25,000,000 consists of $15,000,000 first preferred and $10,000,000 second preferred stock, and 10,000 shares of common stock without par value.

Of this new issue $2,000,000 is being issued at the present time to those stockholders of the older company who have gone into the new corporation, for their holdings. Both the old and the new company are to continue to function, the new concern to use the old company's business as a nucleus for extensive expansion, and will also be the operating company for both. It is emphatically stated that the new corporation is in no sense of the word a reorganization of the older company.

Samuel Pinaski, for the past few years vice-president of the older company, is president of the new corporation, and Jacob Lourie, president of the older company, is treasurer of the new corporation. James Solomont, the third incorporator, is a director of the older company. He is vice-president of the Bank of Commerce and Trust Company of Boston.

The older company has been in operation for the past eighteen years, during which time it has acquired outright and operates sixteen theatres, of which thirteen are within the city of Boston. It is interested in many other theatres, and it is regarding these playhouses that an announcement is expected at an early date.

The sixteen theatres owned and operated by the older company and which will come under the operation of the new company are the Modern and Beacon, both downtown Boston houses. The Shawmut, Dudley, Morton, Regent, Rivoli and Criterion, also located in the business section of Boston, with the Franklin Park, Allston, Jamaica, Roslindale Rialto and East Boston Gem Theatres in the community type locations. Outside Boston they own and operate the Marlboro Theatre at Marlboro, Opera House at Milford, and the Hudson Theatre at Hudson, all in Massachusetts.

Lachman to Produce for British International

Harry Lachman, film producer, who has his studio on the Riviera at Nice, has entered into a contract with John Maxwell, president of British International, England's largest producing company, to direct a number of pictures and supervise production at the Elstree studios during the present year, during which time the agreement is to run, it is said. By its terms, the English producing company will enlarge the Lachman studio at Nice for the purpose of making several pictures at the spot. The new quota law in England permits this for one year because of a lack of studios in Britain.

United Artists Theatre in Detroit to Open Soon

On Friday, February 3, the newly-built United Artists Theatre in Detroit will be opened with the feature film, "Sadie Thompson," as its initial cinema presentation. This date will be in exact accordance with the one announced for the opening more than six months ago. Nellie Revell, in charge of advertising and publicity of the United Artists house in Chicago, spent several days of last week making preparations for the opening of the Detroit addition to the United Artists theatre chain.

The Detroit house has a seating capacity of 2,000 on two floors. It occupies the ground floors of a new 18-story theatre and office building at the corner of Bagley Avenue and Clifford Street. The building was financed by sale to bankers and public of an issue of bonds, and the theatre was leased to United Artists Theatre Circuit.

Liberty Theatre, Seattle Closed for Good

West Coast Theatres' large downtown house in Seattle, Washington, the Liberty, closed its doors to the public for good this week, at least as a West Coast house. It is openly announced that the theatre is for lease to any operating concern or individual.

The Liberty, built about 12 years ago and operated for many years by the former Jensen-Von Herberg circuit before being taken over in a deal between Jensen-Von Herberg and Pacific Northwest Theatres, Inc., shortly afterwards becoming a West Coast house, was at one time a veritable "gold mine." In the fall of 1927 the house was closed, completely renovated, and became the first United Artists theatre in the country as the result of a deal between West Coast and United Artists. Due to location, managerial troubles and admission prices business rapidly declined at the house, so far, in fact, that West Coast made it into a program attraction house and again named it the Liberty. The return of the old policy, however, failed to affect the slump.

Bombing of Palace Hip in Seattle Attempted

Windows in buildings for several blocks around the Palace Hip Theatre in Seattle, Washington, were shattered one night last week by the explosion of an unidentified bomb in the alley in the rear of the theatre, which Seattle police are now investigating in the belief that the bomb was meant to deal destruction to the theatre itself.

The Palace Hip is one of the chain of downtown houses operated by the Sterling Theatres, Inc., a chain over which John Danz presides. Danz has been bucking Seattle theatre unions for many months, and his houses and employees have been the subjects of several attacks and acts of vandalism. The bomb explosion, it is suspected, was another union sympathy move in order to force Danz into line.

Representative Exhibitors' Views on Brookhart Bill

Opinions Received by News Show Some Against Measure; Others See It as "Lesser of Two Evils"

OPINIONS received this week by Motion Picture News from representative exhibitors in various parts of the country on the Brookhart Bill in every instance condemn coercive block booking. Some of the exhibitors are against the bill because it would mean Federal regulation of the industry; others favor it as "the lesser of two evils." The opinions follow:

By E. V. RICHARDS, Jr.

Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans

WE DO not believe in coercive block booking nor do we believe in coercive politicians forming a bureaucratic interference in business—and the Brookhart Bill is leading to that. State rights are waning fast enough without our helping it along. Let's fight in our own backyard or expect to meet the fanatics nationally in all future problems if the Brookhart gate is opened.

By NATHAN YAMINS

of Fall River, Mass.; Official of M. P. T. O. A. and Member of Committee on Revision of Contract

A CLOSE study of the Brookhart Bill discloses that it is aimed primarily at the abolition of block booking. In addition to this it seeks to bring about a more equitable distribution of product so that the Independent Exhibitor will be in a position to show worth while product even in cities where the Distributor-Producer may have competitive theatres. Both of the problems interest vitally, not only the Producer-Distributor and Exhibitor, but what is of greater importance is the public interest concerned; and consequently and consideration of the problem must be had with the public interest in mind.

My personal feeling is that block booking is the most vicious practice existing in our industry and must be abolished in some way or other. It is vicious because the Exhibitor is made to take a block of average and poor pictures in order to get one or two worth while pictures, and consequently must assume the loss of showing poor pictures or of keeping them on the shelf.

Moreover, it is vicious from the point of view of the public because they are forced to see product that is not worth while because that product has been purchased by the Exhibitor in order to secure a picture that may be worth while. In my opinion, as long as block booking will exist, there will be no incentive to make good pictures. Since it is practically admitted that block booking should be eliminated, the question then is whether this can be done within the industry itself or whether we must resort to government regulation in order to bring about this elimination.

After many years of organization work which brought me in close contact with Producer-Distributor representatives and with the problems of the industry, I feel convinced that the only hope for the elimination of this vicious practice lies in government regulation.

I am free to admit that government regulation is not to be desired, but I am a firm believer of the old adage, "of two evils choose the lesser," and I am personally in favor of supporting the Brookhart Bill even though it brings with it some phase of government regulation, if it will bring about the elimination of block booking.

By KARL HOBLITZELLE

President, Interstate Amusement Co., Dallas

FRANKLY, the idea of shying away from government regulation impresses me as illustrating the present state of our industry. We are supposed to be already subject to the general laws, and therefore subject to government regulation.

The Producer-Distributor Companies are perfectly aware that the present system of running the industry is a violation of existing law. This was settled by the Supreme Court in the Binderup case. All of us are familiar with the history of the Federal Trade Commission proceeding. Yet nothing is done. In other industries where ordinary merchandise is concerned, the public has been protected by enforcement of our anti-trust laws. But in this great popular art, affecting the very habits, beliefs and ideals of our people, they are being left at the mercy of centralized capital.

What if the Brookhart Bill should be passed? Presumably just another statute—to be evaded or forgotten. Under existing conditions, and in view of the record on other laws, it is reasonable to suppose that arrangements would be made to keep the law from being enforced.

enough in itself to remove any objectionable features.

By E. M. LOEW

Head of E. M. Loew's Theatres, Dorchester, Mass.

I BELIEVE the Brookhart Bill is a step in the direction of justice to the exhibitor because of the following reasons:

1. It eliminates block booking, which is and has been for a long time an unnecessary evil both as far as the public and the exhibitor are concerned. I think it is also injurious to the distributor because it eliminates competition to a certain extent. The distributor is assured of the sale of all his pictures whether they are good or poor.

2. It eliminates the "pig in the bag" buying of pictures. The exhibitor should not be forced to buy pictures he has never seen, any more than one would buy a pair of shoes without seeing them and trying them on. This block booking method of selling makes the exhibitor take all the chances, as he has to sell the pictures to the public.

3. It affords the opportunity to the independent exhibitor to bid for pictures with the producer-exhibitor. The booking control which the producer-exhibitor has in a large number of the states today amounts to almost a monopoly of the best first run motion pictures and in some places also the best second run photoplays. The independent exhibitor is compelled to sell out to the producer or affiliate with them because he is unable to go out and bid for pictures.

By V. U. YOUNG

AS A member of Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana I am committed to support the Brookhart Bill in its entirety without amendment. My thought is that if it should lead to Federal regulation of the industry that that outlook is safer than what we are now facing.

Franchise Plan Is Reported Ready As Block Booking Substitute

THERE has been no little speculation in film circles as to what action the producers and distributors would take if the Brookhart bill should become a law or if the Federal Trade Commission succeeded in making its order against block booking, applied at this time against Paramount, generally effective.

It is natural that the film companies should have at least considered ways and means of operating if this alleged mainstay of their selling plans were taken away from them.

It appears that at least one company has done something more than speculate and that an elaborate franchise plan has been evolved and worked out in detail which it is expected will accomplish the same results as the present block booking system

Just what the details of this new idea are is a closely guarded secret but it is known that six months have been utilized in getting it ready. It is said that the plan is not only practicable but also will pass the government's interpretation of what constitutes block booking.

In connection with the possibility of the franchise idea being adopted generally by distributors, it is pointed out that First National would be in a fortunate position in case of enforcement of anti-block booking either in the passage of the Brookhart bill or other legislative action.

Under the distribution arrangement which First National has with its franchise holders it would seem certain that no governmental action could be made to stick that prohibited the theatre owners identified with First National from doing as they pleased in their territories with any or all franchise pictures produced.

One of the provisions of the Brookhart bill makes the offering for sale of pictures not made, illegal, yet the First National franchise holders pay their percentage of every franchise picture whether or not the production is played in any theatre.

Some observers say that no governmental regulations or legislation could disturb this well known plan of First National operation and then argue that any other company adopting the same method of distribution would be entitled to the same treatment on the part of the government.

Federal Regulation Provided in Brookhart Bill

Senator Sees No Reason To Except Picture Industry From Government Regulations; February Hearings Scheduled

THE battle over the Brookhart anti block booking bill moved into first place in importance in film affairs this week.

R. F. Woodhull, President of the M.P.T.O.A., issued a statement, following a conference with Senator Brookhart at Washington. Mr. Woodhull quoted the Senator as saying that his bill surely provided for Government control and that to take this out would remove its strength.

"He saw no reason to except the motion picture industry from Federal regulation, as radio, railroads and many other industries are now operating under Government supervision," the Woodhull statement added.

At the request of Mr. Woodhull, Senator Brookhart saw Chairman Watson, of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, before which the bill is pending, and was told that the committee probably will not reach the bill until about February 9 because of the pressure of other business before it.

This will give opportunity to conclude the Contract Conference which begins in Chicago January 31 before hearings on the bill start.

In response to an inquiry as to whether he thought the law would be necessary if the new contract brought about the result sought by the legislation, Senator Brookhart expressed the belief that if the distributors and producers change the contract in conformity with his bill, it will show all the more need for the legislation so as to prevent a recurrence of the conditions to which his bill is directed as a remedial act.

Mr. Woodhull made the following statement:

"In an interview with Senator Brookhart of Iowa at the Capitol yesterday, January 19th, the Senator stated he fully realized the importance of the meeting of the new Contract Committee to be held in Chicago January 31st, and expressed the hope that the new conference would be productive and that many of our difficulties would be smoothed out.

"He can see the desirability of concluding the Contract Conference prior to the hearings on his Bill S-1667, and he stated, after a conference with Senator Watson of Indiana, Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee to which the Bill has been referred, that it was fairly safe to say at this time that the hearings on this Bill would not start prior to February 9th, by which time the Contract Committee should have completed its work, but that in no case would hearings be closed before the results of the Contract Conference were brought into the hearings.

"He further said that his Bill surely provided for Government Control and that to take this out would remove its strength. He saw no reason to except the motion picture industry from federal regulation, as radio, railroads and many other industries are now operating under Government supervision."

Bill Gains Further Support

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois has joined the ranks of the independent theatre owners' organizations that have officially endorsed the Brookhart Bill.

The organization, which is headed by Fred Wehrenberg, who owns several neighborhood theatres in St. Louis, Mo., favors the Brookhart measure because it is designed to control so-called blind booking, block booking, and to insure the fair allocation of motion pictures to all exhibitors.

The Brookhart Bill was the chief subject for discussion at a recent meeting of the Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois exhibitors and the organization passed a resolution urging all independent exhibitors to vigorously and actively support the measure and to write Senator Brookhart at Washington and thank him for having introduced the bill. The exhibitors have also been asked to write or wire or get into personal communication with their Senators and Congressmen and ask help for the bill.

The resolution adopted was as follows:

"Whereas there has been introduced in Congress by Senator Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa a bill concerning the general subject of blind booking, block booking and the fair allocation of motion pictures to exhibitors, and

"Whereas, the matters that would be corrected by the passage of this bill are the very aims of the independent exhibitors of the country as expressed through resolution adopted by them at the Federal Trade Conference held in New York City the week of October 10, 1927, and

Pettijohn Calls on All in Industry to Declare Attitude

C. C. PETTIJOHN, general counsel of the Hays organization, in a statement issued this week, called on everybody in the industry to take a positive and open stand on the Brookhart Bill. The Pettijohn statement follows:

"Senator Brookhart's statement to exhibitors who called on him in Washington, as reported in Film Daily of January 22nd, leaves no doubt either as to the meaning of the Brookhart Bill or the intent of its sponsors. He is quoted, speaking of the Bill, as follows: 'This will surely provide for Government control and that to take this out would remove its strength.'

"The issue is now clean-cut and everybody in the business understands its meaning and purport. The question now plainly is: Are you in favor of Government Control of the Motion Picture Business or against it?

"Those who advocate the Brookhart Bill are for Government Control. Those opposed to the Brookhart Bill are against Government Control. Now is the time for everybody to take a positive stand one way or another—in the open—and be responsible to his fellows for all time in the future for his position."

Chicago Contract Conference Has Opportunity To End Many Troubles, Says Myers

DECLARING that the meeting of exhibitors and distributors which begins in Chicago, January 31, on revision of the exhibition contract has an opportunity to end many troubles that now beset the industry, Abram F. Myers, of the Federal Trade Commission, issued an important statement late last week.

Commissioner Myers, who presided at the Trade Practice Conference held in New York in October, said, in a communication to R. F. Woodhull, President of the M. P. T. O. A.:

"The agreement at the Trade Practice Conference to negotiate a new standard contract was easily the outstanding accomplishment of the meeting. The coming meeting at Chicago will afford exhibitors and distributors an opportunity to continue the good work of the Conference in working out a definite adjustment of important differences along constructive and mutually satisfactory lines. It is earnestly to be hoped that this opportunity will be availed of, and that the proceedings will be characterized by the same spirit of cooperation, frankness and tolerance that prevailed at New York. If so, I am sure the meeting will be a success and that many of the troubles which now beset the industry will pass into history."

Sessions of the exhibitor and distributor committees on the contract will start in Chicago, January 31, and are expected to last at least a week.

It was reported in New York this week that the distributor conferees would offer the two "block booking concessions" which were included in the Six Points' Agreement adopted by the Trade Practice Conference in October. They would be prepared, so it was reported, to offer these concessions for inclusion in the new contract.

If the distributors succeed in having Clauses 3 and 4 of the Six Points' Agreement put into the new contract, they would then go to the Brookhart hearings in Washington, it is believed, and declare that outside regulation is unnecessary.

The text of Clauses 3 and 4 are as follows:

"3. If any exhibitor shall claim within a reasonable time prior to the date fixed for the exhibition of any picture included in any block leased by him that such picture will be offensive to the clientele of his theater because of racial or religious subject matter, such claim shall be arbitrated by the board of arbitration of the proper zone, and, if sustained, such exhibitor shall be relieved of obligation to take and pay for such picture.

"4. If any exhibitor who has purchased an entire block of pictures offered by any distributor so elects within a reasonable time prior to the date fixed for exhibition of any picture included in such block, such exhibitor may refuse to take such picture by paying one-half the allocated price thereof, provided that the picture so rejected out of any block shall not exceed ten per cent of the number included in such block, and, if a rejected picture is resold by the distributor, one-half the net price received on such resale shall be credited against the exhibitor's obligation in respect of such picture up to the amount of such obligation."

"Whereas, the passage of this bill would inure to the benefit of the theatre-going public by tending to prevent the trustification of the industry,

"Be it therefore resolved, that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, the organization representing the independent exhibitors in the City of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, embracing approximately eight million people, in general meeting assembled, do hereby assure Senator Brookhart of its unqualified approval and endorsement of his bill and its full cooperation in securing the enactment of same, and

"Be it further resolved, that this organization stands ready and willing to co-operate with any and all independent exhibitors and exhibitors' organizations toward the furtherance of this resolution, and,

"Be it further resolved, that this organization use every influence in its power to have the representatives of the States of Missouri and Illinois in Congress support in every manner this measure and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to Senator Brookhart immediately."

California exhibitors are "unalterably opposed to any legislation that savors of Federal control of this industry," states Thomas D. Van Osten, secretary-manager of the Allied Amusement Industries of California.

"I guess probably we are renegades out here, because of this stand," he observes.

"Personally, I believe the exhibitor end has brought this [the Brookhart Bill] about by incompetent leadership, and I can assure you that I regret to see the thing come into the halls of Congress for discussion."

Opinions of exhibitors of this territory on the Brookhart Bill are diversified, but sentiment is that relief is needed, according to C. E. Williams, president of the Nebraska and western Iowa exhibitor association.

"There is no doubt that the opinion of the exhibitors in this territory is that we need relief," he declares. "Personally, I am rather reluctant to go before Congress to have the affairs of our household set in order. If, however, our contract committee is unable to get the things we are justly entitled to, then I am whole-heartedly for the Brookhart Bill without any amendment."

Ohio Backs Measure

The M. P. T. O. of Ohio has sent a letter to each of its members officially endorsing the Brookhart Bill. A postcard was also enclosed on which the exhibitor was asked to state his attitude toward the bill and return same to association headquarters. Names and addresses of Senators and Congressmen were also given so that members in sympathy with the endorsement of the bill can state their approval in letters to their representatives.

Following is the copy used on trailers by Cleveland exhibitors:

"To our Patrons:

"Senator Smith W. Brookhart has introduced an Anti-Film-Trust Bill in the United States Senate.

"The passage of this bill will permit this and all other independently owned theatres to choose from a greater list the kind of pictures best suited for our audiences.

"Under existing conditions we are compelled to buy the entire block of pictures and are forced to show some pictures that are not adaptable to our clientele.

"We appeal to our patrons to kindly write to your Senator and Representative and ask them to support the Brookhart Anti-Film-Trust Block Booking Bill.

"The Management."

Northwest Launches Campaign

The Northwest territory is strong for the passage of the Brookhart bill and has launched a well organized campaign for the passage of the measure. The entire board of directors has taken a hand in the mustering of support for the bill. This is the result largely of a telegraphic poll made by President W. A. Steffes before his departure for New York.

Steffes wired every member of the board of directors and of the executive committee urging them to state their views on the Brookhart bill and the replies were overwhelmingly in favor of it. It was then decided to inaugurate the campaign in a big way and Greater Movie Season methods were applied.

Billboard space was contracted for, as were the advertising columns of the newspapers. Slides were prepared for the motion picture houses to acquaint the public with the details of the bill; posters were placed profusely in prominent places and circulars were strewn everywhere they may do some good.

Filmdom

"DRUMS OF LOVE," the new D. W. Griffith picture, which had its world premiere at the Liberty Theatre, New York, this week, is, in many ways, remarkable.

As a piece of direction, it ranks at the top, and, if we must single out one phase of the film in this regard, let it be the handling of the players.

In this field, Griffith has no rival. He evokes from his actors a certain, finished quality of mood and expression, hard to define, but bearing unmistakably the stamp of genius. Of this fact, "Drums of Love" is preeminent proof. Lionel Barrymore gives a performance which must be put down as a work of genius, both on his part and Griffith's.

There is also a new Mary Philbin in this film. Her response to the superb direction caused the Liberty audience to break into applause more than once; and the same was true in the case of Don Alvarado, in the role of the lover, and Tully Marshall, as the villain.

Barrymore's inspired rendering of his role places him with the select few who are genuinely great on the screen.

The story is the classic one of Paolo and Francesca, as it has come from Dante through others of the literary elect, but modernized by transference, for colorful background, to South America in the early Nineteenth century.

This adaptation, done skillfully by Gerrit J. Lloyd, gives opportunity for swift action, including a glimpse of battle scenes, picturesque costumes and scenery, and providing most effective contrast with the tragic love story.

All the Griffith command of suspense and tempo is present. The building of climaxes is done with the sure hand of a master.

In sum total, "Drums of Love" belongs to the new world of pictures. It is unusual—far out of the beaten path—a delicate and beautiful tragedy; one of the great love stories of the world; no sugar-coating, no compromise, of course, with the happy ending.

DANIEL E. POMEROY, president of the Martin Johnson African Expedition Corporation, presented the world's premiere of Martin and Osa Johnson's natural history picture, "Simba," at the Earl Carroll theatre on Monday evening, January 23, before a particularly distinguished audience which from time to time demonstrated its approval with rounds of applause.

"Simba" is undoubtedly one of the finest collections of wild animal photography extant and represents four years of toil by these two intrepid explorers on dozens of "safaris" through the African wilderness. It is undeniably a very valuable document of natural history which will by sheer force of educational value live for many years.

Comparison of pictures is one way by which reviewers in this field reach a decision as to their value at the box office and in defense of what this writer thinks is lack of understanding and appreciation, certain critics have without a moment's loss of time and the same amount of thought harked back to "Chang" as the means of determining just what "Simba" will be worth to those who show it. Now, Meriam Cooper's and Ernest Schoedsack's "Chang" was an excellently and cleverly made animal film, probably the cleverest from a point of dramatic value ever made and its worth has clearly been evidenced by the box office returns.

"SIMBA" is a different kind of picture. Little or no attempt has been made throughout the entire film to build up a story, with the possible exception of the last reel where considerable drama creeps in when a Lumbwa tribe works itself to a frenzy in preparation for a lion hunt. Inasmuch as it is a well known fact that either the natives or lions must live in this region one can scarcely doubt even the sincerity of this sequence.

The Johnson film is replete with beautiful scenic shots, several of which drew applause from the first night audience. There are winding rivers with banks lined with ferns twenty-five or thirty feet in height; there are streams writhingly alive with crocodiles, hippopotami and other denizens of African waters; in fact, practically every animal, including the giraffe, tribes of baboons, herds of elephants, rhinoceri, gnu and antelope, are shown—and all in close ups that took days and days of patient stalking, the right drift of the wind and vast amount of courage.

A NOVEL method of presentation accompanied "Simba" and for probably the first time a motion picture audience heard a complete musical program by phonograph record. The automatic Brunswick Panatrope was the instrument used,

Three Points

THE address on trade paper advertising made by G. B. Gallup before the A. M. P. A. last week is of more than passing importance.

We are entirely in accord with his deductions:

1.—That there should exist a wise and sympathetic community of interest between the trade press and the advertising manager.

2.—That trade paper advertising must be bought on a strict basis of value and only for the better merchandising of pictures.

If the industry is now on the much more stable basis that is claimed for it, then Mr. Gallup should find hearty cooperation among his associates on both these valued points.

It is, decidedly, to the best interests of all concerned that he should.

We would like to add a third point to Mr. Gallup's constructive platform. It is this: that trade advertising in this business be put on exactly the same basis as prevails in every other industry in this land—namely, a budget, based upon a percentage of the gross sales. In other fields that percentage runs from three to four. The intangible prices for product in this field would seem, obviously to any advertising expert, to demand a higher percentage. But, if you will, make it less. Only, make it. And—I am talking to the bosses—put your advertising and your advertising men on a basis of approved business methods —and self respect.

AFTER several months of considering exhaustive testimony, the Australian Film Commission has admitted its inability to discover an American film combine in that market. During that period 288 witnesses have been heard, only one of whom, Senator Guthrie, has asserted definitely his knowledge of the existence of such an organization. Because of this fact Senator Guthrie was recently recalled before the Commission now sitting at Canberra and requested to produce evidence verifying his allegations.

When Senator Guthrie was recalled he was asked by the Commission to present the evidence which he had given it when the examining body was a parliamentary joint committee. In reply, he said that there were two combines in Australia which were forced by American producers to accept films which they had never seen mentioned in a three years' block-booking contract. In reply, one of the members of the commission stated the evidence obtained indicates that the Australian combines have been using the "big stick" over the American companies.

Another commissioner reminded Senator Guthrie that, in his previous appearance, he had stated that proprietors in the big Australian groups were unwilling to come forward and give evidence to support his (Senator Guthrie's) statements. This, the commissioner said, has not been found to be true and he asked the witness to produce definite evidence. Senator Guthrie did not reply to this request, whereat another member of the Commission (Senator Duncan) expressed the opinion that the witness had no evidence to support his statement. At this point, Senator Guthrie again maintained that an American combine exists which has a stranglehold on the industry throughout the world and that its effect is seen in the difficulty in having British motion pictures shown in Australia.

The Chairman of the Commission (Mr. Marks) then asked if the witness had evidence to prove his statement, to which no reply was made. Another member thereupon asked Senator Guthrie if he believed the alleged combine operates against the interests of British and Australian pictures, to which the witness answered affirmatively. The same member then asked if the witness believed that legislative action should be taken to prevent Hoyt's and the Union Theatres (local, exhibiting organizations) from carrying on their business. Senator Guthrie replied in the negative but said there should be a quota for Empire and Australian films.

Senator Guthrie came into some prominence early in the life of the Film Commission by launching a violent attack against the alleged American "film combine." As a result of his assertions the commission has inquired throughout its hearings for further evidence to support these allegations, with the result mentioned above.

After complimenting the Tampa papers he said: "I have only one suggestion to make, and that is that you pay more attention to the movies. Judging from the fine theatres here, and the films which are of this year's vintage, and released practically simultaneously with those on Broadway, there must be a vast following for the pictures in Tampa.

WILLIAM R. FRAZER, general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, takes decided issue with a recent statement that the big four of pictures, Harold, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford, are "negligible factors when the product of the coming year is considered, because they cannot be counted on for any specified number of productions.

"Far from being negligible factors, they are most important, even though their output might total only one picture a year," asserts Mr. Frazer. "When their pictures are released they furnish box office stimulation and arouse from their lethargy countless numbers of theatregoers who for one reason or another, and most often a run of poor pictures, have dropped the habit of picture going.

"Pictures starring Lloyd, Fairbanks, Chaplin and Pickford are the sparks that set off the fire of enthusiasm for millions of persons.

"More than that, this quartet virtually set the fashion for motion pictures. As they do, so do their producers. If they were to fall down with inferior product the entire industry would have to suffer along with them.

Franchise Plan Reported Ready as Substitute

Whether or not the Brookhart bill even in amended form will become a law there is much apprehension on the part of the producers and distributors that as an outgrowth of the bill similar bills will be introduced in state legislatures, or that the results which the Brookhart bill is supposed to obtain, will be secured through the Department of Justice or the Federal Trade Commission.

Anyway, it seems a reasonable theory that the distributors have not been marking time on the Federal Trade Commission order and have made such plans as they are able in the event of actual effective disbarment of the use of block booking.

Pantages Expansion Looked For as Result of Present Tour

THE present trip of Alexander Pantages through the Southern states is said to be for the purpose of making a survey of conditions in the different cities with the idea of expansion of the Pantages operations.

After a visit to New Orleans, Pantages spent a day in Atlanta with Willard C. Patterson, Southern division manager of Universal Theatres, inspecting Universal's Capitol, where Pantages vaudeville is shown. After looking over the Atlanta field, Pantages went to Birmingham, where his new house opened recently, and then to Memphis and Kansas City.

This trip of Pantages through the south was the first he has made over that territory for several years, and it was immediately anticipated that it would be followed shortly by some sort of announcement regarding the company's expansion through the South. Following the completion of his survey in Kansas City, Pantages was expected to go directly to his home in California.

Canon Chase Airs Views

Gives Support to BrookhartBill But Would Put Control Under Special Commission

WHILE Canon Sheafe Chase will give his support to the Brookhart bill, he is of the impression that better results would be obtained under it if, in the event of passage, supervision was vested in a special commission to be created, rather than in the Federal Trade Commission. He is of the opinion that the trade commission's duties are already too diversified and that, consequently, they could not devote the required time to motion pictures.

In substantiation of his argument, Dr Chase points to other industries over which supervision is vested in special commissions, such as the meat packers, railroads, radio and Federal bank currency. He can see no reason why a special commission serving in behalf of exhibitors could not work just as effectively.

In discussing the Brookhart measure Dr. Chase said:

"Heretofore many exhibitors have been afraid to commit themselves, but with an independent commission exercising authority they would be able to express themselves freely in all matters affecting their welfare."

Dr. Chase declared that the arguments against the Brookhart bill are based principally on the feared government control of motion pictures, but that that angle would readily be overcome by the appointment of a special commission created for the administration of the proposed law.

It was revealed by Dr. Chase that the Federal Motion Picture Council of America, a nation-wide church organization sponsored by Protestant faiths, was ready to present a bill of its own with regard to the motion picture situation but that it was being withheld in favor of the Brookhart bill. The church measure would place the supervision of the industry in the hands of a special commission and guard against political influence or graft affecting the work of the proposed body.

Another Quota Bill Up

New Zealand Parliament Is Considering Measure Very Similar to British Law

A REPORT to the Department of Commerce in Washington is to the effect that the New Zealand Parliament now has before it for consideration a quota bill, which in the event of passage would become effective the first of next year. In many respects the measure is said to be similar to that recently passed in Britain in an effort to aid the British industry. While considerable interest is reported in New Zealand in the proposed bill, it is also said that indications are it will not pass during the present Parliamentary session.

According to the conditions of the bill renters would be required to handle at least 7½ per cent of British and New Zealand films. It also provides for the licensing of film renters from January 1st next, coincidental with the start of the quota requirements.

As in the British quota bill, the conditions provide that the quota will be increased annually until 1936. Just what the annual scale of increase is has not yet been divulged, nor has the maximum percentage that will ultimately be reached. It is presumed it will increase at the same rate as does the British bill.

New Zealand exhibitors will be compelled to show five per cent of British and New Zealand pictures the year beginning next January 1st. The bill provides a tax on gross rentals of five per cent for New Zealand films and seven and one-half per cent for British. On all foreign made films, including American product, a tax of twelve and one-half per cent will be charged exhibitors.

While every effort is being made by proponents of the measure to rush it through to a successful passage in order to protect local product, it is not thought the sentiment of the present Parliament at this time is favorably disposed toward it.

November Film Exports Amounted to $662,844

Exports of motion picture films for the month of November have been recorded by the Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., as totaling 21,004,590 feet valued at $662,844, as compared with 25,586,617 valued at $670,676 in October.

With the exception of negatives, all classes showed a decrease in value for the month. Exports of positives for November totaled 16,361,979 feet valued at $422,759, against 18,815,776 feet valued at $461,535 in October, and shipments of raw stocks were 2,337,737 feet valued at $73,111, against 4,741,655 valued at $110,510. Exports of negatives increased in value from 737,293 feet valued at $83,277 in October to 727,021 valued at $141,599. Shipments to non-contiguous territories were reported as 1,577,853 feet valued at $25,415 in November, against 1,291,893 feet valued at $15,354 in the previous month.

Fait Becomes Manager of Buenos Aires Exchange

William Fait, former manager of First National's Mexican office, has been promoted to take over the supervision of First National's distributing interests in Buenos Aires. He sails January 29 on the S.S. American Legion for his new post. His company's product is now being handled by Max Glucksman and Metro-Goldwyn and Mr. Fait, it is understood, will center his activities around these two concerns.

Robert McFarlane, formerly assistant manager of the company's Mexican exchange, has succeeded Mr. Fait as manager of the Mexico City branch.

Canadian Theatre Building Declined in 1927

Figures have been compiled under Government auspices to show the extent of theatre building in Canada during the past two years. The statistics give the value of theatre construction contracts awarded in Canadian cities during 1927 as $1,519,000, as compared with the total value of theatre contracts during 1926 as $2,433,000.

Anti - Censorship Bill Introduced at Albany

THEY are getting right after motion picture censorship in the New York state Legislature, Assemblyman Irwin Steingut, of New York City, a Democrat, having introduced a bill during the past week, which would amend the Education law of the state to the end that it would wipe out the censorship bureau, which is now housed in the Education Department. Mr. Steingut has ideas of his own relative to motion picture censorship, and there is evidence that the sparks will fly when he gets up later on to ask support for his measure.

According to Mr. Steingut's belief, it is high time that motion picture censorship in New York state, at least, was a thing of the past. In this he is in perfect accord with the Governor. According to Mr. Steingut's bill he would have it end on June 30 next, at which time all of the records in the Bureau would be turned over to Secretary of State Robert Moses.

Fox Buys West Coast Theatres and Interest in First Nat'l

Gets Control of 300 Additional Theatres and Partnership in First National With Stanley; One of Industry's Biggest Deals

ONE of the biggest deals in the history of the industry was closed this week, when it was officially announced that William Fox had bought the controlling interest in West Coast Theatres, comprising more than 300 houses in California, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Wisconsin, Nevada and Iowa.

This was brought about through the purchase by Fox of the capital stock of the Wesco Holding Corporation and carries with it joint control of First National with the Stanley Company of America.

Stanley and West Coast obtained control of First National several months ago, management of the production-distribution concern being vested for a period of years in the Stanley Company.

Fox bought for a cash consideration, the amount of which was not made public, the Richard Hoyt block of Wesco shares, which includes the Hayden, Stone & Co. interest, and that of a number of First National franchise holders.

Whether this gigantic deal will be followed by the merger of First National with Fox, or the merger of Stanley with Fox carrying First National along with it, remains to be seen.

Mr. Fox stated that Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager of West Coast Theatres, would continue in charge of operating that circuit, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Executive offices of Wesco will be maintained at the Fox headquarters in New York.

In obtaining the majority interest in the Wesco Holding Corp., Fox gets control of Midwesco Theatres, Inc., subsidiary owned outright by Wesco, and embracing the Saxe theatres in Wisconsin and the Alexander Frank theatres in Wisconsin.

Participating in the deal were William Fox; John Dillon, of Hayden, Stone & Co.; and Mr. Franklin, who arrived in New York recently from the Coast.

Fox already held 34 per cent interest in Wesco, and the latter controls North American Theatres, 100 per cent; Golden State Theatre Corp., 80 per cent; Pacific Northwest Theatres, 92 per cent; Saxe Amusement Co., 100 per cent; Frank Amusement Co., of Iowa, 75 per cent; and 20 per cent interest in the Golden State Theatre and Realty Corp.

The Fox chain, through the new deal, is expanded to 340 theatres. According to the Fox announcement, the total seating capacity of the West Coast circuit is 350,000, and the gross receipts $700,000 a week, or $35,000,000 a year. In 1927, it was stated, 105,000,000 paid admissions to these theatres.

The value of the West Coast chain was put in the announcement at $100,000,000.

It was also stated that Fox is progressing with his plans for a chain of key city houses, and that, in addition to those in work, 25 others seating 5,000 or more will be built in the next two years. The total financial outlay for this program will be, it is said, about $150,000,000.

''These projects average between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 each. Striking an average of $6,000,000 for each theatre the total would therefore reach $150,000,000,'' Mr. Fox said.

''In Brooklyn we are building a theatre of over 5,000 capacity. In Detroit, a house with upwards of 5,000 seats will be completed in September. Likewise, in St. Louis, a 5,000-seat theatre will be ready in September. The San Francisco theatre, seating 5,500, will be finished in October. In Los Angeles, a house identical in capacity with the San Francisco house, will be built. Twenty-five more like these will be finished in two years.''

''The acquisition of the Roxy Theatre undoubtedly was a significant stroke,'' Mr. Fox contiuned. ''It involved the greatest theatre in the world, seating 6,200. This new venture, however, is far more important, and, frankly, I consider it one of the greatest steps in my career.''

On the West Coast circuit payroll there are 7,500 employees, it is said. Combining this with the Fox Film Corp. and Fox Theatres employees, it was said that there are 27,500 employees on the payroll of all the Fox enterprises.

"4 Sons," Fox Special, at Gaiety, February 13

''FOUR SONS'' the Fox Films special production made by John Ford and featuring James Hall, Francis X. Bushman, Jr., Charles Morton and George Meeker in the title roles, will open Monday evening, February 13, at the Gaiety Theatre in New York. Winfield R. Sheehan will arrive in New York Tuesday, it is said, to supervise the opening.

The picture will have a special musical setting composed by Erno Rapee. The story deals with the experiences of a woman at Ellis Island and her subsequent wanderings in New York. Margaret Mann has this important role.

Laemmle Made Honorary Member by Pressmen

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has been notified by the Association of Foreign Press Correspondents in the United States that they have elected him an honorary member of their organization, an honor so far extended to only about ten noteworthy men. In communicating the message, Sudney J. Clarke of the London Daily Telegraph, secretary of the association, stressed the fact that the press correspondents laid much emphasis on Laemmle's efforts towards establishing international good will and also his friendly interest in members of the press.

"Sadie Thompson" to Play at Rivoli Soon

''Sadie Thompson,'' Gloria Swanson's second production for United Artists following ''The Loves of Sunya,'' her first, will come to the United Artists' Rivoli Theatre in New York on Saturday, February 4th. On the day before the picture now playing at the Rivoli, ''Gentlemen Prefer Blondes,'' will have moved.

Washington, D. C., was the scene recently of a premiere of the new Swanson vehicle. It opened there at the Columbia Theatre, where it established a new record for the house.

Amusement Tax Increase Suggested in Montreal

Ald. Leon Trepanier of the Montreal City Council has come out with the recommendation that the Quebec Provincial Government pass legislation authorizing the Montreal civic administration to make an increase in the amusement tax at Montreal theatres so that the city would gain more revenue. Under the present arrangement, the amusement tax collected in Montreal in a year runs over $700,000, which is divided equally between the city and the Province, the Provincial share being turned over to hospitals and charities.

Milne and Adamson New Columbia Scenarists

Peter Milne and Ewart Adamson have joined the scenario staff of Columbia Pictures. Milne's first work will be the continuity for ''The Sporting Age,'' adapted by Elmer Harris, Columbia's scenario editor, from the original story by Armand Kaliz. Adamson is working on an untitled original that has a foreign setting.

Londoners Plan Gigantic Chain to Combat American Invasion

SIR WALTER GIBBONS, well known theatrical producer of London, in association with F. A. Szarvasy, London financier, is planning a chain of 100 theatres to combat the threat of invasion of an American chain of theatres in Great Britain.

Already this pair have assembled a chain of sixty music halls and cinemas purchased at a cost said to have been $25,000,000. This number will be increased to 100 as soon as additional houses can be acquired or built. Specifications have already been submitted for a new 5,000-seat theatre to be built along the lines of the Paramount in New York City.

The policy of the houses will be new to England as they will present combination programs of pictures and vaudeville. There will also be Vitaphone productions of stage plays, color photography, and vast orchestras to present the music. Admission prices will be exceptionally low, the cost of a loge seat being approximately 36 cents.

Wall Street News Sees Big Year Ahead

Activities of Past Year Will React to Increased Benefit of Industry During 1928

SUMMING up the activities of the past year, and looking ahead to results from numerous of these activities, the Wall Street News foresees a prosperous year for the motion picture industry. The improvement in the business is attributed largely to the method of chain operation which has been applied during the past few years and to the concentration of production, distribution and exhibition into single organizations.

The article in the Wall Street News points out the several important consolidations of producing and exhibiting units, the completion of theatre expansion plans by some of the companies, and the continuance of theatre construction by others. These will all serve to make for an even more prosperous year during 1928, it is predicted.

The article reads in part as follows:

''Earnings of the companies engaged in motion picture activity in 1927 are understood to have averaged in the main higher than those of 1926.

''This has been especially the case with the larger corporations, notably Paramount and M-G-M. Some of the smaller corporations may have experienced somewhat lower earnings than in 1926, but earnings of these concerns were not substantially under those of the previous year.

''The haphazard, chance-taking days of the motion picture are a thing of the past as far as the major corporations, and practically all of the smaller ones, too, are concerned. There is now an established outlet for the product. It is possible to set quotas for production which can be filled and the sales of the pictures are virtually assured almost upon completion.

''Trend in the industry, particularly in recent years, has been concentration of production, distribution and exhibition into single organizations. These units correspond respectively in other industries to manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing.

''Many of the larger producers in past years acquired their own distributing agencies. But in more recent years development has been centered primarily on the exhibition of the product. To this end of the business many companies have applied the method of chain operation so successful in merchandising such commodities as tobacco, drugs, five and ten-cent articles, groceries, etc. This, in most instances, has been found to be highly profitable.

''Whereas the industry in its infancy was forced to depend on its own financing resources to extend its business, today leading companies are able to obtain commercial credits from representative institutions throughout the country, thus bearing testimony to the opinion of the banking element that the industry now is on a sound basis.''

3 United Artists Road Shows for Broadway

BESIDES "Drums of Love," the D. W. Griffith production which opened last Tuesday at the Liberty Theatre for an extended run, United Artists Corporation will have "Tempest," starring John Barrymore, and "The Passionate Adventure," co-featuring Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky, running at $2 prices in legitimate houses on Broadway.

"Tempest" will come to Broadway some time during the Spring, it is announced. The Colman-Banky film will be given its first showing in New York in about six weeks.

Several Changes in Pathe Selling Force

Several changes have been made in the sales organization of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Stanley C. Jacques, district manager of District No. 4 for some time, has become divisional sales manager of the Central West with headquarters in the New York office. Robert Mochrie, branch manager at Pittsburgh, succeeds Mr. Jacques at the District No. 4 post. He will make his headquarters in Cincinnati. Filling the position left vacant by Mr. Mochrie at Pittsburgh is B. M. Moran. George Collins is the new short subject sales manager there.

Fred Aiken, short subject division sales manager in the central west, has been transferred to New York from Chicago, his former office; he continues in the same capacity. Ralph Morrow, district manager of district No. 7, has resigned, effective January 29. Dan Michalove succeeds him and will have his headquarters in Atlanta.

E. C. Leeves is again filling his old post as branch manager of the Dallas office and J. L. McKinney is the new short subject sales manager at Dallas. Another resignation is that of C. U. Martin as branch manager of New Haven. This office will be in charge of L. J. Hacking, district manager, until Mr. Martin's successor is named.

New Companies Chartered at Albany, New York

Motion picture companies incorporating in New York State at Albany showed an increase during the past week, with the result that the following companies were chartered by the department of state: Scalo Productions, Inc., $60,000. C. T. Scaife, Bernard Lohmuller, Frederic C. Bellinger, New York City; Rostate Realty Corporation, capitalization not stated, G. W. Byrne, H. Fahrer, F. G. Brown, New York City; Burt Automatic Slide Company, Inc., $10,000, John S. Herman, Brooklyn; Mayer Sher, Philadelphia, Pa.; Dora Newstead, New York City; Padnic Operating Corporation, capitalization not stated, Edwin Gower, Ina Israelite, Belle S. Salerno, Giusseppe Cassana, New York City; Naro Corporation, capitalization not stated, Henry D. Goram, Nathan and Albert Robbins, Syracuse; John Van Bruten, Inc., $10,000, Bernard M. L. Ernst, Melville M. Cane, David J. Fox, New York City.

Syracuse Movie Fan Club Celebrates Birthday

The Herald Cinema Critics Club, organized in Syracuse, New York, by Chester B. Bahn, dramatic critic of ''The Syracuse Herald,'' celebrated its first birthday recently with a dinner for the members and invited guests.

When the organization was first formed it immediately received the support of local exhibitors as well as producers and distributors. It has become so popular, it is said, that there is a large possibility of its becoming a national organization with headquarters in cities throughout the nation.

Pathe Warns Against Fake Canvassers Selling Stock

Pathe Exchange, Inc., having learned that there are house-to-house canvassers going about New York City offering to sell what they call ''stock'' in ''The King of Kings,'' the Pathe-De Mille release, has issued a warning that these canvassers are crooked, as no stock has ever been or ever will be issued on ''The King of Kings.'' The company would deem it a favor if anyone who is approached to buy this ''stock'' will notify the home office at 35 West 45th St.

Northwest Exhibitors Playing Out Old Dates

THE refusal of exhibitors to buy new product before playing out the old is the reason behind the present tough buying in the Northwest district says the "M. P. Record," one of the regional publications.

The exhibitor was advised, the publication states, "that he must buy only what he needs. And he is buying just what he needs, and playing out the old contract before he buys anew." This is a result of the change in the exchanges' custom each year of cancelling old contracts when selling the new schedule.

Burr Completes Cast for New Hines Vehicle

"Chinatown Charlie," C. C. Burr's newest production for First National starring Johnny Hines, is assuming celluloid form at the Tec Art studio in Hollywood under the direction of Charles Hines now that the long list of players has been finally chosen. Heading the cast, believed to be the largest and most varied for any of Hines' comedies, is Louise Lorraine, borrowed from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. In an elaborate Chinese cabaret scenes a troupe of acrobats, the Flying Mazettis, will be featured.

Comedy sequences already completed include scenes in the Old Bowery Mission, a chop suey palace, a trip aboard a sight-seeing bus into Chinatown and a wax works shop. At the present time the Burr unit is working on a set that represents New York's Chinatown.

Promotions in Ranks of Tiffany-Stahl Personnel

New promotions in the organization of Tiffany-Stahl productions are those of George Calderes and M. M. Lentz, two salesmen, the former having been appointed branch manager of the Denver exchange and the latter now assuming charge of the San Francisco office.

Calderes and Lentz are both from Los Angeles. Calderes takes the place formerly assigned Able Davis.

Warners Making Film in Spite of Studio Closing

Warner Bros. began filming a new comedy, "Five and Ten Cent Annie," last week in spite of their plan to shut down the studio until late in February. It was decided to have Louise Fazenda, one of the players in the picture, work during the shut down as the new picture is one of her vehicles scheduled for spring release and because she has been busy for several weeks at other studios prior to the shutdown.

Forthcoming Chaney Film Will Be "Chinatown"

Lon Chaney's next starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to follow "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," will be "Chinatown." A. P. Younger, now working on the story, recently came to New York, where he spent some time around the oriental section studying local atmosphere. William Nigh, it is announced, will wield the megaphone over the new Chaney vehicle.

Hess Denies Charges of Board Intimidation

Hays Organization Counsel Says He Has At No Time Tried to Influence Arbitration Decisions

GABRIEL L. HESS, general attorney of the Hays organization, denies emphatically the charges made by J. B. Clinton, Duluth exhibitor, last week that Hess has attempted to intimidate or influence the Minneapolis arbitration board in arriving at decisions in film matters. He also denies ever having attempted such procedure with any of the other 31 boards in the United States.

Th charge against Hess was made by Clinton as the result of the controversy in the Northwest territory through which Warner Bros. were denied arbitration privileges, and applied to the civil court for a writ restraining the board from taking such action.

In denying the Clinton charge, Hess said:

"I read the statement made by J. B. Clinton setting forth his reasons for the withdrawal of the exhibitor arbitrators of the Minneapolis board of arbitration claiming that I attempted to intimidate the arbitrators of that board by setting myself up as a disinterested seventh arbitrator, and that my conduct would result in making it impossible for the members of the board of arbitration to act with a free mind.

"At no time have I ever in any wise attempted to intimidate or to influence the arbitrators of the Minneapolis board of arbitration, or of any of the other 31 boards of arbitration in the United States or to set myself up as a seventh arbitrator. Nor has my conduct in the past in any wise made it impossible for distributor or exhibitors to honestly reach a just determination of the matters submitted to them as members of the boards of arbitration.

"In the controversy, concerning which Mr. Clinton made his statement, the members of the Minneapolis board of arbitration and the parties to the controversy requested Mr. Pettijohn and me to give an opinion and decision. This was done."

Vitagraph, Inc., of New York, obtained an order in Hennepin county district court this week directing the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the Northwest to show cause why it should not be entitled to hearings in dispute before a board of arbitration. The order was issued before Judge Thomas H. Salmon, and is returnable next week. The New York company, in asking for the order, charged that it had been illegally barred from the privilege of settling controversies with northwest film exhibitors before an arbitration board composed of distributors and theatre owners.

Tiffany-Stahl Completes 2 More Productions

"The Tragedy of Youth" and "The Clash" (tentative title) are two more feature productions on the Tiffany-Stahl schedule of 24 pictures for 1927-28 that were recently completed. In the former George Archainbaud directed Patsy Ruth Miller, Warner Baxter and Buster Collier. In the latter picture Antonio Moreno and Claire Windsor were directed by Christy Cabanne.

Seymour FBO's Hollywood Publicity Director

James Seymour, former director of publicity of Harvard University, has been made publicity director of the F B O studios in Hollywood, succeeding Earl Wingart.

Sound Reproducing Equipment Being Made on Volume Scale

SOUND reproducing equipment is now being produced on a volume scale by the General Electric Company at its plant in Schenectady, and by the Westinghouse company at Pittsburgh, according to announcement made by F B O, in which company a few weeks ago the General Electric Company, Westinghouse Company and Radio Corporation of America acquired a substantial interest. It was not thought when the original announcement was made that volume production would be under way for some time.

Joseph P. Kennedy, president, and Calvin W. Brown, vice-president of F B O, were the guests last week at Schenectady of David Sarnoff, vice-president of the Radio Corporation, and C. W. Stone, of the General Electric Company. The F B O executives were shown the extensive manufacturing resources which General Electric Company had converted to the manufacture of sound reproducing equipment, and were advised that the Westinghouse plant at Pittsburgh had equally as large a factory in operation.

Three laboratories, containing complete apparatus, have already been equipped. One is at the studios of the Radio Corporation of America in New York, one at the General Electric Company in Schenectady, and the third also at Schenectady. The latter is to be transported intact to the F B O studios in Hollywood and operated under the supervision of the General Electric Company engineers.

More Partnership Spirit Needed, Says Laemmle

"U" Chief, Celebrating Anniversary, Says Producers, Exhibitors Should Work as One

When producers and exhibitors can conduct their affairs more along partnership lines there will be much more rapid progress and an abundance of prosperity in the motion picture industry, according to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Laemmle is soon to celebrate the 22nd anniversary of his entry into the motion picture business and therefore feels well qualified to discuss a subject of this character.

Here is what the veteran Universal chief has to say regarding the matter:

"Many people, producers, distributors and exhibitors alike, seem to lose sight of the fundamental idea upon which our industry is built. This idea is that those who make pictures, those who market them and those who exhibit them are fundamentally partners. The public, not the theatre, is the ultimate consumer, and the producer and the distributor are just as much concerned with the public as the theatre man. The viewpoint of all concerned should be focused on the screen, rather than on each other.

"The motion picture business is the same as any other business as regards the relations between the manufacturer, merchant and customer. The success of the business is based on satisfied customers. Satisfying the ultimate consumer is the joint problem of all, the producer to make pictures that the public will want to see, and the exhibitor to select and exhibit them in the proper way.

"It is a straightforward merchandising proposition. It is similar to any merchandising proposition. And the more that the viewpoint of everyone concerned is shifted to the merchandising angle, rather than the price angle, the better co-operation there will be and the more satisfaction on the part of the public.

"There should be no 'dotted line' pictures, made solely with sales contracts as the objective. Neither should there be 'dotted line' salesmanship, with the signing of the contract as the supreme end of all effort. Pictures should be pointed at the screen. Salesmanship should be pointed at the screen just as surely.

"Such salesmanship is linked with service. Service that takes the form of square dealing, assistance in presenting the picture to the public and, back of all this, a fertilization of the public mind in favor of the picture.

"The ideal partnership co-operation between producer and exhibitor is obtainable by the following efforts on the part of each: The producer should strive to make pictures absolutely keyed to the public taste, he should aid the exhibitor in marketing these pictures, by general campaigns as well as by specific advertising aids, and, most important of all, he should play square in his dealings with the exhibitor, treating him as any manufacturer would treat a retailer whose business and whose prosperity is of mutual concern.

"The exhibitor should regard the producer in the light of a friendly and interested source of his picture supply. He should meet the producer half-way and recognize that the square-shooting producer is primarily trying to turn out pictures that will bring the public to the exhibitor's theatre. He is not primarily trying to get the exhibitor's signature on a contract. Also, that in the making of such pictures, the producer must frequently involve himself in an exceptional outlay, and naturally deserves increased returns.

"Finally, the exhibitor owes it to himself and to the picture to market it in the best possible way—which includes taking advantage of the many publicity, advertising and exploitation aids placed at his disposal by the maker of the picture. In this way he is putting the final touches to the operation of the ideal partnership co-operation by which this industry should make and deliver its product to the ultimate consumer.

"I long have guided the Universal organization into these channels. To the limit of human ability, we are making pictures with the greatest possible audience appeal. In the matter of distribution, the square-deal policies of Universal have become an axiom in the industry. In the matter of co-operation marketing, we go to extreme measures in aiding the exhibitor, not only in the current pushing of individual pictures by advertising accessories of tried and proven value and design and by campaigns pointed, not at the exhibitor, but at the public, but also by fertilization of the public's interest in good screen entertainment in general and Universal pictures in particular.

New Single-Reel Series Deals With Science

A new idea in the making of short subjects has been used by Charles F. McManus, who has just completed a set of four single reel subjects. Science for the first time has been brought to the screen in these pictures, which were made around southern California and mainly at the Mount Wilson observatory at Pasadena, according to Mr. McManus, who stated that in addition to the scientific angle contained they had a travelog feature as well as a touch of comedy.

"The Pictorial Digest" is the name given this idea. In addition to this first set plans have been made to produce three other sets of four each. They will cover various other subjects of scientific interest to theatre goers.

Before producing these pictures, Mr. McManus managed theatres on the Pacific coast for eight years.

Quebec Legislature in Anti-Theatre Moves

Legislators of the Province of Quebec, now attending the session of the Provincial Legislature at Quebec City, have announced drastic moves affecting the picture theatres of the Province.

Premier L. A. Taschereau of Quebec announced on January 21 that the Government would enter action against several moving picture theatre companies as a test case on Sunday shows, this subject having become both a political and religious issue in the Province. The point to be tested is whether the Lord's Day Act, a Federal statute which prohibits Sunday performances, can be enforced in the Province of Quebec or not.

Hon. Jacob Nicol, Provincial treasurer, gave notice in the Quebec Legislative Assembly on January 17 of a bill to prohibit the entry of children to motion picture theatres when such children are under the age of 16 years. Hitherto such children have been permitted to attend shows when accompanied by parents or adult guardians.

Both measures have aroused the attention of exhibitors and the latter are taking steps to meet the proposals.

Sennett Plant Active Again After Shutdown

The Mack Sennett studios are again actively engaged in the business of manufacturing two-reel comedies for Pathe release. Three companies are now at work on stories prepared for them during the three weeks' shut down over the vacation season.

Composed of Mary Ann Jackson, Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt, the Smith Family are again performing under the direction of Alf Goulding in a new comedy. Daphne Pollard, the Sennett bathing girls, Johnny Burke and others have begun a new girl comedy under Harry Edwards' direction. Paul Whitman is directing Billy Bevan, Vernon Dent and Dot Farley in another new comedy.

New Fox Western Star at Work on First Vehicle

Fox Films' new western player, Rex King, whom Fox hopes to nurse along so that he will eventually be able to take the place of Tom Mix, who has announced his intention to quit making westerns, has started "Wild West Romance," his first effort. While he is launched into the new production the Fox staff of writers are engaged in composing stories for him.

Tom Mix has also started his last picture for Fox Films, titled "The Painted Post."

Charles Farrell Extends Contract With Fox

Charles Farrell, young leading man who climbed to prominence with Janet Gaynor in "Seventh Heaven," has signed a new five-year contract by the terms of which he will appear exclusively in Fox Films pictures. He is now working in "The Red Dancer of Moscow," which Fox plans to present at the Roxy in New York next September.

Defense in Miles Theatre Case Scores Point

The defense scored a point this week in the Miles theatre case involving the profits of the Garrick theatre in Minneapolis and the disposition of its stock. Judge W. A. Cant in federal court granted the defense motion for vacation of an order requiring cancellation of 34,672 shares of stock of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate on condition that the shares be allowed to remain in the custody of the Merchants Trust Co., St. Paul, where they had been placed as collateral for a loan. The Amusement Trust Estate, owner of the theatre, is controlled by William Hamm and Finkelstein & Ruben. Judge Cant previously had ordered the firm to return to the stockholders $585,000 in profits of the theatre, which was originally the Miles but which later became the Garrick when taken over by F. & R.

No Reductions in Ontario Tax Forthcoming

Formal announcement has been made by Hon. J. D. Monteith, Ontario Provincial Treasurer, that there will be no further reduction in the Ontario amusement tax at the coming session of the Provincial Legislature at Toronto.

Rumors have been current that the Government would remove the tax on tickets up to 50 cents, he declared, following the removal in 1927 of the impost on theatre tickets up to 25 cents. No further cut could be considered by the Government for the present, it is said.

2 Columbia Productions Finished, Another Started

"Lady Raffles" and "So This Is Love" were completed last week at the studios of Columbia Pictures in Hollywood. Simultaneous with their completion, another production, "A Woman's Way," was begun.

"Lady Raffles" was made under the supervision of Earl Hudson, who is also credited with the adaptation. "So This Is Love" was made by Frank Capra. "A Woman's Way" is being directed by Edmund Mortimer. The story concerns Paris night life.

"Leave It to Me" Tryon's Next for Universal

The title of Glenn Tryon's next venture into comedy for Universal will be titled "Leave It to Me." It concerns the adventures of a correspondence school detective. Tryon has just finished the third of his comedies for Universal entitled "Hot Heels."

New Dates for W. Pa. and W. Va. T. O. Meet

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia will hold their eighth annual convention in Pittsburgh on April 15, 16 and 17, instead of April 22, 23 and 24 as announced some time ago in the News. They will convene in the William Penn Hotel. On Sunday there will be a pre-release showing at one of the first run theatres in Pittsburgh for the out of town delegates and their friends who will arrive on Sunday.

Paramount-Famous-Lasky Net Profits Show 44% Increase in Year

NET profits of Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation for the year 1927 show an estimated increase of 44 per cent over those of 1926, according to a statement just issued. The estimated net profits for 1927 are given as $8,050,000, as against $5,600,000 in 1926.

The 1927 figures are the estimated profits after depreciation and taxes, and include the company's undistributed share of earnings of Balaban & Katz, a 65 per cent owned subsidiary.

The statement reveals that the 1927 net profit, after allowing for preferred dividends, is equal to $12.83 per share on 879.327 shares of common stock, the average issued and outstanding during the year, as compared with the 1926 profits which were equal to $10.88 per share on 459,000 shares of common stock, the average issued and outstanding during the year 1926. The profits for the fourth quarter are estimated at $2,400,000, as against $1,960,000 in the corresponding quarter of 1926.

Paramount Staff Re-Set

Executive Production Organization Undergoes Changes for Big Yearly Schedule

THE Paramount production staff has been re-aligned to take care of the big production schedule for the new year, according to an announcement by B. P. Schulberg, associate producer. The changes in the line-up came following a series of conferences in which Jesse Lasky participated before leaving New York for Hollywood.

Some of these changes are the result of a new contract signed by E. Lloyd Sheldon, one of the editors-in-chief for the company. This contract is unique in that it calls for but five months of studio work each year. The other seven months of the next three years will be spent by Mr. Sheldon in fiction writing, scenario preparation, audience study and rest. He will sail for Europe on May 1st for a vacation trip.

As a chief step in the new re-alignment, B. P. Fineman, for the past year and a half executive assistant to Mr. Shulberg, has been relieved of his general executive responsibilities, and will now assume active and more direct supervision of several important production units. With this change in Mr. Fineman's work the position of executive assistant to Mr. Schulberg has been abolished.

Louis D. Lighton, B. F. Zeidman and J. G. Bachmann will continue their present duties as editors-in-chief on Mr. Schulberg's production staff.

Upon Mr. Sheldon's return to the Paramount studios, scheduled December 1st, 1928, he will re-assume his duties as one of the supervising editors.

Benjamin Glazer and Ernest Vajda will continue to adapt and supervise special productions as in the past.

To further carry out the plan of having proved film executives give their individual attention to each Paramount picture, Mr. Schulberg announced the signing, in executive capacities, of Albert Shelby LeVino and David O. Selznick. Both men came to the Paramount organization with long experience in picture making.

Le Vino will write stories and supervise productions, while Selznick, in addition to supervising productions, will act as general assistant to Mr. Schulberg.

Educational Rushes Work

Will Complete Current Program Late in March and Will Then Close Studios for Few Weeks

EDUCATIONAL studios are rushing to completion the 1927-28 program of 62 two-reel comedies and 26 one-reelers, work on which was inaugurated in May of last year. With four companies shooting steadily since the program was launched, it is anticipated the season's schedule will be completed the latter part of March or shortly thereafter. The present plan is to close the studios then for a period of a few weeks and to reopen about May 15th for the new season's program.

Of the eight series of two-reel comedies, work has been completed on two series and one other is virtually completed. Lupino Lane recently wound up the camera work on his eighth comedy, while Lloyd Hamilton's work is under way on the concluding comedy in the Dorothy Devore star series under the direction of Norman Taurog. Johnny Arthur has finished more than half of his program of six Tuxedo comedies, while "Big Boy" also has passed the half way mark with his completion of "Chilly Days."

Approximately two-thirds of the Mermaid fun films have been completed. There are sixteen two-reelers in ths series, and director Stephen Roberts will soon start work on the twelfth. H. L. Muller is now shooting on the third of the new series of six Bowers comedies recently added to Educational's program.

About two-thirds of production work has been completed on the series of one-reel Cameo comedies, with Jules White directing the most recent one to go into production.

Frisco Theatre Firms Buy 3 Levin Houses

ACKERMAN AND HARRIS, in association with George A. Oppen, San Francisco theatrical company, announced on January 8 the purchase of three of the Samuel H. Levin theatres in the Richmond district, a deal involving slightly over $1,000,000. The official name of the new firm is Ackerman, Harris and Oppen.

The theatres purchased are the Coliseum at Ninth Avenue and Clement Street, the Alexandria at 18 Avenue and Geary Street, and the New Balboa near 38 Avenue. W. H. Crosby, former manager of the Roosevelt Theatre, will manage the Coliseum and Arthur P. Loring will assist him. The acquisition of these houses increases the total of Ackerman and Harris theatres in the bay region to 15.

A sixteenth house, the El Capitan, at 19 and Mission Street, costing $1,250,000, seating 3,100, will be opened in April. A seventeenth theatre, to be a $350,000 structure erected on the Amazon-Crocker tract and to seat 1500, has also been announced.

Gotham Production Forces Resume Activities

Production work on the remaining pictures on the Gotham schedule was resumed with the arrival last week of Sam Sax at the Gotham studio in Universal City. The next film to be made by the company will be started immediately under the supervision of Harold Shumate and the direction of Howard Bretherton. The picture is "Turn Back the Hours." It is planned to follow it up with "The Chorus Kid," from a story by Howard Rockey.

The company's announced intention of making 30 subjects next season has caused several changes in the current production schedule and a re-alignment of releases in the remaining group of films. Mr. Sax intends to place an additional unit into work in order to have his schedule cleared up before spring.

C. Sprague in Charge of Fox Scenarists

The scenario department of Fox Films will be in charge of Chandler Sprague, former newspaper man who comes from Cecil B. De Mille to assume his new duties at the Fox plant beginning February 1st.

In 1926 Mr. Sprague joined the staff of Joseph M. Schenck as assistant to John Considine, general manager of the Schenck film units. After an association with Schenck, he went to Famous Players, where he became associated with Benjamin Glazer on several productions. During his connection with Famous he was loaned to First National to do the film adaptation of "The Barker."

Mr. Sprague obtained his journalistic experience on the Baltimore Sun.

Metzger Enroute to Coast to Lay Plans

LOU B. METZGER, general sales manager for Universal, has left New York for Universal City, where he will confer with Carl Laemmle and Universal studio heads concerning the new Universal production for 1928-29. He is accompanied by his wife and small daughter.

Universal, with few exceptions, has already acquired stories, novels, rights to plays and other material for the new line-up. From the sales point of view Metzger will help to determine the priority of production for the stories in hand.

5 in M-G-M's Schedule of February Features

The quintet of pictures announced for release next month by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer includes "The Enemy," "Rose Marie," "The Big City," "The Latest From Paris" and "The Smart Set." These are starring vehicles for Lillian Gish, Joan Crawford, Lon Chaney, Norma Shearer and William Haines.

"The Enemy" is now in its fourth week at the Astor in New York. "Rose Marie" is a screen interpretation of the musical success of the same name. All its exterior scenes were shot on location in northern California. Again Tod Browning supplied the story for a new Chaney picture as well as the direction in "The Big City" in which the star has the role of a gang leader. "The Latest From Paris," a comedy by A. P. Younger, deals with the adventures of a traveling saleswoman. In "The Smart Set" Haines is a principal in an international polo match.

McLaglen Substituting for Farnum in Ford Film

Due to a severe attack of rheumatism, William Farnum, who was planning to make a come-back in films in the John Ford production, "Hangman's House," has been forced to abandon the role which Fox has filled with Victor McLaglen.

William Shirley Again With "Farash"

ALBANY exchangemen are welcoming back to the fold William M. Shirley, who is again associated with Farash Theatres, Schenectady, N. Y., and this time as President and General Manager.

Mr. Shirley left Farash some time ago to engage in other enterprises, principally the real estate field, but within the last year the exhibition end of this business once more commanded his attention. Prior to the above named post he was associated with other Schenectady theatres

Farash Theatres operate the Strand, State, Wedgeway, Van Curler, Albany and Barcli theatres, all in Schenectady, N. Y.

The most important change in the circuit will be the transfer of a high class entertainment policy and Vitaphone from the Van Curler to the Strand. The State, Barcli and Wedgeway will continue their present policy. The Albany reopened Christmas with a Western program.

Dates Announced for New Cohen-Puffy Comedies

A new comedy series to take the place of "The Collegians" on the Universal release schedule will be the Octavus Roy Cohen-Charles Puffy comedies in which the Hungarian comedian will be starred in special stories written for him by the Saturday Evening Post writer.

The new series will consist of six two-reelers. In the order of their release they are: "Horns and Orange Blossoms," January 29; "The Prince and the Papa," February 12; "All Balled Up," February 27; "His In-Laws," March 12; "Some Babies," March 26, and "Married Bachelors," April 9. Supporting Puffy in these new comedies are Gloria Grey, Marie Mosquini, Hazel Howell, Arthur Rankin, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Bud Jamison and James Bradbury. The comedies were made under the direction of either Harry Sweet or Ralph Cedar.

First National Buys Two Plays and Story

"Applesauce," the play by Barry Conners, "The Squall," the play by Jean Bart, and "Out of the Ruins," the story by Sir Phillip Gibbs, have been acquired by First National Pictures as screen material for future productions.

The Connors play, it is said, will be a vehicle for Jack Mulhall. No announcement has been made by First National as to who of its feminine stars will be assigned the leading role in "The Squall," in which Blanche Yurka starred on the stage. The Gibbs story will be produced with Richard Barthelmess in the stellar role and will present the late war from the French angle.

"Lady Raffles" Set for January Release

"Lady Raffles," the Columbia production starring Estelle Taylor, will be that company's third and last release for January. The other two are "The Wife's Relations" and "That Certain Thing," R. William Beill directed "Lady Raffles."

N. J. Unit Plans Company

Files Corporation Papers to Make Independent Exhibitors Own Producers and Distributors

THE New Jersey Motion Picture Theatre Owners have sponsored a new corporation in the interest of independent theatre owners throughout the United States. Incorporation papers have been filed for the Independent Theatre Owners of America, a corporation formed for the purpose of combating and competing with producers, distributors and affiliated exhibitors outside of the independent field.

According to the plans outlined the new corporation will engage in production and distribution of pictures and the buying, selling and operation of theatres. Membership will be on the basis of stock allotment and all members will be holders of stock, which will be non-transferable and non negotiable.

The new organization was proposed by George L. Record at a meeting of the New Jersey directors and the plan was unanimously adapted. Record is the counsel for the state unit and he was authorized to immediately prepare the incorporation papers and proceed with organization of the corporation, which already has been done.

Details of the campaign to bring in outside exhibitors have not yet been revealed, but the sponsors of the corporation declare they will lose no time in bringing the plan to the attention of exhibitors in every city of the United States. Every independent and unaffiliated exhibitor will be given the opportunity to secure his allotment of stock.

The complete method of procedure that will be adopted in launching the campaign for the new corporation will doubtless be revealed at a meeting scheduled to take place in Newark next Wednesday. At that time officers and directors will be elected and a discussion of all phases of the movement will be in order. The Jersey exhibitors are most enthusiastic over the whole proposition and are confident it will win the approval of independent exhibitors in all parts of the country.

M-G-M Sets Big Congress

International Event in N. Y. Will Bring Executives, Exhibitors from All Parts of World

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER have completed plans for what is announced as the first international convention ever sponsored in New York by a motion picture company. The event is scheduled for the week beginning Wednesday, February 15th at the Hotel Astor, and will bring together exhibitors, executives and film workers from practically every corner of the world. It will be known as the First International Film Sales Congress.

In arranging for the sessions M-G-M considered they would do much to promote a better international understanding among those concerned with the making and marketing of films, and afford opportunity for a profitable exchange of sales, publicity and production ideas.

An ambitious schedule has been provided for the week of the Congress, which will open on Wednesday and will not be concluded until the following Tuesday evening. During the week all of the picture palaces along Broadway will be visited, and on Sunday, February 19th the delegates will adjourn to Pembroke, the estate of the late Marcus Loew at Glen Cove, L. Sunday, Feb. 19—Delegates invited to Pembroke, the Loew estate, as guest of Arthur Loew and Mrs. Marcus Loew.

Monday, Feb. 20—Morning: tour of the Consolidated Film Printing Laboratories. Afternoon: tour of inspection of Loew Building offices. Evening: visit to the Embassy Theatre and attendance at showing of picture; visit to M-G-M Radio Club.

Tuesday, Feb. 21—Evening: Farewell banquet at Astor Hotel.

Special Bands to Tour "U" Vaudeville Chain

EVERY group of vaudeville acts or presentation units sent out by Chain Vaudeville Agency, formed recently under the management of William Stevens to handle vaudeville bookings for Universal's theatre chain, will be accompanied by a special orchestra to be included as part of the act. About 12 or 14 persons will be the personnel of these presentation companies. They will be routed by the agency which has just added 14 new theatres to its circuit.

The Avon, Utica, the Echo, Syracuse, and the Schine, Watertown, New York, have booked specialty acts from Chain Vaudeville Agency. Special presentations will also be supplied, it is said, the Weinberg houses at Winchester, Clifton Forge, Harrisonburg and Danville, Virginia.

Bernard Granat, Exhibitor of Mexico City, Dead

Bernard Granat, prominent exhibitor in Mexico City, died at his home there on January 9.

Exhibitors Service Bureau

One of the highlights in a model campaign based on a national tie-up! The window display above co-featuring "Pep" and the Will Rogers starring vehicle. "The Texas Steer," was used in a store at Battle Creek, Mich., in connection with the presentation of the picture at the Post theatre.

Leap Year Idea Used to Exploit Showing of "Get Your Man"

THE advent of Leap Year made it possible for Manager Sidney Dannenberg, and Publicity Director Larry Cowlin to get plenty of newspaper publicity for "Get Your Man" at the Alabama Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

The Birmingham News agreed to run a contest through their columns and on the first day contest broke, it was given front-page publicity. Here is what was printed:

> "Have you got your man? That's the pertinent question to the marriageable young women of Birmingham, and it is pertinent even though it is seemingly impertinent. Here it is days since the opening of the first Leap Year since 1924 and certainly Birmingham girls are forehanded. Therefore, the query: Have you got your man? If you have, referring to all fair readers of The Birmingham News, then there is a party in store for you and The Man.
>
> The party is down at the Alabama Theatre this week, and the formalities are simple.
> Before noon Thursday call at the office of The News, go up to the second floor and ask for the Leap Year Editor. When you get him give him your name and address and you will be given two tickets to the Alabama where you can see Clara Bow who shows how to 'Get Your Man.'
> It isn't necessary to give the man's name, the Leap Year Editor will take your word for it that you got one.
> Remember the final hour for asking for your tickets is noon Thursday and you must give your name and address. And anyone who can get her man in four days won't mind that."

Thirty-six girls told the Leap Year Editor that they had their men. Many of the girls' pictures were shown in the paper during the run of the contest—with copy about the contest, picture, theatre and play dates.

County Schools Join Drive for "Les Miserables"

Universal Exploiteer A. J. Sharick put on a campaign for "Les Miserables" that brought high school children from all over the county to the Virginian Theatre in Charleston on Saturday afternoons. Before the playdate Manager Lea Richmond procured school cooperation that had never been heard of before in Charleston.

Not only were the Carl Laemmle-Victor Hugo scholarship entry blanks distributed liberally in schools and libraries, but the high school superintendent wrote a special article for the newspapers about the picture. Book marks were distributed by the thousands in libraries and book stores. The latter displayed the book during the run of the picture and the Kresge store put in the ten cent edition. The radio was used to broadcast news about the film.

Saxton Now City Manager for Loew in Buffalo

W. K. Saxton, city manager for the four Loew theatres in Memphis—Loew's Palace, Loew's State, and Strand and Majestic—has been transferred to Buffalo, N. Y., as city manager of the Loew houses there, effective next week.

Showmanship

Briefs

BY inviting local army officers of the recruiting and other branches of the military service to be his guests at a showing of "West Point," which was booked for the week of January 9th, in Loew's Regent, Harrisburg, Pa., Manager Edward J. Melinker won the good will of military folk in general and acquired some newspaper publicity that helped the picture. The guest officers included Colonel G. G. Heiner, Major E. C. Hanford and Captain George H. Millholland, and their escort consisted of the famous Governor's Troop of cavalry men, a unit of the Pennsylvania National Guard.

HARRY W. CRULL, managing director of the Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J., put over a publicity stunt on "The Gay Defender" which attracted considerable attention at little expense. Through the co-operation of the Nash-Newark, Inc., a new Nash car was placed at the disposal of the Branford Theatre with a driver. The car was rigged up in a colorful manner, with signs and pennants.

IF Jake Rosenthal keeps on buying souvenirs and various other things, which he gives away at his Troy theatre, Troy, N. Y., he will soon find himself needing a warehouse in which to store his stock. Mr. Rosenthal returned last week from several days spent in New York City, where he purchased $1,000 worth of novelties, including Japanese baskets and aluminum sets, which are to be handed out to patrons as a means of building up business.

W. P. WILSON, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., published in his newspaper advertisements on January 21, a telegram signed "Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation," stating that the Pennsylvania Board of Censors has just given its O. K. to the showing, in the state, of the Emil Jannings picture, "The Last Command." Mr. Wilson further announced that the play would have its first Pennsylvania showing in the Rialto.

MANAGER SIDNEY DANNENBERG was swamped under an avalanche of letters in response to a letter contest on "Sorrell and Son" when that film was showing at the Alabama Theatre, Birmingham, Ala. The Birmingham News co-operated by announcing the contest. Contestants were asked to write on, "Does the father love his child as much as a mother?"

BUDDY HOOTEN, manager of the Strand theatre in Ogdensburg, and an oldtimer in the business, is making a name for himself these days and last week handled the filming of a grade crossing accident which was shown this week in connection with a campaign being staged in that city. The New York Central Railroad placed a special passenger train at the disposal of Mr. Hooten.

THE Strand theatre, Altoona, is advertising that it is the only theatre in that city showing two news reels at each performance—Paramount and International.

Floods City With Summonses to Theatre

Novel Heralds for "2 Arabian Knights" Used by Pat McGee

Manager Pat McGee flooded Oklahoma City with summonses to advertise his showing of "Two Arabian Knights" at the Criterion theatre. Although there is nothing new about the use of a summons form for theatre advertising, McGee's application of the device was so extensive and the handling so effective, that the Criterion benefited greatly as a result of the publicity.

The bills were made up in the usual summons form, with name, dates, etc., inserted as though written in by a typewriter. The Summons read:

"Supreme Court of Entertainment, on Main Street, between Broadway and Robinson, City of Oklahoma, County of Oklahoma, State of Oklahoma: To YOU, wherever you are: You are hereby summoned to appear at the CRITERION THEATRE Saturday, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday, Jan. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13th, 1928 between the hours of 10:30 A. M. and 10 P. M. to serve as a WITNESS of Two Arabian Knights—William Boyd vs. Louis Wolheim to answer the question if two post war doughboys were lost in a Turkish harem, would the harem scare 'em?"

The Summons continued, "Failure to appear in answer to this summons will mean the loss of an opportunity to laugh at the season's funniest comedy."

These Summonses were distributed through office buildings, homes, and other public places in the business district.

Armour Tie-up Helps Show at Cleveland Cameo

A tie-up profitable to the box-office of the Cameo Theatre was effected in Cleveland by John Curran, Warner Bros. exploiteer in behalf of the comedy feature "Ham and Eggs at the Front." Armour & Co. cooperated in getting up one thousand window cards printed in red and black with the following copy:

"Build Up on Armour's Star Ham. Get in condition to enjoy The Laughing Riot Ham and Eggs at the Front at the Cameo Theatre, Cleveland."

School Girls Ballyhoo Hippodrome Show

FOUR Waco High School girls were the stars of an exploitation campaign put on in that city by Manager J. P. Harrison in connection with his showing of "Love" at the Hippodrome theatre. The girls, who are well known and come from good homes, went about the town hand-in-hand, each wearing one letter of the title "Love" on her back.

The girls visited soda fountains, department stores and other public places, always hand-in-hand so that the title of the Hippodrome attraction was spelled out on their backs. The girls drew plenty of attention wherever they appeared and gave the picture a wide range of publicity.

Guild Sponsors Morning Matinees for Children of Albany

THE first program to be given in Albany under the auspices of the Junior Entertainment and Film Guild of that city attracted hundreds of boys and girls to the Mark Ritz last Saturday morning, when "Topsy and Eva" was shown. Under the direction of the Guild, a ten cent ticket was offered to the children of the city good for admission on Saturday between the hours of 10 a. m. and 4 p. m. It is thought that these shows for the children at an extremely low price will prove of sufficient interest to keep the children off the streets and out of harm's way for several hours, and, at the same, afford wholesome entertainment. The Guild is not limited to any creed, including as it does, in Albany, the Catholic Daughters of America, the Jewish Women's Council, as well as the Woman's Club of Albany.

Capital Punishment Subject of Essay Tie-Up for "The Noose"

CONTINUOUS publicity for one week for the theatre and a quickened interest and circulation builder for the newspaper, were the benefits derived by both parties to an exploitation tie-up recently executed in Bridgeport, Conn., in connection with showings at the Majestic theatre in that city of "The Noose."

The tie-up was arranged by Manager Maurice Rosenthal of the Majestic theatre and sponsored by the Bridgeport Post.

The basis of the contest was an essay writing competition for cash prizes of $60 and 100 tickets to showing of "The Noose" at the Majestic. The Post put up the money prizes and the tickets were supplied by the theatre.

The newspaper announced the contest with a front page story, in which the rules were outlined and the prizes listed, and in addition carried mention of the event on the editorial page. The response from readers of the Post far exceeded the expectations of the editor, more than 2500 letters containing readers' views on capital punishment being received by the newspaper.

The rules governing the contest were as follows:

"For the best letters on the subject of capital punishment The Post offers its readers a series of prizes, consisting of six cash awards and 50 pairs of tickets to 'The Noose,' at the Majestic theatre next week. For the best three letters upholding capital punishment, First prize, $15.00; second prize, $10.00; third prize, $5.00. For the best three letters opposing capital punishment, First prize, $15.00; Second prize, $10.00; third prize, $5.00. For the next 50 letters selected as outstanding, two tickets each to a performance of 'The Noose' at thte Majestic theatre."

As the contest was launched at a time when there was widespread interest in the much publicized Snyder-Gray case, the subject of this essay writing competition afforded a topic about which nearly everybody had something to say. However, as capital punishment becomes one of the major issues in the course of the unfolding of "The Noose," similar tie-ups offer possibilities which no doubt many other exhibitors will take into account when they plan exploitation of that attraction.

On the day the winners were announced in the Post the newspaper expressed its great satisfaction over the results obtained in an editorial which concluded with the following statement:

"The Post congratulates not only the winners, but all who took part in this contest, for the sincerity and ability displayed in the letters, and wishes heartily to thank the judges, who gave a great deal of time and conscientious effort in the final selections."

Mr. Rosenthal informs Motion Picture News that this exploitation more than compensated for the effort it required, and the cost, which consisted of the donation of 100 free tickets for prizes. According to Rosenthal, this is the first time the Post has cooperated in this manner with a motion picture theatre.

Scene Drop Announces "Now We're in the Air"

H. B. Howard, manager of the Rex Theatre in Sumter, S. C., repeated a stunt he had previously used as an announcement of his showing of "Now We're in the Air." This was a scene drop featuring cutouts from the 24-sheet as an advance trailer.

The drop was lowered in advance of the showing of the feature at each performance for two days previous to the opening date of "Now We're in the Air."

Morrison Leads in Publix "Harvest Month" Drive

Manager Ernest Morrison of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, has been declared winner of the first prize in Publix Theatres "Harvest Month Drive." Exceeding the quota fixed for the Howard by a wide margin, Mr. Morrison led the field, which included twenty-two Publix de luxe houses and finished "in the money"—$500.00 cash being the prize.

Studio Briefs

Louis Van den Ecker, technical director for "Beau Geste" and "Barbed Wire," will portray a role in "Captain Ferreol," the tentative title of Adolphe Menjou's new picture.

After several months away from the Paramount studio James Hall, leading man, returns to Paramount direction to play in "Hold Everything."

Richard Arlen is to enact the lead in "Ladies of the Mob," Clara Bow's next.

"Love and Learn" and "Ko Ko's Kozy Korner," two Paramount pictures, have been selected for the Photoplay Guide of entertaining films and will appear in the February issue of the National Board of Review Magazine.

Tiffany-Stahl Productions have signed William Collier, Jr., to a long-term contract. The actor has just completed a role in one of the company's productions, "The Tragedy of Youth." A special story is now being written for him.

Doris Dawson has been selected by Neal Burns to play the leading role in his newest Paramount-Christie comedy, "Just the Type." His support will consist of Billy Engle, Bill Blaisdell and the Christie girls. Harold Beaudine is directing.

Edward Sutherland will direct "Quick Lunch," the next W. C. Fields-Chester Conklin co-starring vehicle. Sam Mintz, J. W. Ruben and Harry Fried are adapting the story, an original, to the screen.

Sojin, the Chinese player, will have the heavy role in Esther Ralston's next comedy for Paramount, "Nothing Never Happens."

"Lady Be Good," a screen adaptation of the Gershwin musical comedy, was started last week at the Burbank studio by First National with Jack Mulhall and Dorothy Mackaill in the leads. Richard Wallace is directing them.

"The Show Down" has been chosen as the definite title of George Bancroft's initial starring vehicle for Paramount, which is set for release on February 18. Victor Schertzinger directed the production.

Bessie Love will have the title role in F B O's "Sally of the Scandals," the last production on the 1927-28 program.

Hobart Henley will direct Adolphe Menjou in the star's next vehicle to follow "Code of Honor."

Carolyn Snowden, colored actress, will be seen in a screen story upon which Tiffany-Stahl scenarists are now at work. She will be supported by a well-known company of colored players headed by Steppin Fetchit, a vaudeville headliner.

Jack Canzhorn, George Irving, Burton Rupp and Ethan Laidlaw have been cast for "Partners in Crime," Paramount's comedy drama of the underworld.

Sojin, Japanese character actor, is to play a role in Paramount's "Something Always Happens." Pascal Karns and James Pierce will also be seen, Karns replacing Johnnie Morris.

Some of the world's outstanding short stories are to be produced by Frank P. Donovan as two-reel productions. The first story that will be filmed will be "The Necklace," the De Maupassant tale. Mary Alden, John Hopkins, Emil Chautard, Maurice Costello, Jean Girard, Bill Cody, William Strauss are in the cast.

Several of the Tiffany-Stahl color classics will be produced at the company's studios in Hollywood. The first that will go into production will be "Treasure Land." It has been set for release on February 1.

Arrangements have been made with Fred Thomson whereby Nora Lane, Thomson's leading lady, will have the role opposite Adolphe Menjou in the Paramount filming of Sardou's "Captain Ferreol." Evelyn Brent also has an important part.

Vera Clark is now working on a story for Tiffany-Stahl which will be one of George Archainbaud's productions for the new year.

Ethel Doherty will do the adaptation of "Hold Everything" for Paramount.

Helena Dime, Czecho-Slovakian stage actress who appears in "The Cossacks," has been added to the cast of Metro-Goldwyn Mayer's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

Johnny Hines will have a large supporting cast in "Chinatown Charlie." Several well known players, some of them said to be vaudeville figures, will appear in a number of sequences. Besides Hines there are 24 people in the cast.

"The Finishing Touch" is the title of Hal Roach's newest comedy for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer co-starring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy. Ed Kennedy and Dorothy Coburn are also prominent in the cast.

Ned Marin will handle "The Yellow Lily" as his first assignment as unit production manager at the Burbank studio of First National. Filming is set to get under way about the middle of February with Alexander Korda directing.

Three villains bother George O'Brien in his new Fox Films vehicle, "Honor Bound." They are Tom Santschi, Sam DeGrasse and Harry Gripp.

Max Davidson's new comedy produced by Hal Roach for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has been titled "Dumb Daddies" instead of "Papa, Get Your Gun." Viola Richard and Gene Morgan have roles.

Louise Fazenda has been engaged by First National to play opposite Charlie Murray in a new and untitled comedy which Edward Cline is directing.

"The Latest From Paris" has been chosen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as the title for Norma Shearer's new film previously known by the title of "Pullman Partners." It has been set for release on January 28.

"Palamino," the story of a horse, is the unusual title of Ken Maynard's new western vehicle for First National. Tarzan will take the role of "Palamino," the breed to which he belongs. The story is an original by Marion Jackson. Albert Rogell will begin directing within ten days.

"Excess Baggage," the play by John McGowan, has been purchased by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for screen production.

Max Davidson has started on another Hal Roach comedy for M-G-M in which Lillian Leighton has been assigned the role opposite him. In this as yet untitled picture will be Viola Richard, Gene Morgan and Spec O'Donnell. They will be directed by James Parrott.

Edward T. Lowe, screen writer, will work out the adaptation and continuity of "Lonesome," the story by Mann Page that will be filmed by Universal. He is to work in collaboration with Paul Farjos, director. Work is scheduled to begin shortly, as is also the announcement of the cast.

Stanley Taylor and Hugh Trevor have been cast for the roles in "Cream of the Earth," which Universal is making into picture form. The story is by Percy Marks, author of "The Plastic Age."

Kathlyn Williams and Edwin Martindel have been added to the cast of "We Americans," the stage play now being screened by Universal.

Camera work on "Be Yourself," Reginald Denny's new vehicle for Universal, was begun last week under the direction of William A. Seiter.

Jack Daugherty, Virginia Browne Faire, Arthur Millette, George Kotosonaros and Monte Montague have been added to the players appearing in Leigh Jason's first directorial assignment for Universal, "The Body Punch."

Noble Johnson is to take the place of Malcolm White in the cast of "Something Always Happens," a Paramount picture.

George Sidney, George Lewis and Haron Lynn have been given parts in Universal's "Give and Take," which William Beaudine is directing.

Jack Selwin, Bob Seiter, Andy Devine and Earl McCarthy will be seen in "Cream of the Earth," a forthcoming Universal film.

Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy, Hal Roach's duo of comedians appearing in M-G-M releases, have finished their latest comedy called "Let George Do It" and directed by Arch Heath.

Key City Reports

New York City

WITH the exception of the showing the Capitol theatre made with Greta Garbo in "The Divine Woman," nothing that can be classed as sensational happened along Broadway last week. From the Capitol's publicity department comes an announcement that all records for a Saturday's business were broken on the opening day of the Garbo picture, the previous record being held by "The 'Fair Co-Ed." Considering that the Embassy is still selling out with "Love," which also features Miss Garbo, helped along by John Gilbert, this lady's popularity in little old New York cannot very well be questioned.

The Paramount had just a good week with "Wife Savers" (Par.), no doubt well enough for this picture and up at the big Roxy "Come to My House" (Fox), let things down somewhat, taking into consideration the showings that this theatre has made with other attractions. The Rivoli started off to a brisk trade with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," aided by personal appearances of Ruth Taylor. Local critics have been generous with praise for this picture and Paramount is giving plenty of aid in addition to the tons of publicity accorded the Anita Loos story. Still it is problematical as to just how far this film will go. It's not strong fare.

"The Dove" flew or rather fluttered out of the Rialto after a three-weeks' run that was marked by a falling off in the latter part, 'though doing very fair all in all. Jannings' "Last Command" came in—and this one looks like real money. Another film to go out was "The Gaucho" at the Liberty and perhaps the Fairbanks picture was kept there a little longer than intended. This one also slipped somewhat in the last weeks. Griffith's "Drums of Love" followed it and, while some of the local critics took a shot at it here and there, others who are more wised up to B.O. than some newspaper boys, predict that it has what it takes to pull them in despite a tragic ending.

The Chaplin film "The Circus" is still packing them in the Strand in its third week and will no doubt be there for a couple more to come. Two other strong features, "Wings" (Par.) at the Criterion and "The Jazz Singer" (W.B.), are still doing big business at these smaller of the Broadway houses.

"The Enemy" (M-G-M) is coasting along at the Astor at a fair rate and the same can be said for "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (U) at the Central. Another (U) picture, "The Four Flusher,' did only fair at the Colony. The latter house is rated as a tough one and Universal started broadcasting last Sunday in an effort to boost trade. At the Gaiety, the Pathe-De Mille picture "Chicago," is beginning to show some signs of wear but will probably last two or three more weeks. "The Plastic Age" played the little Cameo to that theatre's average and will be followed by "A Texas Steer" and "Helen of Troy." The Cameo will be the third central Broadway house for the latter.

Martin and Osa Johnson's "Simba" picture opened at the Earl Carroll theatre on Monday of this week and the house has been sold out solid for the first seven days. With the support that certain organizations will give this picture box office returns look most favorable. "Simba" is a remarkable collection of wild animal photography.

Chicago

WHAT is probably the biggest stage bill ever offered by the Chicago since its opening, and "Serenade" on the screen, brought good but not extraordinary crowds to this theatre last week. The United Artists Theatre, with "The Gaucho," Fairbanks' new picture, did big business, while at the Roosevelt "Love" ended its successful run with another good week. Paul Ash and his Gang in "Questions of 1928" and "Baby Mine" on the screen, pulled fairly well at the Oriental. At McVickers Theatre, "Shepherd of the Hills," which was in its last week, had a fair box office report.

"Beware of Married Men," on the screen, and Vitaphone, were the Orpheum attractions, business being average, while "Sharpshooters and Movietone accounted for average business at the Monroe.

The Uptown offered the big spectacular picture "Ben Hur" and a big stage show to fairly satisfactory crowds. The other big North Shore house, the Granada, did well with "Loves of Carmen" and Vitaphone, plus Charles Kaley and his stage band. The Sheridan had a fair week with the same feature, "The Loves of Carmen," and Verne Buck and his boys on the stage.

"The Love Mart" was the screen attraction at the Tivoli, where Benny Kreuger headed the musical program to average business. The Capitol offered its third anniversary show with "Loves of Carmen" as its screen feature, and the Avalon had "In Old Kentucky" as its screen attraction, both theatres enjoying a fair business.

Seattle

SEVERAL local houses went "over the top" last week to the tune of large box office receipts, continuing the big grosses that have been apparent since the recent holidays. As usual, the Fifth Avenue Theatre led the procession.

The screen attraction at the big showhouse this last week was "Now We're In the Air," which was considered by audiences as rather dull entertainment, considering the former pictures by the same team of comedians. On the stage was Will King and his Revusical Comedy. This act featured King, a former Seattle burlesque favorite, and drew hundreds of his former patrons. In spite of a mediocre film and stage show, however, the "names" drew business to a total close to $20,000 for the week.

Second came "Love" at the United Artists Theatre, which broke opening day records and came close to meeting the house record established by "Ben Hur" just a few weeks ago. It was above average, grossing more than $15,000 for Manager Perutz and going into a second week with large houses expected.

"The Jazz Singer" at John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre played its second capacity week, having a standing line every day and night during the run. It is showing six times daily at 50c and 75c admission prices, and is the talk of Seattle. All house records have been broken by this film, which grossed about $17,500 for the second week, and goes into a third week with apparently no let up in the capacity audiences.

Another second week picture was "Seventh Heaven" which continues to draw very large houses at Pantages Theatre, in conjunction with a new program of vaudeville. The picture is being highly exploited and bids fair to eclipse the house record held by "What Price Glory," as it goes into a third week with every indication of continued big patronage.

The Columbia Theatre was not without its strong box office attraction, this week featuring "Jesse James." In spite of big competition the film went over very successfully, being rounded out with good shorts and musical numbers. Business about average, or a little better.

In the face of all the big films, The Liberty Theatre fared poorly with "The Tigress." This was the last film for this house under the West Coast banner, as the theatre will be closed this week because of lack of patronage.

"The Rush Hour" at the Orpheum Theatre, with fair vaudeville, and "Pleasures of the Rich" at the Embassy with a fairly good stage revue, were average attractions that failed to make any great mark on the records of the box office.

Business at the neighborhood and suburban houses has been increasing to a small extent, following the lull of the holiday season.

Baltimore

"THE JAZZ SINGER," with Al Jolson, presented with Vitaphone accompaniment and songs, interspersed with the action by Jolson and Cantor Josef Rosenblatt, proved a wonderful patron puller at Warners' Metropolitan during the second week of its engagement, and also proved one of the outstanding high marks of business for the week beginning Monday, January 16.

Another picture which went over very big was "Stage Kisses" at Keith's Hippodrome, with five acts of Keith-Albee family-time vaudeville, including Ziegfeld Shadowgraphs.

"Wings," presented as a road show attraction at Ford's Theatre, a legitimate house at $1.50 top, with Clara Bow in the leading part, proved a very good business getter at that playhouse.

"The Wizard," with Edmund Lowe and Gustav von Seyffertitz, proved a good patron puller at the Keith-Albee New Garden, with eight acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville on the bill also.

"Sailors' Wives," featuring Mary Astor, went over very good at the Stanley, with Leon Navarra directing a presentation act called The All Night Club on the same bill with a number of headliners.

Very good business was done also at the Motion Picture Guild's Little Theatre, where "The Last Laugh" was presented.

There were three surprises during the week.

First, Quality Street," featuring Marion Davies, did only a fair business at Loew's Century, despite the enormous advertising and publicity campaign carried on in the Hearst papers, News and American, in connection with the showing. Sammy Kahn also directed the presentation act.

The second surprise came with "Sorrell and Son," which lost ground on Tuesday of its second week at Loew's Valencia, then began to pull up, and by Friday and Saturday was doing a tremendous business. The picture seemed to get into the air, and those who had seen it pulled others to the house.

Pola Negri was the third surprise. She seems to be losing ground in Baltimore. "The Woman on Trial," although an excellent dramatic production, did not measure up to what was expected at the Rivoli. The night business was fairly good but the matinees were off considerably. Hernandez Brothers were on the same bill.

The reissued version of "Honor First," featuring Renee Adoree and John Gilbert, only proved a fair business getter at the New Theatre, with Zimmerman and Grandville in Echoes of Switzerland on the bill.

Boston

COMEDIES and mystery films predominated in Boston during the week. The result was an unusually large patronage at all theatres. Even a season of special music at Symphony hall in which leading artists appeared, failed to dampen the motion picture attendance.

Metropolitan showed a Beery and Hatton film, "Wife Savers," which grossed the best of any film in recent weeks although falling below some of the former offerings of these same comedians at the same theatre.

"The Gorilla," mystery film, showed simultaneously at the Scollay Square Olympia, the Washington street Olympia, Capitol and 'Fenway Theatres. This is not the first showing of "The Gorilla" in Boston but it supplied a big wind-up for the film and all of the houses report receipts far above the average.

The Twin theatres, Modern and Beacon, also presented a mystery film, "The 13th Juror," with good results and for a co-feature showed "Flying Luck."

"Sorrell and Son" at the State Theatre was, so to speak, in a class by itself and supplied heavier material than at the other theatres with the result that those who enjoy dramas flocked to the State in force and the film was one of the most successful of the season, gauged by the returns at the box office. Sam Wooding's Band is proving another big stage attraction at the State.

For romantic comedies "The Irresistible Lover" filled the bill at the Keith-Albee Boston, drawing larger houses than for weeks.

"My Best Girl" at the Loew's Orpheum was another film which showed good returns although falling below the previous week's returns from "Love."

"Wings" continues to draw capacity audiences at the Tremont as the city's only road show.

Other films showing good returns are "The Angel of Broadway" at the University, "Man Crazy" at the Lancaster, "Lonesome Lady" at the Exeter and "In Old Kentucky" at the Bowdoin.

Next week's conditions are watched with considerable interest. For the first time in several seasons practically every legitimate theatre will have a new show on the boards. Against this, some of the season's best films are among the offerings at the motion picture houses. Exhibitors are confident that the films will maintain their hold despite the offerings of the legitimates.

Albany

LAST week proved one of exceptional business with the first-run houses of Albany. Although weather conditions on Monday and Thursday nights, when rain and slush prevailed, gave the box offices a slight jolt, the other nights witnessed capacity houses. At the Mark Ritz, "The Noose" proved to be one of the biggest business getters in many months—in fact, Tony Veiller, house manager, was in the lobby at 8 o'clock each night, announcing that standing room only was available. At the Mark Strand, "Two Arabian Knights" drew exceptionally good, although there were no standing lines in the lobby. But the picture pleased, and by word of mouth, the news spread. The bill also included two excellent Vitaphone presentations. Perhaps the best moneymaker of the week, however, and the one that stood them up afternoon and evening, day in and day out without regard to weather, was John Gilbert and Greta Garbo in "Love," at the Leland. Manager Sayles, in his newspaper advertisements, called attention to the fact that a two dollar admission is being charged for this picture in New York City, or exactly eight times what was being asked in Albany. As an extra business getter, photographs of the two stars were given to all women attending the matinees.

At the Clinton Square Theatre, "The Isle of Forgotten Women" drew very well. Betty Bronson in "Brass Knuckles" at Proctor's Grand, probably did not draw any business other than that which would naturally have come to the house through the vaudeville bill.

A visit to neighborhood houses showed a variance of opinion as to business, some of the exhibitors saying that business had been showing an increase during the last two or three weeks, while others were pessimistic, and were inclined to the assertion that business was not up to a year ago; and, furthermore, that this coming summer would prove a heartbreaker for more than one house.

The Troy Theatre split its week, using "The Magic Flame" for four days, and "Spring Fever" for the remainder of the week. These pictures did but an ordinary business, with the former running ahead of the latter. At the Lincoln, there was another split week with Colleen Moore in "Wildcat" going over well for four days, and "Chicago After Midnight" running fair for the remainder of the week.

St. Louis

MOTION picture theatre attendance, first run and neighborhood and along the by-ways of St. Louis and vicinity, last week was merely average.

There were no outstanding pictures on the screens of the city, while the accompanying stage shows, such as presentations, bands and vaudeville, were nothing to get excited about. Just average entertainment and business was accordingly.

At Loew's State Theatre during the week "Sorrell and Son" was on the screen and did average business. Teddy Joyce had a good stage show.

"The Harvester" was the feature picture at Skouras Brothers Missouri Theatre. None of the patrons got very excited about it. The acting was somewhat disappointing, it seems.

"The Cohens and Kellys in Paris" was on the screen at the Ambassador Theatre. If it was the first picture of the theme you could call it good comedy, but too much is more than sufficient. The stage show, Ed Lowry's "Marchin' On" kept the patrons happy.

The Capitol Theatre at Sixth and Chestnut street tried a new policy during the week, double feature programs. The pictures that were used the first week were Mary Philbin in "Surrender" and "Sailor Izzy Murphy."

"The Jazz Singer," the Vitaphone feature in which Al Jolson is the headliner, played its final week at the Grand Central.

The St. Louis Theatre at Grand boulevard and Morgan street in conjunction with five acts of Orpheum vaudeville showed Dolores Del Rio in "The Gateway to the Moon." The Orpheum had on its screen "The Opening Night." The Grand Opera House, the town's third combination house, had on its screen Sharon Lynn in "Aflame in the Sky."

Detroit

DETROIT set a house record when "The Jazz Singer," opening in the Madison at popular prices Dec. 24, played to more people from morning to midnight of each day following than ever before in local theatre history. So large were the crowds that police had to be called upon to assist in keeping the customers in line. At times, many of the prospective buyers were more than a block from the box office windows. "Underworld" has also proved a tremendous hit; entering its fifth week at the Adams. The latter is the only picture playing at the Adams in a period of two years to remain over four weeks.

Minneapolis

THIS week was an extraordinarily good one for the exhibitors in Minneapolis. Finkelstein & Ruben was staging its "Bell Ringer Week," which meant that every house manager was trying to "hit the bell" and exceed his attendance quota, and F. & R. officials estimated that business was from 35 to 40 per cent above the average at all the houses, and this, in spite of the fact that there was two days of sub-zero weather to put a crimp in things.

Charlie Chaplin in "The Circus" did a wonderful business at the Strand. The State featured Clara Bow in "Get Your Man," with elaborate stage attractions, and was rewarded with a very excellent showing at the box office. "Beau Sabreur" at the Garrick did much better than an average business, and the same can be said for "The Lovelorn" at the Lyric. "Tillie the Toiler" broke all house records at the Astor. Pantages showed Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson," and found this picture an extremely fine business-getter. It had the advantage of some very favorable newspaper reviews. The Hennepin-Orpheum featured "Let 'Er Go, Gallagher," with Junior Coghlan, and the Seventh Street, "Ranger of the North," with the dog star, Ranger.

The neighborhood houses shared the good business with the downtown theatres. The Lagoon and the advantage of the ever popular F. & R. Kiddie Revue, and Marion Davies in "The Fair Co-ed." The American, Loring Lyndale and Rialto all enjoyed good weeks, showing such pictures as "My Best Girl," "Ben Hur," and "The Big Parade." The week was the more remarkable because the movie theatres had some pretty stiff competition with "The King's Henchman" at the Metropolitan, and "The Barker" at the Shubert.

Des Moines

""WEST POINT" played at the Capitol Theatre, did a very nice week, although this type of picture has been played for a pretty steady run. The feature was applauded in several instances. The stage show, one of the Jack Tarkington shows for Publix, was especially good.

"Shadowland" is the name of this Publix show, which has so many unusual and strong numbers on the bill that it is hard to pick out one feature that was the biggest winner. Paul Spor, personality man, got a big hand.

At the Des Moines "Beau Sabreur" did rather well, though making no such furore as "Beau Geste." It is a strong picture.

Cleveland

THE picture business here last week was very good in some spots, fairly good in other spots, and just fair as an average.

The Allen Theatre broke its records with Adolphe Menjou's latest picture, "Serenade," and a personal appearance of Mae Murray with her Merry Widow Revue. The Stillman continued to do capacity business during the second week of "The Student Prince." Keith's Palace also had a very big week with "The Love Mart" as the feature attraction, a picture unusually enjoyable as an artistic and interesting production. "Two Flaming Youths," a rather hilarious comedy, was listed as fair entertainment by the average audiences at the State, which also headlined Boreo, of the Chauve-Souris, on the vaudeville bill. The Cameo was among those theatres that reported fair business. The attraction was "Streets of Shanghai," pretty good average entertainment of the melodramatic type. Business at Reade's Hippodrome was also fair with "The Warning," improbable but diverting melodrama, as the screen attraction of a combination program. The Park and the Mall, playing "The Coward" simultaneously, each had an average week. Keith's East 105th Street reports that business was just fair. The film was "My Friend from India," farce comedy of other days made up-to-date for popular screen consumption, and successfully so for those who like light entertainment.

Suburban motion picture houses state that business is picking up. While last month was way below the average of previous December, and January started out slow, they are beginning to show a slight increase, indicating confidence in the coming business season.

Legitimate theatres go their share of the profits.

San Francisco

GENERALLY, the week following the first week of the year is not good in this city in the motion picture theatres, but the past week was better than contemplated. The reason given by the managers was that the pictures shown were exceptionally good, in most cases.

The out-standing motion picture of the week, was the "Cohens And The Kellys," shown at the Granada Theatre. Not only was this theatre crowded the opening night, but every night in the week and many afternoons people waited outside. While the management expected to do well with this picture, it did not expect to attract as many as it did. The presentation act, "A Spicy Surprise," really was a surprise and considered by many the greatest presentation act ever shown by Fanchon & Marco.

Loew's Warfield Theatre reported good business with "West Point" and the presentation acts. "Love" was held over a second week at the California Theatre, attracting many within its doors and "Old Ironsides" continued to attract to the St. Francis Theatre.

The feature photo-play, Stranded," together with Pathe news, reviews, and vaudeville acts crowded the Golden Gate Theatre and the Union Square Theatre did remarkably well with "Your Wife and Mine." Many went to the Cameo Theatre to see the Chaplin play, "The Gold Rush." The Coliseum and Alexandria theatres, both district houses, reported very good business. The one showing "A Man's Past" and the other, "Swim, Girl, Swim" and both having presentation acts.

Harrisburg

WITH a well diversified assortment of offerings at the theatres, Harrisburg film patrons had the choice of a number of good things, and showed their appreciation in a way that was reflected favorably on the box office cash registers. It is probable that the biggest drawing card was "Sadie Thompson," at Loew's Regent. Practically every night during the week part of the audience had to stand for lack of seats. In the Victoria the feature was "Beau Sabreur," sequel to "Beau Geste," and it was splendidly patronized, though fewer persons, perhaps, saw it than went to "Sadie Thompson." The newspaper and verbal criticisms of "Beau Sabreur" all spoke of it in terms of highest praise.

Comedy held forth at the Colonial, where "The Poor Nut" was presented with a fair degree of box office success. The play was of a type which seemed especially to please the younger element of film fans.

The screen attraction at the State was Buck Jones in "Blood Will Tell," which had a strong appeal to the audiences. The New Rialto, which came under the control of George M. Krupa, of Lancaster, January 1, offered Gary Cooper in "Arizona Bound," while the National, which also has passed into Krupa's hands, showed Hoot Gibson in "The Prairie King." Both houses were well patronized. The Grand has a good week with "Framed," starring Milton Sills and Natalie Kingston.

A contributing factor to the size of the crowds at all the theatres during the week was the presence in Harrisburg of 40,000 persons from all parts of Pennsylvania in attendance at the Annual State Farm show, most of the sessions of which were held in daytime.

Milwaukee

SHOW business in Milwaukee's downtown theatres was lively last week. The Auto Show brought many folks downtown, and must be held accountable, in a measure, for the good patrnage enjoyed by all downtown houses. The weather was mild and fair and lured folks out in large numbers. Altogether it was a most satisfying week.

The Wisconsin offered "West Point," which drew very good business. "The Four Flusher" was the attraction at the Alhambra. Business here was very active. The Garden is showing "The Jazz Singer" for a third week, and the picture will no doubt be held over for some additional time, as the patronage accorded it warrants its long run. "The Forbidden Woman" was a popular feature on the Orpheum bill. "The Last Waltz" played to fair houses at the Strand. "The Fair Co-ed," at the Merrill, proved so popular last week that it was held over for a second week, and continued to draw good houses.

Business at the outlying theatres was not quite as brisk as that of the downtown houses. "The Big Parade," playing at the Tower, Uptown, Modjeska and Garfield, where it was originally scheduled for a three-day run, was held over because of its popularity for an additional day's showing at these four houses. "She's a Sheik" brought in fairly good business at the Oriental. "Clancy's Kosher Wedding," at the Milwaukee and Venetian, drew a fair amount of patronage. "The Cat and the Canary," at the Egyptian, was well received.

Jacksonville

THE Florida Theatre found that "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" brought in the largest four days' business for some time. A larger banner across the street in front of the theatre and an effective window display were among the devices used for publicity. The stage presentation offered Frank Morris and his Variety Vendors in musical novelties.

The Arcade Theatre showed Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson" the entire week to good business.

Manager W. A. Krause showed "The Thief of Bagdad," starring Douglas Fairbanks, at the Empress for the third or fourth time last Sunday, and attracted a stand-out.

"Ham and Eggs," a synchronized Vitaphone offering, starring Tom Wilson, Heinie Conklin and Myrna Loy, did well at the Imperial.

Birmingham

BUSINESS in Birmingham theatres last week proved unusually good. The rise in box-office receipts has been accredited to the closing of the Empire and Lyric Theares and the temporary closing of the Strand for remodeling.

"My Lady of Whims" brought the Pantages a good week. Clara Bow in this number has met with success at practically all of the houses she has played.

Tom Mix in "The Arizona Wildcat" brought an appreciable box-office to the Ritz.

The comedy, "Baby Mine," with Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, was enjoyed at the Temple, while "French Dressing" went over well at the Trianon.

The Alabama fell down a bit playing Gloria Swanson in "Sadie Thompson."

Pittsburgh

BUSINESS during the week of January 16th was about the average business expected by the theatres in this part of the country at this time, which is capacity houses in the evenings with a fairly good matinee.

The Grand played Milton Sills in "The Valley of the Giants" and the business held up much better than expected as Sills' popularity has been on the wane here, especially after "Hard Boiled Haggerty." The Aldine booked "Wreck of the Hesperus," in addition to a very good vaudeville bill although there were no well known names in the group of acts. Business here was about average, which is satisfactory considering the fact that no familiar names were in the feature, either.

At The Penn Theatre, "West Point," starring Haines with Joan Crawford, both big favorites, assisted by a fair stage revue, did consistently fine, which means a full house afternoons, and long lines in the evening. The Davis, Keith vaudeville house, with "The Spotlight," is building Esther Ralston into one of their best picture bets, although the vaudeville at this house affects business a lot. The Olympic, with Vitaphone and "The Wizard," kept going along as usual, and the State, with "High School Hero," did about the same, both being Fox productions. The Cameo, with "Moon of Israel," dropped off, and is being replaced with "A Man's Past," Saturday.

Considerable talk is going on about the effect the new Stanley Theatre will have on picture houses in general, and especially if it will affect the unusual and excellent business the Penn has been doing.

Kansas City

NIGHT attendance at first-run, downtown houses in Kansas City showed a stimulated increase last week. The personal appearance of Ruth Elder at Loew's Midland, which showed the feature picture "Two Arabian Nights," saw good attendance all week. Matinee business at most houses previously had been satisfactory, but the night attendance for the last two months had been disappointing.

At the Liberty Theatre, which showed "By Whose Hand?", Samuel Carver, manager, effected a tie-up with the local street car company, whereby all patrons were refunded street car fare after 6 o'clock. Attendance at the Liberty was good all week. "Streets of Shanghai," at the Capitol, did a fair business, as did "The Lovelorn," at the Newman. "Love Mart," at the Mainstreet, played to better than average crowds, while "The Jazz Singer," featuring Al Jolson, at the Globe, did a profitable second week's run. "Ladies Must Dress" played to better than average attendance at the Pantages. No unusual exploitation was employed at any theatre.

Ottawa

THERE was one big picture in Ottawa, Ont., during the week of January 16, and that was "Ben Hur" at the Regent Theatre. The others were enjoyable entertainment, but they suffered by comparison. Record crowds swarmed into the Regent all week despite the announcement of a second week.

The second most-discussed feature was "The Gorilla" at the Centre Theatre, where big crowds went to be thrilled—and they were not disappointed. It was an unusual type of picture, and one not soon to be forgotten. Incidentally, the censor board of Ontario reduced the scenes showing the negligee woman to a flash.

"The Forbidden Woman," starring Jetta Goudal, brought excellent returns to B. F. Keith's Theatre. Manager J. M. Franklin has literally made Jetta Goudal's name locally and Keith patrons now look forward to her appearance on the screen.

Marion Davies is also a pet of Imperial Theatre patrons, and there is ready response when she appears there. Her "Quality Street" proved to be a substantial production, and the good crowds were tickled.

Neighborhood theatres enjoyed big business, with more than ordinary features, backed by serials and comedies. One of the most pleasing presentations during the week was Gilda Gray's "Aloma of the South Seas," with which was shown the final chapter of "On Guard." There was also a big time at the Columbia Theatre when Louise Fazenda tripped through "Footloose Widows." At the Fern Theatre, "Women Love Diamonds," with plenty of stars, registered well with both patrons and Manager Fred Benson.

Theatregoers of Hull, Quebec, had the choice of comedy and drama. "The Blood Ship" at the Laurier Theatre was a strong attraction, and received general approval from the French-Canadian patrons. "Sailor Izzy Murphy" proved to be the best comedy feature in a long time at the Eden Theatre, and patronage was very satisfactory.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatres took a good jump upward this week, each enjoying an unusually good box office.

First honors go to the Howard, showing Douglas Fairbanks in "The Gaucho." The picture played all week to capacity houses. Assisting the picture was Ray Teal, new bandmaster of the Howard's orchestra who, himself, proved a good drawing card.

Following close on the heels of the Howard, the Capitol played to packed hoses with "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris." Critics were very generous towards it.

Next to "The Gaucho," Atlanta critics gave "The Student Prince" at Loew's Grand the choice break, and, although the picture drew extraordinarily well, competition in other houses held it back from doing the super-capacity which the theatre expected.

"Rose of the Golden West" was offered at Keith's Georgia, and was well liked.

At the Metropolitan "The Haunted Ship" proved popular, and "Fashion Madness" and "The Pioneer Scout," at the Rialto, brought good houses.

The Tudor had three first runs, "Devil's Twins," "Golden Snare" and "Grinnin' Guns,', playing to fair houses.

Tampa

THE past week chalked up a "better than average" record for all houses. The weather was like spring, and there are a goodly number of winter visitors here, which helped, although the programs offered were fine.

The Tampa had a very good week with "Sadie Thompson" featured the first half, and "Wife Savers" the last. Both features went over fine and made corking good entertainment.

The Victory used "On to Reno" the first two days to good returns. The next two, "Queen High," a road show, held the boards. "Alias the Deacon," and a five act vaudeville bill, kept 'em coming good for the last three days.

"Streets of Shanghai" started the week off fine for the Strand. "French Dressing" opened Tuesday, and gave the house the best Tuesday business in three months, with good returns the following two. "The Irresistible Lover" drew well the last two days.

The Franklin went over the top with the entire week registering better than average. "Nomads of the North" did fine, and "A Texas Steer," booked in for a one day return date, brought good returns. "Silver Valley" was featured the last three days, and kept up the record.

New Orleans

DESPITE several days of inclement weather the past week New Orleans first run and downtown theatres did an excellent business. All the houses played strong pictures.

Loew's State Theatre led the local field from an attendance standpoint with "Baby Mine." An excellent bill of vaudeville was given in conjunction with "Baby Mine," but it was the picture that pulled 'em in.

The New Saenger's business was above average, with "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" on the screen and its Publix act on the stage. The picture was liked by patrons, but it was the high quality of the stage show that turned them out fully pleased.

"West Point" was the Strand offering and the girls turned out in great numbers to see it. Haines is popular with the local fair sex.

The Trianon's business soared during the past week, too, with "Buffalo Bill's Last Fight," in colors, on the screen in connection with the personal appearance of Chief Bob-Tail Horse, full blooded Indian star of the picture, and his Indian children.

Although "Sadie Thompson" had its premiere at the New Saenger, the Tudor Theatre did an excellent week's business, as did the Globe, which featured Clara Bow in "Get Your Man." This latter picture had its local premiere at the Palace.

The Orpheum featured "Silk Legs" on the screen, and Daily Paskman's Radio Minstrels on the stage, with the result that business took a decided spurt over that of the previous week.

"Flying U Ranch" was the Crescent Theatre film and was liked, although business was nothing to brag about. The Palace featured "Thunder," the dog, in "The Silent Avenger." Business was fair, as patrons not only saw the film but a musical tab show in addition.

The Liberty Theatre played the "Spotlight" and business mounted. The new Lyceum showed "The Way of All Flesh," and even though it had its first showing elsewhere business was good.

All the local neighborhood and suburban houses report business as being better than the previous week.

Portland, Ore.

TEBBETT'S new East Side Theatre, connected very satisfactorily with "Wild Geese," doing near record business. Josef Srodkas' orchestra and Glen Shelley at the organ, were also assets. The Rivoli, did not fare so well with "The Shepherd of the Hills," although it was given laudatory comment by both press and public, but it did not seem to have the wallop to carry it through. "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" is scheduled for an early engagement.

The Liberty improved it's gross, with Jackie Coogan's "Buttons," and a far-better-than-average vaudeville program. Inez King, local radio star, headlined, and no doubt was responsible for the improved condition. The Columbia went to good results by exhibiting Universal's "Out All Night," starring Glenn Tryon. Harry Linden's orchestra, in concert, also found favor.

John Hamrick's Blue Mouse, in its third week with "The Jazz Singer," found the going somewhat slower, but still managed to take in a profitable gross. Vitaphone acts, together with Fox Movietone, are furnishing house's patrons with much amusement.

"What Price Glory" came back to the People's for a four-day engagement, and packed them in at nearly all performances. House did one of the best weeks in year. The Broadway was another house that did fine business with John Gilbert in "Man, Woman and Sin," and a fair Fanchon and Marco presentation. Olie Wallace, the new band leader and master of ceremonies at the Broadway, is hitting on all six, and is becoming a favorite in this town.

Opinions on Pictures

Beau Sabreur

Sheik and Desert Romance—Fair

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THOSE who have been waiting in expectation of seeing a fitting sequel to "Beau Geste" are sure to be disapponted here. The intention may have been good to equal it or surpass it, but the story simply isn't there. It turns out to be but another sheik and desert romance—with the emphasis placed upon the sheik and his romance. There is some skirmishing over the hot sands and a villain bobs up to annoy the heroine, a flapper novelist who's been out in the East in search of local color. "Beau Geste" had a real background and spirit and charm besides. It touched deep wells of pathos, too.

But "Beau Sabreur" merely goes over familiar ground. It is well enough staged, and is acted competently enough by Noah Beery. Gary Cooper is too grim as the hero, but Evelyn Brent reveals acting ability which shows that her talent flashed in "Underworld" is genuine.

The action shows the usual martial dispute between the French Foreign Legion and the Arabs. Some of it is fairly exciting, but it is nothing which hasn't been done before on several occasions. Those who saw "Beau Geste" should regard that excellent film as something apart from the rest. If they do they will react more favorably toward "Beau Sabreur."

Drawing Power: Title and fact that it succeeds "Beau Geste." The cast, comprising Noah Beery, Gary Cooper and Evelyn Brent, should help. Exploitation Angles: Place the tri-color of France through the lobby for a color scheme. Play cast up and feature new sheik in Gary Cooper.

Theme: Romantic drama of French Foreign Legion, with central figure combining love and duty in fighting his enemies and saving the heroine.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, eight reels. Released, January, 1928. Cast: Gary Cooper, Evelyn Brent, Noah Beery, Roscoe Karns, William Powell, Mitchell Lewis, Arnold Kent, Joan Standing, Frank Reicher. Director, John Waters.

The Last Command

Jannings Fine As Usual, Dwarfs the Story

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THE filmgoer isn't beating around in a circle when he takes in a Jannings picture. He knows full well he is in for some inspired acting regardless of the plot that projects the talented Teuton, so again he turns in a marvelous character study in the role of a Russian general whom the war has ruined. And the performance touches the depths of pathos when the former aristocrat, broken in spirit, becomes a Hollywood movie extra and tries to live over the days of his early glory.

The climax, showing the star dying of exhaustion, saves the story, which is nothing to make an entry in your notebook over. Doubtless it is more or less true, since the studio town is filled with Russian refugees of high and low degree, bent upon making some sort of livelihood. But it is morbid and mostly heavy, though relieved from its gray tones through some ironic humor concerning activities of the extras.

Jannings saves it from falling to pieces. His acting is as exceptional as that which marked "The Last Laugh" and "The Way of All Flesh." There is nothing original about the treatment. But Sternberg deserves credit for sticking to his realities. His atmosphere is good, and he gets results from his players, particularly Evelyn Brent, whose talent is coming right out in the open since "Underworld." If for no other reason than Jannings decorates the film it is worth any exhibitor's screen and any patron's money.

Drawing Power: Jannings' name should act like a magnet in drawing them. For any house, large or small. Exploitation Angles: Feature Jannings in another remarkable character study. Capitalize upon the Russian Revolution and how Hollywood is filled with refugees. Feature Evelyn Brent.

THEME: Drama of overbearing Russian general, who is broken physically and spiritually by Revolution, and who has taste of erstwhile glory as movie extra.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Length, eight reels. Released January, 1928. The Cast: Emil Jannings, Evelyn Brent, William Powell, Nicholas Soussanin, Michael Visaroff. Director, Josef von Sternberg.

Bare Knees

In Which the Flapper Proves Her Worth

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THERE is a little bit of everything mixed up in this tale, whose moral seems to be that the modern flapper is more dependable morally than her more staid sister of the rural districts. Surely Miss Virginia Lee Corbin's portrayal of the role will be used as an argument by the younger generation to gain a point for modernism with her parents. It amounts almost to a glorification of the flapper and makes hypocrites of the non-flappers.

The story is rather impressive at that and makes one wonder if there is not a lot of truth in the text. Unfortunately in an effort to inject a superfluity of comedy unnecessarily, much of the effectiveness is lost. The climax, while exciting, is so improbable that it is entirely unconvincing. Here we find the flapper and a boy friend on the extreme end of a burning pleasure pier with no means of escaping other than by swimming, yet they sit down and calmly puff cigarettes while apprising each other that they cannot swim. It's all very thrilling, this fire scene, but both Johnnie Walker and Miss Corbin are entirely too nonchalant in the face of what apparently is sure death.

There is plenty of zip and dash to the picture from the time Miss Corbin first shocks the small towners by her display of knees and cigarette smoking until she has most of them converted and playing the night clubs. A silly baseball game injected for purposes of comedy relief adds nothing to the story.

Drawing Power: The theme is a popular one, and while a little exaggerated it should prove a good attraction for most houses. Exploitation Angles: There is plenty of opportunity to launch a controversy over modern flapperism and the old style staid conservatism.

THEME: Drama in which a modern flapper visits her married sister in a small town, shocks the sister's friends with her modernism, gradually converts them to her ideas, convinces them that sophistication and naturalness are less dangerous than ultra conservatism and eventually rescues her sister from becoming unfaithful to her husband.

Produced by Gotham Pictures. Released February 1, 1928. Length, 5,800 feet. Produced under the management of Carrol Sax, and the supervision of Harold Shumate. Directed by Erle C. Kenton. Edited by Denn Hayes. Titles by Casey Robinson. The Cast: Virginia Lee Corbin, Donald Keith, Jane Winton, Johnnie Walker, Forrest Stanley, Maude Fulton.

Let 'Er Go Gallegher

It'll Satisfy Them

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

ONE would not be extending a hazardous guess in declaring that Richard Harding Davis' "Gallegher," transplanted in the movies, will please the customers at the box office. That is about the only way you can size up this screen version of the story, for there are an abundance of good points to take cognizance of—story, character portrayal and action. There's a zip and a zest to it that is calculated to set an audience, particularly one of children, in a good humor. How the children will indulge in laughter at the antics of Junior Coghlan! This youngster keeps the laughs coming by his immature detective work and efforts to help his reporter friend, Harrison Ford. It is the lot of these worthies, however, to have their performances relegated to the background because of the excellent portrayal of the heavy by Ivan Lebedeff, who shows that he is quite at home 'neath the Kliegs.

Ford, as the young reporter, has achieved a scoop for his paper due to the activities of his youthful friend, Gallegher, who had witnessed the latest crime of "Four Fingers," a notorious cutthroat. After his excellent piece of work the reporter develops a swelled head, and, when fired by the city editor, believes that he had been railroaded out of his job. Just when his romance with the pretty lady editor, Elinor Fair, shows signs of going to the rocks, he receives a 'phone call from young Gallegher to the effect that he has located their criminal.

Gallegher has trailed "Four Fingers" with more courage than common sense, and had fallen into his hands. The situation is tight for the kid, for the criminal knows that the boy was an eye-witness to his latest crime, and that he notified the press about it. Ford and a detective appear on the scene in time to stave off the villain, who has become most menacing.

The best part of the story, perhaps, is that where Gallegher trails "Four Fingers" along a dark country lane, is forced to seek refuge in a house, but falls prisoner to the criminal, anyway. Another good scene is where Gallegher, the reporter and "Four Fingers" go speeding through the night in an automobile to catch the last edition of Ford's paper.

Drawing Power: Good. Exploitation Angles: The author's name and fame cannot very well be overlooked. As the story deals with a kid detective, the press book suggests badges for kids. Be sure to tell the fans it's a newspaper story.

THEME: Story of waif who sees crime committed by notorious murderer. He tells his reporter friend and the latter gets a scoop for his paper. When the reporter is fired because of a puffed head, the kid again helps him win another exclusive story about the criminal, whom they capture together.

Produced by De Mille Pictures. Distributed by Pathe. Released, January, 1928. Length, 5,888 feet. The Cast: Junior Coghlan, Harrison Ford, Elinor Fair, Ivan Lebedeff, Wade Boteler, E. H. Calvert. Director, Elmer Clifton.

What Price Beauty

Not So Strongly Concocted

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A DEFT hand is sadly missing in the direction and supervision of this artificial story, one that is weak in story matter, acting and manner of presentation. It seems to us that the entire piece is over exaggerated.

It is the story of a little country girl who works in a beauty shop, where she falls in love with the young manager. He finds her much more attractive than the painted up dolls around him. Her natural beauty, unblemished with heavy make-up, is more charming and winning to him than the studied features and heavily perfumed womanliness of a professional charmer.

There is very little attempt to characterize any of the characters. The deadly touch of exaggeration has gotten them all. If the heroine is a sweet young thing, exuding rural cleanliness, they must needs present her as actually drooping with an attitude of girlish innocence. If the vamp is called on to have many admirers, they must needs have a flock of them fawning and smirking in her presence and acting quite imbecile. The only person in this galaxy of bedecked women and their male admirers who retains some semblance of naturalness and plausibility is the young man impersonated by Pierre Gendron. The others are overdrawn and are called upon to do such foolish things.

Nita Naldi has fared before this far better in the role of a vamp. Her role is not what you would term a grateful one, as there is very little of anything lasting or worthwhile in it. About all Nita is called on to do is to look sensuous, sigh languorously and look dangerously attractive.

"What Price Beauty" strikes one as being an overdone type of picture. The hand of Natacha Rombova, who wrote and supervised it, leaned too heavily upon it, we imagine. They have spent money on it, too, as certain of its scenes will testify. What it needs so badly—clear, straightforward characterizations untouched by an unhealthy, hothouse sort of atmosphere—you have not even the slightest inkling of. They gave it several moments of reality, but these are quickly swallowed up in the trivial story, around which have been swathed much of decorativeness to balance the lack of true worth so apparent in practically every portion of the picture.

Drawing Power: Between poor and fair. Some women may like it, but for the most part we believe that it will not bring much of a response from an audience of intelligent adults.

Exploitation Angles: Mention the fact that Nita Naldi stars in it and that Natacha Rambova (former Mrs. Rudolph Valentino) had a hand in its making. One feature of it is that it is a nifty bet for tie-ups with beauty parlors.

THEME: Drama of vamp against country girl for handsome young manager of beauty parlor. The man wavers between the two attractions, but at last succumbs to the lure of the country lass because of her natural beauty.

Distributed by Pathe. Released January 22, 1928. Length, 5 reels. The Cast: Nita Naldi, Pierre Gendron, Dolores Johnson, Virginia Pearson, Myrna Loy, Sally Winters, La Supervia, Marilyn Newkirk, Victor Potel, Spike Rankin, Semplar Sax, Leo White. Titles by M. S. Boylan. Director, Thomas Buckingham.

Beware of Married Men

Fairly Entertaining Farce

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IRENE RICH is starred in this farce which has its good and bad spots. As a whole it is fairly passable, with Miss Rich accomplishing some of the best work she has done in any of her recent pictures. She is the protective big sister of a frivolous young sister, but in the end needs the younger sister's protection herself. In the farcical scenes, as well as in the love sequences, Miss Rich performs capably.

There are parts of the picture that are far-fetched but they happen before it settles down into the farcical angle, which is very well done. Director Archie C. Mayo deserves special commendation for the manner in which the farce is carried out. He retains the dignity of his characters when they are all thrust into rather embarrassing predicaments, rather than strive for a few laughs by making of it the usual hilarious farce. This makes for suspense rather than comedy and it also lifts the picture from mediocrity to good entertainment.

When Miss Rich appears at the home of an old acquaintance disguised as a social worker to protect her younger sister, the thing is overdrawn a trifle, but this weakness is overcome when she is almost immediately recognized and the tables turned on her. Richard Tucker as the noted divorce lawyer who is in love with Miss Rich does his work well, as does Stuart Holmes in the role of the married man who causes all the trouble. Myrna Loy is the deceived wife and Audrey Ferris is effective as the frivolous younger sister.

Drawing Power: The story is fair and the cast a good one so it should be pretty well. Exploitation Angles: The divorce problem and the title offer opportunities for some effective exploitation.

THEME: Domestic farce in which older sister in love with noted divorce lawyer attempts to save her younger sister from the wiles of a married man. The younger sister elopes with her boy friend and returns to find her older sister being molested by the married man. In attempting to give aid both are embarressed at the home of the married man with the simultaneous arrival of the lawyer and the wife, which situation is cleverly worked out.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Released, Jan 14, 1928. Length, 5,121 feet. The Cast: Irene Rich, Myrna Loy, Audrey Ferris, Clyde Cook, Richard Tucker, Stuart Holmes, Hugh Allan. Director, Archie L. Mayo. Story by Franz Jacques. Scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

Freckles

A Pretty and Dramatic Portrayal

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

IN transposing this well known Gene Stratton Porter novel to the screen much of the original beauty, charm and action have been retained with the dramatic sequences heightened to make it more entertaining screen material than some of this author's stories that have gone before. There is all of the beauty of the Limberlost and the lovable characters of the bird woman, the swamp angel and the one-armed boy outcast.

There is a genuine appeal to these characters which is emphasized by the occasional dramatic sequences to make of it a pleasing and entertaining picture. Some of the dramatic action is implausible and the climaxes somewhat hollow but somehow or other these defects are easily overlooked in the otherwise pleasing trend of the story.

John Fox, Jr. is Freckles and he is ideally cast. He is splendidly fitted by appearance and personality to a role that must be well portrayed to be effective. In fact he might have too much the appearance of dogged determination to win all the sympathy the role calls for. Gene Stratton as the swamp angel is equally as good as the hero. She is a sweet, simple girl who conducts herself with rare naturalness before the camera.

Drawing Power: The popularity of the author and the story, together with its capable direction and god acting, should bring pleasing results in almost any type of house. Exploitation Angles: Book-store and library tieups should be easily effected. The author's name and the wide circulation of the book should also be good for other exploitation angles. It would be well to stress the highly dramatic action with which the pretty story is studded.

THEME: Freckles, an escaped orphan, handicapped by the loss of a hand, wanders into the McLean lumber camp and despite his youth is given work as a timber guard in a Limberlost infested with desperate characters. He guards the trees successfully and wins the love of his employer and the swamp angel. Realizing there is a wide gulf socially between him and the girl he makes no attempt to recover when a giant tree in falling pins him down and seriously injures him. His recovery is rapid, however, when the girl expresses her love for him.

Produced and distributed by F B O. Released, March 21, 1928. Length, 6,131 feet. The Cast: John Fox, Jr., Gene Stratton, Hobart Bosworth, Eulalie Jensen, Billy Scott, Lafe McKee. Directed by Leo Meehan. From the novel by Gene Stratton-Porter. Continity by Dorothy Yost. Titles by Jeanette Meehan.

Drums of Love

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHO said Griffith was through? The master of shadings and shadows, the builder of climaxes, demonstrates again that he has a firm hold on the treatment of a screen story. He takes as his subject here a triangle which is as old as romance itself—an idea founded upon "Francesca di Rimini." It is the tale of two brothers, one blessed with looks and personality, the other burly and deformed. The beautiful wife of the latter is the pawn. She prefers the handsome brother and the husband metes out his punishment by killing them.

This is all told with the utmost simplicity—and if it builds slowly the treatment is perfectly excusable to emphasize the impending tragedy of the climax. The original story cannot be read inside of three days. Why should one scoff over the film which has to be told within two hours? Griffith presents his characters and one can anticipate the drama, which releases itself in the second part. Here the preliminaries are succeeded by dramatic events which hold one in a tight embrace.

It is marked by exceptional characterization as suggested in the acting of Mary Philbin, Lionel Barrymore and Tully Marshall. The latter is the vengeful troublemaker who instigates the tragedy. The play of expression by Miss Philbin is a tribute to what she can do when properly directed. And Griffith brings out the conflict in her soul with fine understanding of the frailties of human nature. As for the settings, atmosphere, lighting and other details—these are all in order and provide fitting backgrounds for one of the best films D. W. or anyone else has projected in a long time.

Drawing Power: The Griffith appeal. The beauty of Miss Philbin. Exploitation Angles: Play up as one of Griffith's best. Make a play for the better class of patrons. For all kinds of houses.

THEME: Drama of triangle between two brothers and the wife of one of them, culminating in a tragedy.

Produced by D. W. Griffith. Distributed by United Artists. Length, ten reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: Mary Philbin, Lionel Barrymore, Don Alvarado, Tully Marshall, William Austin, Eugenie Besserer, Charles Hill Mailes, Rosemary Cooper and Joyce Coad. Story by Gerrit J. Lloyd. Cameraman, Karl Struss. Director, D. W. Griffith.

Sharp Shooters

First Rate Comedy with Plentiful Laughs

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

TURNING a melodrama into a comedy is not bad business at all, especially when the idea is an old one and has been used time and again in conventional films. Here it bobs up as the yarn of an innocent French girl who is a nautch dancer in a Morocco honky-tonk. The mere fact that she isn't painted as a scheming hussy is a laugh in itself. Some may object that Lois Moran is miscast in the role, but as the story progresses one cannot help but accept her as entirely adaptable to the demands of the character and plot.

The idea exploits her affair with a sailor who frowns upon matrimony. He is a reckless, boasting chap and the girl believes everything he tells her. And their romance is about all there is to the picture. It may look kind of skimpy as to plot, but it keeps going through its mirth-provoking incidents, its action and the acting of the players.

George O'Brien, as the gob, injects spirit and personality into the role and Gwen Lee, in the rather unimportant part of the other woman, gives an adequate performance. It is a good little picture—the figure of the sailor not caring especially for the girl but still not wanting anyone else to have her, ringing quite genuine.

Drawing Power: Suitable for average houses. The work of players. Exploitation Angles: Feature Lois Moran, who flashes some real acting, and play up O'Brien, who also does good work. Bill as the romance of a sailor.

THEME: Comedy-romance of nautch girl who loves a sailor. Latter does not especially care for her yet he doesn't want anyone else to have her.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Length, six reels. Released, January, 1928. The Cast: George O'Brien, Lois Moran, Owen Lee, Noah Young, Tom Dugan, William Demarest, Josef Swickard. Director, J. G. Blystone.

The Cowboy Cavalier

The Cowboys Solve a Murder Mystery

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

A MYSTERIOUS killing forms the nucleus of this mystery story transplanted to the wide open spaces where the honest, God fearing cowboys ride down their man after trailing him over the range. Buddy Roosevelt took this mystery very seriously and worked like a Trojan in clearing up the haze which hung protectingly over the villains' maneuvers. Out of the adventure he wins himself a wife, a girl who had been thrown so suddenly into the killing affair that her mind became unhinged.

The mystery is not handled as well as one could wish and the director and author have not attempted to keep the identity of the murderer hidden from you. A suspicion as to his true character develops into certain knowledge before the picture is half over. Roosevelt does not know that his friend is the killer; he begins to get an inkling of it all when the villain kidnaps the girl and takes her to his hideaway where he hopes to obtain a written confession from her that she did the killing.

This is the proper time, of course, to introduce Roosevelt and the sheriff's posse. The villain and his henchmen are overwhelmed and it is revealed that the heavy had hired the assassin to do his dirty work with the expectation of inheriting the rich ranch of the dead man, whose nephew he happens to be. The girl recovers her poise of mind and marries the energetic young man impersonated by Roosevelt.

A young lady who takes her work seriously and really emotes before the camera, Olive Hasbrouck, as the girl dazed and blank of mind, contributes the best acting of the cast. At times she rises far above her surroundings. Another good bit is had in the brief role of Bob Clark, as the foreman of the ranch. Robert Walker is a good villain.

It is a fairly entertaining western film and the fans should find it interesting.

Drawing Power: Okay for the neighborhood trade where the lure of the western is ever predominant. Exploitation Angles: You tell 'em.

THEME: Mystery drama of the open range. Girl loses her memory when she sees her uncle brutally slain. Young deputy finds out the real villain and straightens out the mess. The girl recovers her mental balance and marries him.

Produced by Action Pictures, Inc. Released, January 29, 1928. Length, 4,526 feet. The Cast: Buddy Roosevelt, Olive Hasbrouck, Charles K. French, Fannie Midgley, Robert Walker, Bob Clark, William Ryno. Story by Betty Burbridge. Director, Richard Thorpe.

The Fourflusher

Will Suffice for Average Crowds

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

THIS screen adaptation of the play by Caesar Dunn provides entertainment of an average brand. In its celluloid garb it has been treated in much the same manner of "The Collegians" series. The picture portrays the spirit of youth and all its romancing and striving, its humiliations and spurts of seriousness—and this youthful essence is probably its best asset. For in "The Fourflusher" you will find very little of characterization (except for Eddie Phillips, who is seen only in flashes). The players are all fair enough but for George Lewis, who is too subdued and colorless to fill capably the title role. It is a role, it appears to us, that demanded some individual quirks of character, some interesting aspects of the personality within. Lewis is a nice young man to look at but as "The Fourflusher" he is too often a good looking automaton.

Being the inventor of a new arch supporter, Lewis enters business for himself on the strength of a loan from the bank which, unknown to him, is a part of a trust fund that his uncle is about to establish for his future. The self same uncle has a series of accidents with Lewis with the result that he wrathfully changes his mind about the trust fund, leaving Lewis in debt to the bank and the butt of hungry creditors. He is in such dire straits that he is even forced to return the engagement ring he had given the girl.

However, when things are most dark, the young man, before his assembled creditors, sells his arch supporter for a fortune. He had hired an actor to offer huge sums for his invention in the presence of the creditors. But a real buyer had suddenly appeared and bid in opposition to the actor so that when the deal has been concluded Lewis found himself the possessor of enough money to continue his thriving business and marry the girl.

Drawing Power: The fact that "The Collegians" have established quite a few followers among the fans may boost up the patronage for "The Fourflusher" because of several of that series' stars in the feature's cast. Exploitation Angles: Arrange tie-up with shoe store. Use playing cards for a fourflush lobby display.

THEME: Comedy drama of a young shoe clerk and his successful efforts to establish business of his own and win the girl of his heart.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Released, January, 1928. Length, 6,193 feet. The Cast: George Lewis, Marian Nixon, Eddie Phillips, Churchill Ross, Hayden Stevenson, Jimmy Aye, Burr McIntosh, Otto Hoffman, Wilfred North, Miriam Fauche, Patricia Caron. Director, Wesley Ruggles.

"Sealed Orders"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

JACK PERRIN is the star in this western featurette, whose story is somewhat above the average, though still retaining much of the stereotyped stuff that characterizes all of these short westerns. Perrin is of the mounted police. He cleans up the desperado band and saves the girl from a life of loneliness with a misjudged father.

The Ramseys, father and daughter, are practically hiding out in a hut in a desolate country because of a theft charged against the father, which he did not commit. When Bruce Wallace, M. P., saves Ailine from some desperate pursuers he is nonplussed by her refusal to answer his questions and is determined to get at the facts of the case.

A mysterious note enlightens the ranger somewhat, and he starts on the trail of the outlaws. Taking them by surprise he has them covered, when he is attacked from the rear and rendered unconscious. He is left in that state while the outlaws dash for the Ramsey cabin, hoping to recover the bonds, which they think Ramsey has stolen. Bruce Wallace regains consciousness and continues the pursuit. Again he gets the upper hand on the bandit gang, but the leader gets away, taking Ailine with him. Eventually the ranger captures the bandit leader and proves the charges against Ramsey false. There is the usual thrilling action to the story, and it should go well where they like this type of picture.

"Wild Puppies"

(Fox—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS is one of those kid comedies between two gangs of youngsters who engage in a battle royal with the smaller boys cleaning up the larger ones. Cleaning up is rather a poor description; messing up would be more to the point, for they route the enemy by the accurate hurling of over ripe fruit, vegetables, eggs and pies of all kinds.

Aside from the ingenious devices used in this modern warfare among kids there is little to recommend in the rough comedy. With the two armies entrenched in a back lot the younger element launch bomb-hurling machines, zeps, aeroplanes and scouting balloons which bring about the complete defeat of the older gang. There is some real humor in the way these devices are manipulated, but there the humor ends, unless it be funny to some to witness close-ups of overmatured fruit and vegetables and ancient eggs smashing against the countenances of the youngsters. If this last is comedy, then this two-reeler must be termed a riot of fun, for it must have required the services of most of Hollywood's garbage men to gather the material that is hurled.

"An Unexpected Hero"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

AN old story with a slightly unusual twist is used effectively in this two-reeler of the Texas Ranger series, in which Fred Gilman and Marjorie King are the featured players. Incidentally, in Miss King, Universal seems to have a prize. She is a very attractive young person who looks as though she might fit nicely into a higher type of picture.

Here she is seen in the role of a motion picture star driving a covered wagon at top speed across the prairie and closely pursued by a bandit gang who are shooting wildly as they close in on the wagon. At this juncture Fred Gilman, as the Texas ranger, dashes to the rescue and breaks up a perfectly good motion picture sequence as the director and his crew storm madly.

Fred, very much chagrined, takes his departure as the picture company prepare to retake the scene. He shortly encounters Red Peters, gunman and killer with a price on his head. Red tries a getaway by jumping aboard the same covered wagon and taking possession. A wild chase ensues and Fred eventually battles Red in the wagon as the horses bolt beyond the control of the girl. Fred after subduing Red brings the horses to a halt as the director and his staff come upon the scene. The girl persuades the director to give Fred a chance in the movies and he is then discovered as a "find." It is a pretty lively picture with some real thrilling action.

"Buckskin Days"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

NEWTON HOUSE, Lillian Gilmore and Edmund Cobb are the featured players in this encounter with the Indians and their renegade white leader. It has the usual thrills which characterize this type of picture and the heroes are most heroic in overcoming the enemy, though badly outnumbered.

When the elder Warren died he left his daughter (Lillian Gilmore) and his son Slim (Newton House) to struggle along on the old homestead. Slim, returning from the post of supplies, is spied by the Indians, who give chase, but he outdistances them, though forced to abandon his wagon of supplies. Arriving home he finds his sister talking to Jeff Wilkes (Edmund Cobb), a neighbor, and a stranger, who quickly takes his departure.

Slim returns in the hope of saving some of his supplies and sees the stranger donning Indian garb and earnestly conversing with the Indians. He is discovered when he steps on a twig and is made captive, after which the Indians depart to make a surprise attack on the Warren cottage. Slim manages to wiggle himself loose from his bonds and returns to the cabin in time to assist his sister and Jeff in driving off the Indians and capturing the renegade. As the action goes, the picture is well above the average for its type.

"A Man of Letters"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS comedy of the Let George Do It series features Sid Saylor in a lot of ridiculous antics that probably will be well received by the followers of these two-reelers. It is just a lot of hokum and slapstick but they should be good for some laughs.

George is a mail clerk whose service at the delivery window is very poor, particularly with the arrival of his girl friend, who is looking for an important letter, which falls into the hands of a pair of male and female crooks. The male crook drops the letter and it becomes attached to the sole of George's sticky shoe, who starts on his rounds with mail, pursued by the crooks.

George is lured into an apartment house where a fierce scuffle ensues for possession of the letter. The girl arrives and joins the battle, in which the crooks apparently make a successful getaway with the letter, but George then reveals that they have only the envelope, while he has the valuable contents.

"Versatility"

(Sportlight-Pathe—One Reel)

SPORTING celebrities who have proved their versatility in several lines of sport are shown at their various pastimes in this latest of the Grantland Rice Sportlights. Here we see Miss Lillian Copeland of California revealing the proper form in which a discus should be thrown, hurdles should be mounted and broad and high jumps accomplished. Other stars whose work is put on display are Harry Fisher, former Williams College athlete, Walter Kinsella, Joe Pilates and Lenore Allan, all around sportsmen and sportswomen. Slow motion reveals the different styles that have made all of these champions in their lines. The picture is both entertaining and instructive.—CHESTER J. SMITH.

"Racing Mad"

(Educational—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Raymond Ganly)

AL ST. JOHN, the acrobatic comedian, has a better than average comedy in this two-reeler. Al can generally put over gags with a deft touch and here he has opportunities of the [illegible]. He is generally active and his vehicles are not, as a rule, weighed down with stretches of dullness. As the comedy deals with the whirling roads, Director Stephen Roberts has seen to it that speed characterizes its motion. They have given Al a unique sort of car—half auto, half airplane—to win the race. He has to buck up against some tough opposition to come out victorious.

With him in the driver's seat is a darky whose rolling eyes and scared actions are effective as laugh attractors. Some of the titles, too, can be laughed at or with. In his flying car Al and his colored friend have a lively tussle to win the race. To get over an obstruction Al starts the flying device and then finds out that he cannot control it. Both he and the negro get a big scare, but they again return to earth and win the contest.

Al is appropriately dumb as the driver anxious to win the auto classic so that he can marry the daughter of the car's inventor. Phil Dunham, Estelle Bradley, and Spencer Bell are the other members of the cast.

"Out in the Rain"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

THIS picture of the Gump series is overburdened with a lot of silly nonsense that is so silly it sometimes gets funny. It is an entirely disconnected tale depending entirely upon gags and horseplay for its laughs. "All wet" would be an almost perfect description.

It starts off with young Chester switching the garden hoses of his parents and next door neighbor, so that the hoses are applied to the wrong faucets. Min sends Andy out to work in the garden and Andy apparently has no success in turning on the water. As a matter of fact he turns the faucet just as his neighbor looks down the nozzle to see what's the matter with his hose. Then the action is reversed and the neighbor turns on the Gump hose, swamping not only Andy, but Min, who comes to join him. Much repetition of this gag follows before the mistake is discovered.

As though that didn't wet things enough Min invites guests to remain over night on a stormy night and the Gumps give up their one bedroom and take refuge on chairs under a leaky roof. The leak becomes more pronounced and the room is entirely flooded before morning.

"Buster Steps Out"

(Universal—Two Reels)

(Reviewed by Chester J. Smith)

BUSTER, Mary Jane, Tige and the neighborhood kids have a grand time in this comedy of the Buster Brown series. Whatever else might be said of it, it cannot be said that it lacks for action. There is something doing every moment, and there are some situations and gags that are bound to be laugh producers.

The fun starts when the Brown canary makes its escape from the cage and Buster and Mary give chase. In their efforts to recapture the bird they cause general havoc in the Brown home, upsetting furniture and bric-a-brac. Eventually, when the canary tires of the chase, it returns to the cage.

An exciting auto ride follows when Mrs. Brown allows the children to take the neighborhood kids for a ride. Through the heart of the business district they dash wildly, disrupting traffic and spilling motorcyclists. On out into the country they dash and wind up with a fishing sequence, into which is introduced considerable merriment. While the story is considerably disjointed it is productive of some good comedy.

New York & New Jersey

A MEETING of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey is scheduled for Wednesday of this week at the Newark Athletic Club. Important trade matters will be discussed, the most prominent being the much talked about Brookhart bill which has become a matter of much controversy.

As a direct result of the recently formed organization known as the Film Carriers Association, exhibitors in the New York and New Jersey shipping zone will in the future receive their shows a half hour earlier than in the past. Instead of the trucks leaving exchanges at eleven o'clock in the morning they will depart at ten thirty a. m., thus giving theatres thirty minutes more leeway on the preparation of the daily program. The Film Club of New York City also lent their cooperation to the move.

An important and most interesting item of news affecting Jersey City theatre circles is the report that Loew has actually started to prepare a site for a 4,000 seat house in Journal Square. The shovels will be on the job by Feb. 1, it is said. When completed this theatre wil' bring up the total number of seats in this neighborhood to 12,000—all within one block.

Walter Reade, New Jersey circuit theatre owner, is getting ready to take his annual trip to Florida's balmy clime. Needless to say, the Rolls Royce will be awaiting Mr. Reade when he arrives.

The M. & S. Circuit, operators of a chain of theatres on the lower East Side of New York City, are reported to have suspended business in another one of their houses on account of poor showing at the box office. This time it is the New Atlantic, on the Bowery, which is said to have closed its doors last Sunday.

William McChesney, supervisor of the Walter Reade circuit of theatres, is recovering from a siege of pleura pneumonia which began about two weeks ago. Mr. McChesney is now said to be sitting up and will undoubtedly be back in his office within ten days or so. While Mr. McChesney is away, Leo Judkowitz is looking after his duties.

On Lincoln's Birthday the Sheridan Square theatre, Greenwich Village, will turn back to a policy of pictures, etc. Brewster Morse and Douglas Wood are in charge.

The Empress theatre, a new house located at 527 Empire Boulevard, Brooklyn, is scheduled to hold its first showing the early part of next week. The Padnic operating company, Vincent Padula, president, will operate the house. Mr. Padula was the former owner of the Subway theatre which was later taken over by Cy Barr.

"Bennie" Guttmann recently disposed of his Atlantic theatre, 2246 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, to Clement Pepe.

Jacob Schechter, owner of the Hollywood theatre, Brooklyn, has returned from a vacation spent at Lakewood, N. J. Leonard Victor, manager of the Hollywood, enjoys the distinction of having operated Mr. Schechter's house for the period of seven years during which time the theatre changed hands once.

George Miner will be the manager of Loew's new Yonkers theatre when that house opens the latter part of this month or the first week in February. George H. Boyle will act as assistant manager.

The Washington theatre, 474 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, after having been closed for some time, was reopened Jan. 21 by the A. & P. Amusement Co., Louis Attanasio, in charge.

Another theatre which recently reopened is the Tip Top, 357 Wilson Avenue, Brooklyn. Moon Comedies, Inc., have the house.

H. Baker, formerly with Loew's Melba theatre, has been transferred to Loew's Hillside where he will also operate in the same capacity as at the Melba.

H. L. Brown has succeeded A. Greene as manager of the [illegible] theatre, [illegible] Coney Island Avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Greene will be in charge of Loew's new Avalon theatre, Kings Highway, when the latter opens Jan. 25.

Minneapolis

ACCORDING to announcement of H. D. Finkelstein, general manager of Finkelstein & Ruben, Saturday night, March 24, has been set as the tentative opening of the new $2,000,000 Minnesota theatre, located at the corner of LaSalle avenue and Ninth street, Minneapolis. Mr. Finkelstein has just returned from a trip to New York, where he conferred with Pub'ix Theatres officials, who will operate the theatre in conjunction with F. & R.

The new theatre, which has been in the course of construction for a year, will seat 4,200 people and is the largest and most magnificent theatre between Chicago and the Pacific Coast. It will present the finest photoplay productions with de luxe stage presentations. Fine musical programs will also be a feature.

A. M. Nelson, a bricklayer working on the new motion picture theatre which is being constructed on Hennepin avenue, between Lake and Thirty-first streets in Minneapolis, was seriously injured last week when struck on the head by a falling elevator. Nelson, who was working on the second floor, leaned inside the elevator shaft to place a brick when the elvator fell and struck him on the head and shoulders. An examination at the hospital to which he was rushed showed fracture of the skull and shoulders.

A daring attempt to hold up the Lyric theatre in Duluth, Minn., was thwarted last week by George Holmes, the doorman. Holmes had received a bag containing $1,500 from the cashier in the lobby and had started for the office on the mezzanine floor. As he rounded the first landing two men jumped on him, one slugging him on the jaw and the other trying to take the money bag. Holmes held onto the money and called for help. The bandits became frightened and fled, escaping in an automobile. Hundreds of people were in the theatre and many on the street as the attempt was made at 10 p. m.

W. A. Steffes, president of the Northwest Theatre Owners Association, is in New York negotiating with independent producers for distribution of products for the coming season in Minnesota, North and South Dakota. Early last year the association film division entered the distribution field and took on Columbia, Gotham, First Division and Rayart product, with a highly successful result financially. The Columbia franchise has been turned back since that company started its expansion program.

Two men men formerly managers of Minneapolis exchanges have recently received promotions with their companies. C. W. Stombaugh, for several years branch manager here for Pathe, is to be sales manager of Pathe News, following successful work as western division sales manager of the Pathe short subjects. Jack Raper, one time manager of the Paramount exchange in Minneapolis, has just succeeded Ben Reingold as manager of the Des Moines office of Fox Films.

Fred Cubberley, one of the F. & R. executives, has just returned from several weeks spent on the west coast with Mrs. Cubberley. Mr. Cubberley was much impressed by the great amount of construction on the coast, especially the number of large theatres going up in cities of from 40,000 to 100,000.

More than $3,000 damages were done at the Minneapolis branch office of Warner Bros. last week when an automatic sprinkler froze and then burst. After the ice had begun to melt the water destroyed over 40,000 feet of old film stored in the vault.

An article attacking the proposed Sunday Closing Bill, which Congressman Lankford is going to reintroduce into Congress, was printed in the Alexandria, Minn., Echo recently. The article, written by George J. Olson, attacks the proposed bill vigorously and maintains that "civil force should never be employed in the realm of religion."

The Minneapolis office of Tiffany-Stahl has been joined by C. J. Howard, well known salesman, who will cover North and South Dakota.

Des Moines

THE Film Board of Trade get-together which was tentatively announced as scheduled for a near date has been indefinitely postponed. The Board decided at the last meeting that there was not time to allow for making plans for the convention at the date suggested. No definite time was set for the get-together which, according to previous years, includes a banquet and a business meeting at which problems and aids interesting to the exhibitor and exchange men are discussed. The Film Board plans two of these get-togethers each year. The pcinic and sports tournament last August was one of the most successful of the endeavors of the association along that line and it is the desire of the Board to put on a spring party that will be as complete a success. The president of the Des Moines Film Board of Trade is Jimmy Shea, who is manager for Educational, while E. J. Tilton, manager for First National, is the vice president. There are nine members on the Des Moines Film Board now with Miss Leone Mathews as secretary and treasurer.

Cincinnati

ON and after February 4, the B. F. Keith theatre in Cincinnati will be but a matter of memory insofar as its present policy of a two-aday vaudeville and pictures are concerned. E. F. Albee has decreed that the house shall close, and thus remain for the present, at least. Business at this house has been declining for several months, although the other Keith combination house in Cincinnati—the Palace—has been enjoying excellent patronage. The recent opening of the new E. F. Albee theatre with a program of pictures and stage presentations, has caused additional use of red ink at the main Keith house, and the closing order resulted. However, Albee has made it known that a new and much larger house will replace the present structure, with a seating capacity of 4,500. Upon completion, the new house will be devoted to continuous vaudeville and pictures, when the Palace will be made into a straight picture house. Ned Hastings, manager of Keith's, is of the opinion that possibly the present house will play a short season of pictures until time for the building to be razed for erection of the new theatre.

Following the recent consolidation of the Columbia Mutual burlesque interests, the Olympia theatre, Cincinnati, a Columbia house, was closed. It is rumored, although the rumors lack verification, that the house will be given over to a policy of pictures. It was used for pictures several years ago, before being converted into a burlesque house.

Trade and private circles are deeply grieved over the recent passing of Frank J. Beel, manager of the Avonel theatre, Cincinnati. Although ill for several months, his death was unexpected. Beel was a resident of Newport, Ky., just across the river from Cincinnati, where he had resided for 40 years.

When the board of education, Columbus, Ohio, recently disposed of the old Central high school building, at corner of Broad and Sixth streets, the highest bidder was none other than William M. James, erstwhile executive head of the James Theatrical Enterprises, and former manager of the James theatre. He refused to divulge the purpose for which he purchased the property, but it is softly whispered that Columbus may have another theatre. James' bid was $225,100.

The Capitol Lodge, No. 1003, G. U. O. F., Columbus, Ohio, has selected an architect to draw plans for a $100,000 theatre and office building, which will also contain a lodge room. Although policy of the house has not been made public, it is believed it will be devoted to pictures.

The Cincinnati office of Paramount is preparing to vacate present quarters in the Broadway Film building, and move to its own building on the new Parkway, several blocks further uptown. The building will be ready for occupancy about February 15. The first floor will be used for poster departments and shipping, while the second floor will contain offices. George Smith is manager of the Cincinnati branch.

Work on the new Fayette theatre, at Washington C. H., Ohio, is progressing according to schedule, and present indications point to its completion early in March. The house is being erected by Harry V. Smoots, of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, who has named Hoy O. Simons manager. The house will adopt the slogan, "A Theatre of Distinction."

The Regent theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, a unit in the Jewel Photoplay chain which has been dark for several months except for occasional feature pictures and road shows, will open on Sunday only with pictures and stage presentations. Jim Schwalm will manage the house.

Kansas City

M. B. SHANBERG, former managing director of Loew theatres in Kansas City, who resigned last week, took up his new duties as head of the Sears-Harding Circuit of theatres last week. The Midland Theatre & Realty Company, which operates the Loew's Midland theatres and others in Kansas City, recently purchased interest in twenty-four Universal houses in the Kansas City territory. The Loew's Midland and Newman theatres of Kansas City wuuld continue to be operated under the same policy, it was said.

Thus far the plan whereby sales representatives of film exchanges are to solicit new members for the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, between January 1 and April 1, has been a success. Memberships have been coming into M. P. T. O. K.-M. headquarters in Kansas City at a pleasing rate, according to R. R. Biechele, president of the exhibitors' organization.

"It is the only solution to combat the evils of harmful legislation and other antagonistic forces," Mr. Biechele said. "With the exhibitor and exchange forces working in harmony to strengthen the solidity of organization within the ranks, the industry will have much less to fear from opponents in the future."

Business, it seems, is lax with suburban exhibitors, as well as bandits in Kansas City. Therefore, the bandits have turned their attention from "big jobs" to the small neighborhood theatres and the chain of hold-ups has been progressing for the last month. The latest victims are the Broadmour theatre, managed by J. E. Jordan, Jr., which was robbed of $111.80, and the Gillham theatre, which was robbed of $150, Mrs. E. T. Kelley, ticket seller, being the hold-up victim.

THE Francais Theatre, a historic playhouse of Montreal, has been sold by the George Rabinovitch Corporation to Joseph Patenaude, well-known theatre man of Montreal, who has had the house under lease since July, 1924; the price being $650,000. Combination programs, catering to the French population of the city, are presented at the Francais.

This house has had a colorful career. The Francais was first built 30 years ago, the structure being of wood. This was destroyed by fire, and a more elaborate building was erected. Attractions included Sarah Bernhardt, French opera singer; Alice Neilson, Constantino, John McCormack and many other stars. The theatre again burned down, and the present large structure was erected. For many years the Francais was under the control of the Sparrow Amusement Company until the death of J. B. Sparrow. For a time the Francais was leased by Marcus Loew, Inc., but eventually passed to Mr. Patenaude, who featured moving pictures and vaudeville.

A distinct development in the theatre field of Eastern Ontario has been the opening of the handsome, new Capitol Theatre at Cornwall, the factory town, the event taking place Monday, Jan. 23d. The proprietor of the new house is Clarence Markell, who formerly had the Palace Theatre in Cornwall for years. The Palace is now being closed so that the busy centre continues to be a one-theatre town. The new Capitol has 1,600 seats on the one floor and the equipment includes a stage.

Pictures are being booked into the Capitol under the auspices of Famous-Players Canadian Corp., which is interested in the enterprise.

The Egypt Temple Shrine band bought the Victory, Tampa, for a "midnight frolic" last Monday night, packing them in at six bits per.

A few years ago the section around Lake Okeechobee was a mighty saw-grass swamp, inhabited by alligators and a few Seminole Indians. The first city established on the shore of this great inland sea was Moore Haven. C. C. Klutts opened the first theatre in the section, the Glades at Moore Haven, and later the house at Clewiston. Now another city has sprung up, Canal Point on the east shore, and W. E. Dowdy has opened a theatre there known as the Canal Point theatre. He is doing nicely, playing at 25c. and 50. prices.

J. T. Hussey, who has managed the Strand in Tampa quite successfully for several months, is to be transferred. Jack L. Hobby, who was assistant to John B. Carroll in the management of the Tampa, and later in charge of the publicity, will succeed Mr. Hussey. Hussey is a likeable man and made a host of friends in Tampa who regret to see him leave.

Once upon a time, J. H. McLaughlin, who has managed the Franklin in Tampa since it was built, was a trouper. This was "yaws and yaws" ago, but how many the writer can't tell as Mac still passes as a "young fellow." Anyhow, Mac was SOME heavy, though he played many parts. One of his successes was a vaudeville act entitled "The Queen of the Prairie." In this act with him were O. M. Young and his wife, and who should drop in on Mac this week but the said couple! Young is now located at Clearwater, where hes is connected with the new amusement park. "It's a small world after all," said Mac.

Philadelphia

IN recognition of his twenty years in the motion picture industry, nearly two hundred members of the local film fraternity gathered to pay their respects to Joseph Hebrew, district manager for Warner Brothers, at a dinner in the Crystal Ball Room of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel. Charles Goodwin officiated as toastmaster, and the assemblage included many of the most prominent exhibitors of the district, representatives of the home office and members of practically every local film exchange.

Subscriptions are pouring in for the M. P. T. O. dinner-dance to be held the night of February 5th in the Crystal Ball Room of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel. Jack Rosenthal is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements, and the affair this year promises to outdo the one held two years ago. There will be two orchestras, and the vaudeville theatres and agencies will contribute the best of their acts for entertainment. Attractive souvenirs will be distributed to the ladies.

The Stanley Company's newest theatre, the Kent, at Kensington Ave. and Cumberland St., Philadelphia, was dedicated by Philadelphia's new mayor, Harry A. Mackey, on the night of January 16th. More than 3,000 residents of the Kensington district who filled every one of the theatre's 2,000 seats, as well as the aisles and lobby, applauded the mayor's speech. Many of the most prominent business men of the district were guests of John J. McGuirk, president of the Stanley Company, who welcomed the audience and introduced the Mayor. The new theatre, which will be devoted exclusively to motion pictures, is built in an entirely new style, that of the Coliseum in Rome, in which the rows of seats rise one above another, there being no balcony. The house is equipped with one of the finest organs in the city. Karl Bonawitz was at the console on the opening night, and illustrated the wide range of tone of the organ. Gold and red form the color scheme, and an elaborate arrangement of lights causes the heavy gold curtains of the stage to take on any color desired.

The plant of the Triangle Printing Company, Vine and Winter Sts., which handles the printing of more than 200 local theatre men, was totally destroyed by fire. The plant, which was the most modern of Vine Street's printing establishments, was a total loss, all of the up-to-date equipment, including the linotype machines and presses, being destroyed. Numerous programs and printed matter for the current week were destroyed, but, owing to the heroic efforts of Shapiro Brothers, not one of the 200 customers was disappointed.

Denver

THE Sarah Theatre, of Canon City, Colo., was totally destroyed by fire recently. Nothing remained of the theatre but the front of the building. It is believed the fire started in the gallery of the house. This is the second time the theatre has been destroyed by fire, the first time being five years ago. It was rebuilt at that time by J. J. Sarah, whose name it bears. The theatre at the time of the fire was owned by B. P. McCormick, former exhibitor in Canon City and Florence, Colo. The theatre was being operated by the K & F Amusement Co., who also operate the Opera House of Canon City.

Mr. Gollenstein is a newcomer in these parts, but has operated theatres in Gary, Indiana, for a number of years.

The Lyric Theatre, of Powell, Wyo., and the Gayety Theatre, of Paonia, Colo., have both been quarantined for an indefinite period. The Victory Theatre, of Craig, Colo., was also ordered to close because of quarantine orders.

Chas. R. Gilmour, Warner Bros. manager, has returned to his desk after an eleven-day trip into the New Mexico district.

The Denver Theatre pulled a nice publicity stunt when they packed the theatre with a leap year wedding recently. Sixteen "leap year" couples applied for the privilege of being married on the stage of the theatre.

After operating the Waterman Hall Theatre, in Big Springs, Neb., for a number of years, Henry Waterman has sold the amusement house to Messrs. Dorn and Babcock, also of Big Springs.

A. E. Judd, of Manitou, Colo., announces he will be the operator of the Cameo Theatre in this popular tourist city when the season opens. Here the population jumps from 500 to 6,000 during the summer months when the theatre is in operation. He bought the theatre from Pat Argust, who has managed it for the past two years.

Russell Egner, special representative for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, visited the local branch of his company last week.

B. M. Shooker, of the Atlas Film Exchanges, Inc., left for a sales trip in the New Mexico district last Thursday.

The New Peerless H. I. Reflector Arc

CONSIDERABLE interest already has been aroused in the adaptation of the reflector are principle to the high intensity lamp and the appearance of several models by various manufacturers has only served to whet the curiosity of those who are wondering what will be the final outcome in the scramble to "reflectorize" the high intensity arc.

Three makes of high intensity reflector arc lamps already have been place don the market, two of them meeting with success in the brief time in which they have been offered to the rather limited field which is available.

A fourth lamp, the Peerless, manufactured by J. E. McAuley Co., of Chicago, it now seems, will be offered to the theatre trade early next month.

Has Many New Features

The new Peerless has already been demonstrated and is seen to possess a number of features which are new as far as concerns the motion picture equipment field. Aside from the methods employed to accomplish the purpose of the lamp, the designs of the lamp seems to have been centered around the necessity of making all parts in unit groups and then joining the various units in such a manner that the removal of one or two screws will completely disengage each unit and permit it to be removed from the lamp.

The removal of about a dozen screws will permit the entire lamp to be dissembled.

The entire lamphouse with all of its contained mechanism is considerably larger than the old Peerless lamp and, furthermore, has many more working parts. Yet, the total weight is something like 30 pounds less because aluminum has been used wherever it was possible to do so.

Both front and back plate of the lamphouse are of cast aluminum and the entire housing is finished in crystalline lacquer. The shape of the lamphouse, in its body, resembles the old lamp, the principal difference being in the top, which, in the new lamp, resembles an egg laying on its sid Th right hand door swings downward and, on the left side, a sliding door similar to the one used on the old lamp is employed. The front plate of the lamphouse is slightly convex and supports a short light tube which is covered by a dowser shutter.

Two dowser shutters are used, one over the light tube and an internal one for shielding the top of the 11½ inch diameter elliptic mirror while the arc is being struck. Both dowsers are operated by the same opening handle so that there will be no danger of the internal shutter being left in the path of the light beam.

Mirror Attached to Rear Door

The back plate of the housing has a large round swing door mounted into it which is swung outward. To this door are attached two ball-headed rods which act as secondary supports for the mirror and fix it permanently to the rear door. The ball heads of the two rods rest in sockets placed on the rear side of the mirror spider mounting and are free to revolve in these sockets in order that the mirror may be adjusted vertically and horizontally for controlling the spot on the aperture.

Two control rods are attached to the mirror in the same manner (by means of ball-headed rods riding in sockets) and extend through the back plate. These constitute the only control handles coming through the back plate and are used for adjusting the mirror.

The primary support for the mirror is a large vertical post to the rear left of the mirror. The mirror spider mounting is attached to this vertical post by means of two vertical sleeves which are free to revolve on the post and can also slide up and down on it. Thus, the mirror is to a sort of gate post which permits the mirror and its mounting to swing horizontally around the post, and also permits it to move up and down on the post.

This swinging action and up and down action is required in order to permit the mirror to clear the negative carbon support as the mirror is swung to one side with the opening of the rear door.

Carbons at 14 Degree Angle

The negative carbon, with its feeding mechanism and mounting is inclined downward at an angle of 14 degrees to the horizontal positive carbon. Thus, the negative carbon and its related supporting and feeding parts project through the 2 inch diameter hole in the mirror on their reach to the positive carbon.

The travel of the mirror as the rear door is opened is down (to allow the mirror hole to follow the downward slope of the negative) until the end of the negative support is reached and then up again after the negative support has been cleared. At the same time the mirror is swinging backward to the left with the motion of the rear door.

A Unit Positive Head

The positive carbon support is in the form of a unit which can be removed from the lamphouse by taking out one screw. The entire positive head can be swiveled to one side so that its nose points out of the right lamphouse door for convenient loading of positive carbons. It is locked into position by means of large tightening handle attached to its base. The entire positive head is placed over a vertical feed rod which extends up through lamphouse floor. This rod has a worm gear attached to upper end for driving the gears in the head.

The upper part of positive head resembles a double-ended nozzle on the front, or crater, end of which is hung the pure nickel positive contact shoe for leading current into the positive. An insulated baffle plate is also attached to the front end to prevent the flame from being attracted to the shield.

The rear end of this double-ended nozzle acts as a guide for the carbon to prevent undue wobble and on this end is fastened a metal scale, having 17 divisions marked on it to permit the projectionist to estimate the burning time of the carbon stub as its end passes the scale markings. The central part of head contains the driving rollers, which number two in addition to an idle roller.

The two driving rollers are toothed and ride on the carbon, forcing it forward and at the same time rotating it slowly (about 3 R. P. M.). These two rollers are inclined at an angle of 3 degrees to the axis of the positive carbon and this inclination is responsible for double motion imparted to the carbon. Heretofore, a separate rotating mechanism was used in addition to a separate forward feed mechanism.

Negative Head Magnetically Operated

The negative carbon is inclined downward at an arc angle of 14 degree to the horizontal positive carbon. The negative carbon is supported on a cradle which contains the feed screw, the cradle having the same inclination angle as the negative.

This cradle is supported at its upper end by a vertical casting (part of the cradle) and the entire negative support is pivoted on the floor of the lamphouse to permit it to swing back and forth in a vertical plane.

A substantial tie rod joins the rocking negative support to a large solenoid placed to the front left of the positive head. The tie rod is joined to the plunger of the solenoid and a regulated spring serves to keep the negative carbon in contact with the positive carbon when no current is passing through the lamp (lamp unlighted). As soon as the main switch is thrown on, the current also passes through the solenoid and forces out the plunger, which pushes the negative mount and carbon away from the positive, thus striking the arc.

As long as current passes through the lamp, the solenoid will hold the negative carbon away from the positive. When the arc is broken the negative again establishes contact with the positive.

All Working Parts Are Covered

All working parts, such as gears, etc., in this new Peerless lamp are covered so that no grit or carbon ash can reach them. The reducing gears are located beneath the floor of the lamphouse and the drive shafts extend at right angles to the axis of the lamp, to the left side of the housing, where is located the arc control.

The arc control mechanism extends the full length of the lamphouse and is supported on slide rods so that the removal of a single retaining screw will permit the entire control and its casing to be slid off the rods and disengaged from the housing.

Two finger grip contacts which slide over binding posts disengage the electrical circuit of the control from that in the lamphouse so that no screws are used for attaching the wires.

Control Feeds Positive and Negative Separately

The arc control is divided into two principal sections, one for feeding the positive and one for feeding the negative. The positive is fed continuously at a constant rate of speed which can be governed by a hand operated resistance placed in the motor circuit.

The same motor actuates both control sections. The old Peerless arc control is used to regulate the rate and time of feeding of the negative. The relay coils (as used in the old control) serve to govern the flow of current through two magnetic coils contained within the control housing and when the relay coils provide these magnetic coils with current (as the negative burns away) the magnetic coils draw into engagement the feeding gears of the negative carbon so that the motor then drives both positive feed gears and negative feeds at the same time but at different rates of speed.

When the negative is fed up, the relay cords open the magnetic coil circuit and the negative feed stops, leaving the positive feed to go on alone.

Manual Feeding

A single large manually operated feed handle placed at the rear, lower right of the back plate; is used to feed both the positive and negative independently.

Pushing the handle in and revolving it will feed the positive slowly and drawing the handle out and revolving it will feed the negative rapidly.

In the halfway position it is in neutral and ready for the automatic feed.

Optical Line-up

An elliptical mirror 11½ inches in diameter is used and the positive crater is placed 5½ inches from the center of the mirror. The distance between the mirror and the aperture plate is 34 inches which gives a magnification ratio of 6 to 1, so that a 66-65 ampere high intensity crater is required to saturate the system with light.

The total mirror area is about 110 square inches and about 10 per cent of this area, or about 11 square inches, are shaded by the arc lamp parts.

Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Open West Coast Office

After January 1st, 1928, the Pacific Coast Offices of The Cutler-Hammer Mfg. Co., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, manufacturers of electric motor control apparatus and allied lines, will be handled by their own Pacific Coast sales offices, at 970 Folsom Street, San Francisco; 229 Boyd Street, Los Angeles; 2203 First Avenue, South, Seattle.

Fred H. Oberschmidt

The new sales district will be in charge of Fred H. Oberschmidt, a member of the Cutler-Hammer organization for over fifteen years. Associated with Mr. Oberschmidt at the San Francisco headquarters office will be A. A. Tuffert and George P. Stone. Thomas N. Bristow will be in charge of the Seattle Offices and Edward G. Nelson of the Los Angeles office.

Complete stocks of standard items in the Cutler-Hammer line will be carried at all Pacific Coast offices. The line is very extensive, including all types of A. C. and D. C. Motor Control, The "Harland" Electric Drive for paper machines, Magnetic Clutches, Lifting Magnets, Magnetic Brakes, "Thomas" Gas Measuring Instruments, Motor Operated "Dean" Valve Control—and a complete catalog of Wiring Devices and special switches.

Special arrangements have been completed whereby production and shipment of special equipment for the Coast, built in the Cutler-Hammer factories at Milwaukee and New York, will be given preferred attention.

Newspaper Opinions on New Pictures

"The Jazz Singer" — Warner Bros., Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles

Times—"It will probably go down in history. Indeed a whole chapter may be written about it some day in the annals of the films. Here is a show! To miss it would be like failing to catch a glimpse of Lindbergh. It received one ovation upon ovation; it is probably one of the greatest events in the world of entertainment in years. For once the superlatives may be liberally distributed and they ought to be the super sort of superlatives."

Examiner—"It exceeded this reviewer's best expectations. As for Jolson I don't blame him for traveling 3,000 miles to see himself on the screen. If I could give a performance like he gives I would travel around the world."

Hollywood Citizen—"The end of the 'silent drama' is in sight—with 'The Jazz Singer' there is not a shadow of doubt that the Vitaphone has gloriously justified itself and that talking movies are considerably more than a mere possibility—they are close to an established fact. This is truly a marvelous picture!"

Evening Herald—"All previous achievements of the Vitaphone are dwarfed by 'The Jazz Singer' which I unqualifiedly recommend to everyone. It is going to be a tremendous hit or I miss my guess. It has a tendency to make the thrills run up and down your back and to bring tears to your eyes."

Illustrated News—"It is superb! A revelation of the possibilities of talking movies."

Express—"Mingled with tears are moments of buoyant laughter. The next best thing to Jolson in person is Jolson in the talkies."

Hollywood News—"A triumph for Jolson, a triumph for Vitaphone and a triumph for the art of motion picture production. The picture should be a big box-office hit."

Evening American—"Jolson has achieved triumphs galore but never one which compares 'The Jazz Singer.' Picture not by any means all sadness. Each tear has laugh to relieve it. Is another 'Humoresque' and yet much greater for mother love theme and conflict between filial duty and ambition will appeal to all races instead of one."

Daily News—"Heart throbs, tears, religion, 'Mammy' love and syncopation—these make 'The Jazz Singer' capital entertainment. The Garrick was crowded last night, likely to be throughout entire engagement."

"Chicago" — Pathe - De Mille, Gaiety Theatre, New York City

Herald-Tribune—"The role of Roxie is played by that excellent actress, Phyllis Haver, and although the part is less important than it was in the play, and Miss Haver is made to overact most of her scenes, she is shrewd enough a player to write in most of the satire and film lacks. In a word, she struck this observer as by far the best thing in the picture."

Evening World—" 'Chicago,' that satirical take-off on tabloid newspaper sensationalism, with murderesses being played up to a point of heroism and with firearms taking on the importance of lipsticks in milady's vanity case, has been transcribed to film form.

Times—"That a Hollywood blonde belongs to real life was to a certain extent proved in the picturization of Watkins's play, 'Chicago.' In this quasi-satirical affair, none other than Phyllis Haver, the vampire in 'The Way of All Flesh,' gives an astoundingly fine performance as the redoubtable Roxie Hart. Miss Haver makes this combination of tragedy and comedy a most entertaining piece of work."

Daily News—"It teems with delicious satire and excellent acting. It offers direction by Frank Urson which proves that he knows most of what there is to know about the movie business. Phyllis Haver, that ex-beauty of the Sennett bevy who last season let the world know she could really act, and not merely look ravishing in a bathing suit, is as perfect a Roxie Hart as could have been selected anywhere in Hollywood."

Morning Telegraph—"Credit for this belongs to Frank Urson, who has directed with a fine appreciation of the subtle elements of the scene. This young megaphonist gives every promise in this—his first big directorial effort—of becoming a director to be reckoned with.

"But, speaking of credit, bouquests, laurel wreaths and gold medals should be handed to Phyllis Haver for her portrayal of Roxie Hart. Splendidly equipped for the role by dint of her blonde beauty and a figure that was first glorified in a Sennett bathing suit, she brings to the part a characterization so rich in humor and so adept in versatility that it can only be described by the one superlative—superb. One of the most satisfactory photoplays of recent months."

Sun—"Just as the general quality of Hollywood's products reaches its lowest level in many months, 'Chicago' comes along and revives interest.

"Chief credit goes to the director, Frank Urson. His production is remarkable for its sustaining interest, its general intelligence, and for several powerful moments that recall the high spots in 'A Woman of Paris' and other masterpieces released before the movies grew into their present-day second childhood. Furthermore, the atmosphere, the lighting and even the titles, are thoroughly in the proper spirit."

Journal—"It's a good entertainment, this picture. Phyllis Haver is convincing as Roxie Hart. You'll enjoy Chicago."

"The Enemy"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Astor Theatre, New York City

World—"I advise everyone to go to the Astor and see this picture. . . . the like of which you will see not many times in a twelvemonth. A strong-ribbed, heavy shooting play. One of the best and most important of that class of pictures which we have come to look upon ts being 'war films.' Miss Gish, cast in a part which fits her in all perfection, plays a role as beautifully moving, as tenderly persuasive, as delicately appealing, as anything which I have seen done before a camera since Renee Adoree sent me crying out into the night on that memorable occasion which was the world premiere of 'The Big Parade.' "

Telegram—"A splendid picture—a picture which may cause a certain hysteria in the 100 per cent portions of our broad land—a picture which tosses a pie or two at our better flag wavers but doesn't get mad about it."

Sun—"An unusually interesting and stirring photoplay. Bold, sincere, positively savage in its attempt to strip all romance and glamour from the late war. Miss Gish's characterization ranks with her best work. I do not think that the movies have offered a more dramatic scene all year than the bit where she stands, her arms outstretched as though she were being crucified on the cross of the conflict, and cries to heaven over the loss of her husband and son."

Post—"You have seen a great many pictures with most of the details of 'The Enemy,' but never one with its ensemble effect, its subtlety and its sledge hammer irony, its motif of fee marching endlessly away to the front."

Herald-Tribune—"Lillian Gish never has been more beautiful on the screen, and she gives the picture a most lifelike quality with her emotional work. Forbes was splendidly cast and Surrier and Fawcett, as the two fathers, are excellent."

Evening World—"Lillian Gish gives a performance here that stamps her as one of the greatest dramatic actress on the screen. Because of the wider vista of the movies, as against the stage, Miss Gish is destined to sway thousands to every one affected by the legitimate version."

Telegraph—"A charming love tale . . . fine moments of beauty. Lillian Gish gives her usual restrained and sympathetic performance, and Ralph Forbes lends charm and dignity to the role of the hero. 'The Enemy' will make many friends for itself."

"Sorrell and Son"—United Artists, San Francisco

Chronicle—"Is real feature. Deeping's novel, a long time best seller, is foundation on which Brenon builds, and builds securely, monument of delight. A beautiful performance Warner gives. Is one of important pictures of the year, and one of best that will come out of studios. Something that should be seen by all persons who care for motion pictures."

Bulletin — "Remarkable screen drama. If it were possible to get few more pictures like 'Sorrell and Son,' skeptics who criticize artistic and intelligent advancement of silent drama would receive their answer. Not only one of first three pictures of 1927, but for many years past. Powerful and distinctive dramatic work. Perfect smoothness and all combine to produce intently interesting cinema subject. Dramatic picture, well told and realistically treated. Convinces most critical audience. Impossible to sit through film without wiping tears from eye, not once, but frequently. Warner gives magnificent performance."

"The Life of Riley"—First National, Globe Theatre, Philadelphia

Morning Record: "Murray and Sidney scored a hit with their mirthmaking faces and clever acting. A cleverly-handled picture. Comedy—from slap-stick variety—is directed to perfection. Every move, every antic is done to bring a burst of laughter from attentive spectators."

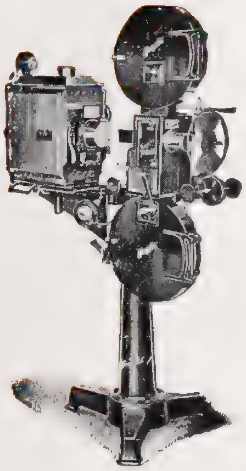
For Economical Projection



For small or medium sized theatres, pre-view rooms, schools, churches or any other place where the "throw" does not exceed 100 feet, satisfactory projection is possible at a great saving (about 50% on current) through the use of incandescent or Mazda lamp equipment. The Mazda lamp simplifies projection work. It provides a steady source of light and when once adjusted requires little or no further attention.

The light is easy on the eyes of the audience; there are no flicker or shadows on the screen; and no excessive heat, dust or fumes are given off by the lamp.

The Simplex Unit for Incandescent Lamp Projection is so designed that maximum light may be projected on the screen. All necessary adjustments and alignments are easily made. Simplicity of operation is a feature of this equipment that is appreciated by every projectionist.

An investigation of Incandescent Lamp Projection may save you hundreds of dollars. Write for full information or if you prefer we will arrange a demonstration for you.

A Daily Guide for Every Theatre Manager

A Manual of Scientific Methods

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MANAGEMENT

By Harold B. Franklin

President West Coast Theatres, Inc.

REVEALING the inside methods of motion picture theatre operation and management as practiced in the theatres of the biggest circuits, this monumental work written by one of the indusry's outstanding executives brings you information, knowledge, methods and rules for the solution of all problems which confront the manager of the modern theatre. Written in a straight-forward manner, amply illustrated with forms for reports, statements, Lost and Found blanks, and photographs of equipment devices, MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MANAGEMENT holds the answer to those knotty problems which crop up each day to set the manager puzzling over questions of Advertising, Publicity, Service, Presentations, Purchasing, Insurance, Accounting Control—in brief, every phase and department of the theatre.

36 Chapters Fully Describe Every Phase of Management

Management and the Public—Departments and Functions—Personnel and Inspections—Safety—House Management—The Service Staff—The Production Staff—Plant and Housekeeping—Auditing and Accounting Personnel—Employment—Budgets—Insurance — Advertising—Laws Pertaining to Theatres—Good Will and Ethics—Music—Stage Presentations—Color and Lighting.

Are some of the subjects covered in this manual written by an expert and made available for the advice and guidance of managers, advertising men, house managers, and all specialists in the world of the theatre.

The Author

Harold B. Franklin has been connected with the theatre since 1909, when, aged fifteen, he was employed as an office boy by the firm of Sullivan, Harris and Woods. He became a theatre manager at the age of nineteen. He was among the first to realize that the motion picture could be presented on a scale superior to the "nickelodeon" style and was responsible for many innovations and refinements in the theatre which are now general practice. As vice president of Publix Theatres he started the first Theatre Manager's Training School, and now heads one of the largest chains of motion picture houses in America.

Object of the Book

The book presents an analysis and exposition of the details of theatre management—functions and procedure—based on practical experience. Its purpose is to give guidance and advice drawn from reality to the experienced manager facing old problems appearing in a new application as a result of expanding responsibilities and activities, and present a vast array of miscellaneous fact in orderly, concise form for ready reference and practical information.

"Sword Points"
Great Burlesque

This boy Lupino Lane is certainly stepping along at a great comedy pace. Here he puts over one of the neatest laugh numbers it has been our pleasure to see for many months. He can kid anything to a frazzle, and do it to a syncopation of chortles, gurgles and honest t'gawd laughs. The plot is clever—oh, yes, this one has a plot. Lupino outdoes himself on some great comedy gags, and it is in the bag with the laughs all counted before you book it.—Film Daily.

Educational sure has a comedy winner in this Englishman. Lupino never seems to exhaust his bag of tricks. In "Sword Points" he doesn't rely entirely on his own resources, for he has a story that is made to order for his particular brand of humor. It offers him every opportunity to do the things he is best suited for and he doesn't overlook a single bet. This rib-tickler is a "natural."—Exhibitors Daily Review.

A Lupino Lane comedy that burlesques sword play, swashbuckling and the lace and velvet dramas. It is splendidly done, is beautiful and funny by turns, and is first class, compelling entertainment.—Arthur James in Motion Pictures Today.

STEPPING along! And at what a pace! Lupino Lane's current series of satirical comedies has definitely established him as the foremost comedian in the Short Features field. In fact, no other comedy star in pictures has made such remarkable progress in the last year.

"MONTY OF THE MOUNTED," "A HALF-PINT HERO," "SOME SCOUT," "HELLO, SAILOR"—every one has been an outstanding comedy success. And now Lane has made one that tops his finest! If you're interested in the best work being done in short comedies today, you can't afford to miss

Every Night we had to STOP Selling Tickets for "THE PATENT LEATHER KID"

Says JOHN PAYETTE

Supervisor Stanley-Crandall Theatres, Washington, D.C.

"I'D like to take the credit for the super-capacity business 'The Patent Leather Kid' has done at the Metropolitan.

"But the fact of the matter is that this First National Special SOLD ITSELF to Washington ON PERFORMANCE!

"It was the New York, Chicago and Detroit advanced-price runs, featured almost exclusively in our advance advertising, that brought capacity houses the very first day, establishing a new record for the Metropolitan . . . A consistent lock-out after 3:30, and literally thousands turned away.

"Then after the opening it was word-of-mouth advertising by opening-day patrons and the sight of that long box-office line stretching down F Street to 10th and down 10th to E Street, that, more than anything else, was responsible for holding business at a record peak throughout the run.

"That's what I mean when I say that this greatest of all Richard Barthelmess pictures sold itself.

House Record Broken

"In actual figures our opening-day business was exactly 50% better than the opening of another widely heralded feature with a well-known stage star, which we played a few weeks ago. And that in spite of the fact that 'The Patent Leather Kid' is a two-hour show, compared to the hour-and-25-minutes running time of the previous picture!

"Our contribution toward these remarkable results consisted of teaser ads for half a week before the opening, featuring the '$2.00 Broadway Hit at Popular Prices' angle; trailers in all our neighborhood and suburban houses; window displays through the centre of the city; and a heavy billing campaign.

"We continued a heavy advertising campaign after the opening, and evening after evening we were compelled to stop selling tickets because we could not accommodate the crowds!

We were forced to extend the engagement to THREE WEEKS—a very unusual run for any picture in Washington.

It Can't Miss!

"I noticed that John Kumler in Detroit and William Epstein in San Antonio built up their record runs on this picture by playing up the star and the story, and by stunt exploitation. It seems to me that their experience, coupled with ours, proves conclusively that no matter what publicity angle you use you're bound to do sensational business with this special.

"I can honestly say that never in my entire career have I been more enthusiastic over any picture. It's a powerful story, establishing Barthelmess more strongly than ever as one of the finest artists of the screen. To touch upon the story I could only fall short of conveying its strength and beauty.

"Every newspaper critic in town has echoed this judgment, and so has the public. I predict a phenomenal run for 'The Patent Leather Kid' in any house it plays."

The Brookhart Bill

An Exhibitor's Protest Against Our Attitude

By William A. Johnston

WE are in receipt of the following letter from Leo Brecher, of the Plaza Theatre, New York City, and an important member of The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce:

January 30, 1928.

William A. Johnston, Esq.,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

My Dear Mr. Johnston,

I have been following with a great deal of interest your editorials on the subject of the Brookhart Bill. The stand you are taking corresponds to the position held by the unaffiliated exhibitors, and you are, of course, familiar with the efforts made by exhibitors to achieve the voluntary abandonment of the manifestly unfair conditions existing in connection with booking motion picture films.

In your editorial of January 21st, you say:

"It should not be necessary—and certainly it would be very unfortunate—to air the troubles of this business publicly at a Washington hearing. On the contrary, the enforcers of coercive block-booking and unfair allocation, whoever and wherever they are, ought to stop both voluntarily—and now.

"If they do not, they will have nobody but themselves to blame if Governmental regulation, investigations and the Lord knows what else result."

May I quote from a statement issued by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce early in December:

"That the conference failed to accomplish anything of substantial value is due to the arrogant and arbitrary attitude of those who seek control of the industry for their own purposes. Perhaps it is still not too late for the industry to arouse itself and correct the evils within it. But this is certain, if the industry will not regulate itself voluntarily, regulation will be applied from without, whether the Federal Trade Commission be the agency, the United States Congress, the Legislature of various states or public opinion. Somewhere there is a power to correct this growing evil."

Unfortunately, the warning contained in the above statement remained unheeded, and I fear that the challenge of your editorial of January 28th is equally doomed to be disregarded.

Now, Mr. Johnston, you know as well as anyone in the business that every effort has been exerted to abolish these stifling practices in the business. You know how utterly futile have been all efforts to bring about an improvement in conditions. I believe that you will agree with me that unless these reforms are effected, whether by voluntary action on the part of the producers and distributors or through legislation, the progress of the motion picture will be seriously impeded.

You say that what this industry needs is a new bill of rights written by itself and enforced by itself, and you suggest that perhaps it can be done in Chicago by the contract revision committee. You do not seem to realize that the contract revision committee cannot even touch upon the subject of block booking or unfair allocation of product. The contract revision committee can only deal with details of the contract, and they are in the main of secondary importance. In no manner whatever can the contract committee deal with the questions of allocation of product and compulsory block booking, practices in connection with which you agree are seriously in need of reform. Like all the critics of the Brookhart Bill, you favor its aims, but do not approve of it as a means of achieving the aims.

Since all other methods of achieving these aims have failed, what other remedy can you propose? We believe that the Brookhart Bill is the remedy. We deny that the Brookhart Bill involves government control of the motion picture industry. With the authority of Senator Brookhart, I brand as a falsehood the quotation attributed to him that his measure surely provided for government control. I am sorry to see that you accepted Mr. Pettijohn's quotation from an unnamed source in attributing to the Senator a statement which he never made.

An Exhibitor's Protest and Our Reply

The Brookhart Bill covers three points of trade practice: Block booking, blind booking, and discrimination against unaffiliated theatres in the booking of films. The Bill also provides that the Federal Trade Commission is to make suitable rules and regulations for giving effect to these provisions. Is this government regulation of the industry any more than a provision that the United States Attorney General prosecute all violations of the provisions of this bill? Government regulation of the motion picture industry, to my mind, would be regulation as to the kind of pictures to be made, the number to be produced, prices at which they are to be sold or similar matters. Of course, we would all oppose government regulation of the industry, but how can anyone maintain that the designation of the Federal Trade Commission to give effect to the provisions dealing with three specific trade practices is equivalent to government control?

I am surprised to find in your editorial a misinterpretation of the Bill to the effect that the Bill "Plainly provides for price fixing under the supervision of the Federal Trade Commission." It does nothing of the kind. It merely provides that if a producer in an effort to compel an exhibitor to buy an entire block of pictures, will place an unreasonably high price on the few pictures that the particular exhibitor wishes to buy, so that that exhibitor will of necessity be obliged to buy the entire block of pictures, such exhibitors will be able to appeal to the Federal Trade Commission to pass upon the case. This certainly is in no sense price fixing, and a careful reading of the bill will convince you that it offers no occasion to fear price fixing or any government regulation or interference, except for violations of the provisions against block booking and unfair allocation of product.

You are big enough to speak out as you did in your editorials of the past two weeks, and I feel confident that you are big enough to, first, correct the impression drawn from an inaccurately attributed quotation, the second having satisfied yourself, I hope, that the Brookhart Bill does not provide for government control of the industry, that you will come out openly and fearlessly in favor of it, realizing on the one hand that, all other means having failed, there is no other remedy for the evils complained of, and on the other that the failure of the Brookhart Bill is bound to be followed by attacks upon the industry from other sources which may bring serious consequences to the industry.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Leo Brecher

We make this brief comment:

As to whether the Brookhart Bill provides for price fixing we quote Section 7 of the bill itself:

"Administration of this Act is vested in the Federal Trade Commission which is hereby authorized and empowered to make suitable rules and regulations for giving effect to the provisions hereof, including the power, after full hearing, to fix the differentials which may be observed between the price of a block or group of films and the price of a separate and several film or films less than such block or group as mentioned in Section 4 of this Act."

On Mr. Brecher's point that the bill does not provide Governmental control, we quote again from the Bill:

"Section 8. Any person who shall knowingly and willfully violate any provision of this Act or any order, rule or regulation made by the Federal Trade Commission, shall, upon conviction in any district court of the United States, be sentenced to a fine of not more than $10,000 and not less than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

The words we have italicized confer sweeping powers of regulation. A strict construction of Section 8 would mean that the Federal Trade Commission could make orders, rules or regulations beyond the specific provisions of the Act itself.

The language of the section does not say "any order, rule or regulation made by the Federal Trade Commission in conformity with or in enforcement of this act," but "any order, rule or regulation made by the Federal Trade Commission."

But, without stressing too much the ambiguous and dangerous wording of Section 8, the heart of the matter is this:

Mr. Brecher says that the bill "offers no occasion to fear price fixing or any Government regulation or interference, except for violations of the provisions against block booking and unfair allocation of product."

Editorial By William A. Johnston

Which is an admission that the bill does provide price fixing, and on the two most important matters in the industry's commercial structure; namely, booking and allocation.

The history of all Governmental regulation shows that once the entering wedge has been furnished by law, supervision grows and control increases. Once the principle of price fixing is established by law, it can be extended to other industry problems.

Referring to Mr. Brecher's criticism, we cannot agree that the contract revision committee, in session this week at Chicago, has no power to deal with questions of allocation and compulsory block booking.

We say it can—if the spirit to do so is there. Remember, this committee was named under a resolution adopted at the Trade Practice Conference which provided virtual arbitration of the contract. The seventh arbitrator is to be appointed, all other means failing, by the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The seventh arbitrator can decide on the disputed points. Is there any reason in the world why the new contract cannot cover questions of booking, and include distributor concessions which would mean the end of compulsory block booking?

Or any reason why disputes over the allocation of product cannot be left to an impartial board, created in the sections which relate to arbitration?

We say this industry can regulate itself, if the will and the sincerity to do so exist. The fact that it has not been done does not prove that it cannot be done.

Our statement in absolute condemnation of coercive block booking, unfair allocation of product, and all forms of trade restraint, direct and indirect, stands. Our unalterable opposition to Governmental regulation of the business workings of this industry, stands.

IN NEXT WEEK'S ISSUE

An Exhibitor Document of First Importance

By HENDERSON M. RICHEY

General Manager, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan

MR. RICHEY, who is an outstanding exhibitor leader and the directing executive of the Michigan organization, has written a letter to William A. Johnston on the serious crisis that confronts the industry.

It is written in response to an editorial printed in our issue of January 21, and does not mince words in discussing the situation now facing the picture world.

"The surest way to get in bad, the surest way to get yourself taken off the preferred list, it seems, is to sincerely oppose—to sincerely try to correct—some of the apparent evils in the industry. Ask me, I know. And you probably do, too," Mr. Richey writes.

His letter will be given very prominent space in our issue next week.

"Ramona"

By Edwin Schallert

Editor of The Los Angeles Times Preview and Special Correspondent of Motion Picture News

Los Angeles, January 22.

EDWIN CAREWE has directed a picture of high merit in "Ramona." Dolores del Rio is the star, and the story adapted from Helen Hunt Jackson's novel of the same name is an ideal choice for her personally. This book has enjoyed such a wide range of popularity that many people will pleasurably renew their acquaintance with it on the screen.

What the public will like about "Ramona" is its idyllic love theme, the acting by Miss del Rio in some sternly emotional moments, and the poignancy of its tragic climax. The picture has a happy ending, but the real story centers around the love of the heroine for the Indian Alessandro, and that love touches the depths of pathos. Women, especially, will find this pathos appealing, and they should be urged to bring an extra handkerchief.

Dolores del Rio is unquestionably gifted as an actress. "Ramona" does not disclose her talents in the vibrant light that "Resurrection" did, for it is moulded of different material. In this instance the feeling is romantic. The character is not so deep as that of Katusha, but it is pleasingly sympathetic.

The beginning of the plot discovers Dolores as an irresponsible tom-boy type, loving play and song and dance. The one dark threat is Senora Moreno, by whom she has been adopted. The senora has taken her rather unwillingly, a girl half Indian and half white, and reared her under cruel restraints. Ramona finds brotherly companionship with Felipe, the Senora's son, who returns this affection, adding to it by degrees that of a lover.

With the arrival of Alessandro, the Indian, during the sheep-shearing time, Ramona senses a new romantic call. The primitive in her responds to the Indian's devotion. The secret of her own parentage is disclosed to her by her foster-mother and, with Felipe, in a spirit of sacrifice, aiding, she runs away with the Indian.

How they live in pastoral solitude and happiness, enjoying the fruitful conquest of the soil in an Indian community, and the joy of a child born to them, is told with poetic sentiment. Their fortunes flourish until their daughter is taken sick and dies. A band of marauders attack the Indian village, capture the cattle, and destroy the homes of the red men. Alessandro and Ramona take refuge is an inaccessible region, but tragedy stalks them there, and Alessandro is killed by a vengeful settler.

Ramona temporarily loses her memory. She is found by Felipe, but all his efforts to restore her faculties are unsuccessful, until he plays music that she had danced to in her childhood.

Warner Baxter is cast as Alessandro, and a newcomer, Roland Drew, as Felipe. Vera Lewis plays Senora Moreno.

"Ramona" may prove a little serious for certain types of audiences but it is unquestionably beautiful and worthwhile.

Sol Brill Acquires Globe Theatre, Bethlehem, Pa.

The franchise of the Globe theatre, Bethlehem, Pa., passed into the control of Sol Brill, theatre owner in New York State, on January 28. His acquisition of the house marks his first venture into the Pennsylvania field. The transfer of the Globe, made from Alfred I. McAvoy and Frank P. Snyder, who had been acting as receivers for the theatre, was authorized by the United States District Court, the consideration being $40,000; Mr. McAvoy will continue managing the theatre, for which Mr. Brill intends making some improvements although the house is virtually new.

A Pennsylvania charter has been obtained at Harrisburg by the Globe Amusement Company. The capital stock is placed at the nominal figure of $5,000, consisting of 50 shares with a par value of $100, of which $500 has been paid in. The treasurer is R. E. Castellucci, one of the incorporators. The other incorporators are Robert A. Hamilton and Harrington Adams.

New Additions to Gotham Sales Personnel

The field force of Gotham Productions was reinforced last week by the addition of C. A. Molte, who will be the special Gotham representative in the locality surrounding the Pittsburgh office, where he will work in conjunction with the salesmen of Mr. Alexander of the Columbia Film Service, Pittsburgh, which company is the local distributors of Gotham.

M. C. Howard, another Gotham representative, is at present in the Cleveland territory and Mr. Budd Rogers, Gotham's vice-president, will appoint additional men during his trip around the exchange circuits.

Butterfield Plans Theatre in Battle Creek

Col. W. S. Butterfield announces preliminary plans for a new theatre which will be either part of a 12-story office or hotel building, costing approximately $1,000,000, to be constructed on Main street in Battle Creek, Mich. Erection will begin in March Notice to vacate has already been mailed to occupants of the building on the site. The frontage of the house will be 54 feet, leaving ample space for areaways and exits on either side. Comparing it with the new State in Kalamazoo, Col. Butterfield says Battle Creek's picture house will seat about 1,000 less but will cost nearly $400,000 more.

Fire at Warner Studio Does No Damage

A slight fire at the studio of Warner Bros. on Sunset Boulevard in Hollywood was checked quickly last week, with the result that no damage of a serious consequence occurred. The only property that was harmed was one discarded set and this was fully covered by insurance. The mishap in no way retarded the work at the studio, where members of the scenario and directorial staffs are busy preparing for the resumption of production activities next month.

Block Booking Concessions Big Issue at Chicago Meeting

Distributors' Attitude Not Officially Divulged; Slow Progress Made on Revision of Exhibition Contract

CHICAGO, Feb. 2.—Whether or not distributors will offer concessions on block booking loomed as the big question at the contract conference here as the exhibitor and distributor conferees met for the third day of their sessions, with little accomplished toward revision of the standard exhibition contract.

The attitude of the distributors had not been officially divulged when this dispatch was filed. In some quarters it was said they did not regard block booking as a contractual matter but as a selling method and did not intend to discuss it at all in the contract conference.

It was further said that the distributor attitude was that block booking was a matter to be settled between individual buyer and seller. In other quarters it was reported that the distributors were prepared to offer some concessions.

Coming at a time when trade interest is centered on the Brookhart Bill and the Washington situation, the results of the conference are regarded as of the utmost importance to the industry and many exhibitor leaders and producer executives, in addition to the conferees, were seen around the Congress Hotel. Many declared that they were prepared to stay two weeks, if the new Standard Exhibition Contract was not completed before then. In any case the contract conference will be finished before the Brookhart hearings begin.

Representatives of the producer-distributors in the contract conference are Felix Feist, M-G-M; Nede, Depinet, First National; Phil Reisman, Pathe; and alternates J. I. Schnitzer, F B O; and S. R. Kent, Paramount.

The unaffiliated exhibitor representatives are: Nathan Yamins, Massachusetts; Ben Berinstein, California; and R. R. Biechele, Kansas; with Joseph W. Walsh, Connecticut; J. Louis Rome, Maryland; and H. A. Cole, Texas; as alternates.

R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., is chairman of the exhibitor delegation and H. M. Richey, Michigan, secretary. R. H. Cochrane is chairman and Gabriel L. Hess, secretary, of the producer-distributor delegation. Messrs. Woodhull and Cochrane are alternating as chairman at the executive sessions of the committee.

Slow progress was reported the first days of the meeting and, after three sessions, agreement had been reached on only two actions of the proposed standard contract, the conferees taking up each clause and section in turn.

It has been agreed that no additions may be made to the contract by distributors, except as agreed upon by the whole committee. This will assure, it is believed, a standard contract.

Clause Seven, which relates to protection, will be revised so that the protection period will start from the last day of the run instead of the first, as now.

Previous to the formal opening of the conference on January 31 a meeting of unaffiliated exhibitors was held and the men who were to represent the exhibitors in the conference were advised as to exhibitor sentiment on the various clauses of the contract. It was decided that, while the meetings of the conferees would not be open, the exhibitor members would report the progress made each day to the unaffiliated exhibitors. A court reporter was engaged to take full report of all happenings at the executive sessions.

The exhibitor conferees heeded the advice of the unaffiliated exhibitors, and will follow the unit system of voting, the delegation caucusing before each vote.

Among the exhibitor leaders present are: W. A. Steffes, Minnesota; Frank Rembusch, Indiana; Glenn Cross and H. M. Richey, Michigan; Col. H. A. Cole, Texas; Fred J. Herrington, Pennsylvania; A. Julian Brylawski, District of Columbia; J. B. Clinton, Minnesota; J. J. Harwood, Ohio; Fred Wehrenberg, Missouri; Fred Pickrel, Oklahoma, and a number of Chicago exhibitors.

Iowa Exhibitors Will Get Together Feb. 13

Probably what will turn out to be the most interesting meeting of the Iowa exhibitors will take place on February 13th when the Film Board banquet and get-together will be held in Des Moines at the Hotel Savery. The discussion of the Brookhart Bill has been very active, and this is thought to be the most important measure that will come in for discussion at the meeting.

The plans are for a one-day session, and will conclude with a banquet in the evening. Les Phillips, feature sales manager for Pathe, will be in charge of the program, while Jimmy Wynn, manager of the office of Educational, is the presiding officer. Mr. Phillips is negotiating with the Eastern office to arrange for a representative of the Hays organization to be present.

The Iowa Theatre Owners Association will hold a meeting at the same time and place that the Film Board party is scheduled. The programs will be arranged so that the different organizations can act without interfering with the activities of the other.

Brookhart Claims He Was Misquoted On Federal Control Statement

IN a telegram to the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City, Senator Brookhart this week denied that his Bill provides for Government control of the industry, and charged that R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., had misquoted him on this point.

The Brookhart telegram read as follows: "Woodhull does not quote me accurately. The Bill does not purport to do anything but to stop blind booking, block booking and discrimination against the independents. It makes these things criminal and the Government punishes the crime as in all anti-trust laws.

"The only jurisdiction given the Federal Trade Commission is when blocks are broken up and the division or allocation of the prices cannot be agreed upon. All other jurisdiction is with the courts. Anybody who construes this as Government regulation of the film industry is simply looking for a bugaboo."

The text of the Brookhart message was sent to Mr. Woodhull in Chicago, but there was no indication when MOTION PICTURE NEWS went to press whether the President of the M. P. T. O. A. would take any action with regard to it.

"Beau Geste" Voted Best Film of 1927 in "Film Daily" Poll

"BEAU GESTE" was selected as the best picture of 1927 in the nation-wide poll of critics' votes, conducted for "The 1928 Film Daily Year Book," to be issued this month. Two hundred thirty-five of the 286 critics who voted gave this picture as their selection.

The poll, an annual event, is open to critics of newspapers, fan and trade publications and national magazines. This year, 240 newspapers and 42 fan, trade and national publications are represented in the voting.

Under the system employed, a list of all pictures released during the year is supplied each critic, who is asked to vote only on pictures which have been shown throughout the country, excluding the several roadshow productions which have been exhibited only in one or a few key centers.

Other pictures among the first ten and the votes they received are: "The Big Parade," 205; "What Price Glory," 179; "The Way of All Flesh," 167; "Ben Hur," 164; "7th Heaven," 162; "Chang," 146; "Underworld," 97; "Resurrection," 91, and "Flesh and the Devil," 77.

Thirty-six pictures, received ten votes or more, and were placed on the Honor Roll. These are: "Don Juan," "Metropolis," "Stark Love," "Faust," "The Scarlet Letter," "Tell It to the Marines," "Camille," "The Better 'Ole," "White Gold," "The Rough Riders," "Rookies," "The Cat and the Canary," "Barbed Wire," "Two Arabian Knights," "Les Miserables," "The Beloved Rogue," "Sorrell and Son," "Twelve Miles Out," "Captain Salvation," "It," "The Magic Flame," "Service for Ladies," "The Blood Ship," "Loves of Carmen," "Mr. Wu," "Annie Laurie," "The Garden of Allah," "God Gave Me 20 Cents," 'Michael Strogoff," "Her Night of Love," "The Fair Co-ed," "The Kid Brother," "My Best Girl," "Quality Street," "The Prince of Head Waiters" and "Slide, Kelly, Slide."

K-A-Orpheum Organizes

Eastern and Western Circuits Are Equally Represented Among Executives and Directors

THE newly formed Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation held the first meeting of its board of directors Monday and elected officers and directors who will govern the activities of the corporation. The eastern circuit and its new western ally are equally represented both on the roster of officers and on the directorate.

E. F. Albee heads the organization as president, with Marcus Heiman as executive vice-president and John J. Murdock as vice-president and general manager. Other officers are as follows: G. L. Kohl, vice-president; E. G. Lauder, Jr., vice-president and executive manager; Reed A. Albee, vice-president; J. Henry Walters, vice-president; Maurice Goodman, vice-president and general counsel; B. B. Kahane, secretary; Myron Robinson, treasurer; Mark A. Luescher, assistant secretary and director of publicity; William J. Keeman, assistant treasurer. In addition the following are members of the board of directors: Walter P. Cooke, B. L. Heidingsfeld, Lee Shubert, Joseph M. Finn, Herman Fehr, C. L. Kohl and Frank R. Tate. Edward V. Darling and Max Gordon, respectively, are general managers of the booking department and the production department.

The new company is entirely a holding company and is to be capitalized with 939,000 of 6 per cent debentures, $10,000,000 convertible preferred stock and 1,100,104 shares of common stock outstanding of an authorized amount of 2,000,000 shares.

Incorporation papers were acquired recently in Delaware and the company is to acquire all of the outstanding stock of the B. F. Keith Corporation, Greater New York Vaudeville Theatres Corporation and the Vaudeville Collection Agency, at least 80 per cent of each class of stock of the B. F. Keith-Albee Vaudeville Exchange, and at least 80 per cent of the common stock of the Orpheum Circuit, Inc., whose preferred stock will remain unchanged.

In the Keith Circuit there are 46 theatres, including seven under construction owned or leased by wholly-owned subsidiaries, and in addition 115 theatres owned, leased or affiliated and less than wholly owned subsidiary companies.

5 New K.O. First National Club Members Elected

Five new members have swelled the numbers of First National's K. O. Club as the result of their successful sales efforts during the last quarter of 1927. The five are Gerald Hardy, of the San Francisco branch, Albert Smitken, of the Cincinnati office; Vete Stewart, of the San Francisco exchange; R. J. Heft, of the Kansas City branch, and Newton Levi, also of the San Francisco office. Each of these winners will get an extra week's pay.

Four salesmen also made the grade for the second time, thus becoming second degree members of the club. They are A. S. Bailey, of Los Angeles; J. H. Briggs, of Montreal; F. L. Greenhalg, of Washington, D. C., and William J. Melody, of Toronto.

One salesman was elected to the club for the third time. George Bourke, of Los Angeles, was the man. Hereafter, First National announces, the election of salesmen to the K. O. Club will be semi-annualy instead of quarterly.

Arranging for Opening of New Minnesota Theatre

I. H. Ruben, M. L. Finkelstein and E. R. Ruben of Finkelstein & Ruben have left for New York to confer with Publix officials on the selection of a manager, organist, orchestra leader and other executives for the New Minnesota theatre which will be operated jointly in Minneapolis by F. & R. and Publix. The date for the opening of this $2,000,000 house has been tentatively set for Saturday, March 24, and the occasion is expected to be one of the most notable and spectacular in northwest theatre history.

Columbia Opens Office in Mexico City

COLUMBIA has increased the extent of its foreign activities with a recent opening of a branch office in Mexico City by the Columbia Pictures de Mexico. Senator Jos. J. Reynoso, a prominent figure in Mexican financial circles, is president of the new organization and Augusto Genin is treasurer. Both men are also identified with El Buen Tono, a cigarette company in Mexico.

Columbia Pictures de Mexico operates three exchanges in Mexico and plans to open additional branches in the future. Matthias Radin, Columbia executive, spent three weeks in the Mexican capital closing the negotiations.

NEW HEIGHTS FOR THE BAROQUE DESIGN—THE PENN

THE prestige of Loew's and the wealth of Pittsburgh's architectural beauties have both been increased with the completion of the new Loew theatre, designed by C. W. & Geo. L. Rapp, of Chicago and New York.

As part of its project and adjoining the theatre, on the corner is a modern office building of five stories and stores at the street level and large restaurant space in the basement.

The auditorium in its modern shape is a departure from what has heretofore been done in the way of theatre construction. The design of this room is in the Italian spirit.

The main ceiling, of an ingenious architectural composition, is so designed to bring out the most spectacular colored lighting effects and creates an atmosphere of vastness.

THE RIVIERA IN WATERLOO—A NEW BLANK-PUBLIX HOUSE

Theatre Designed in the Atmospheric Style Opened During Holiday Season

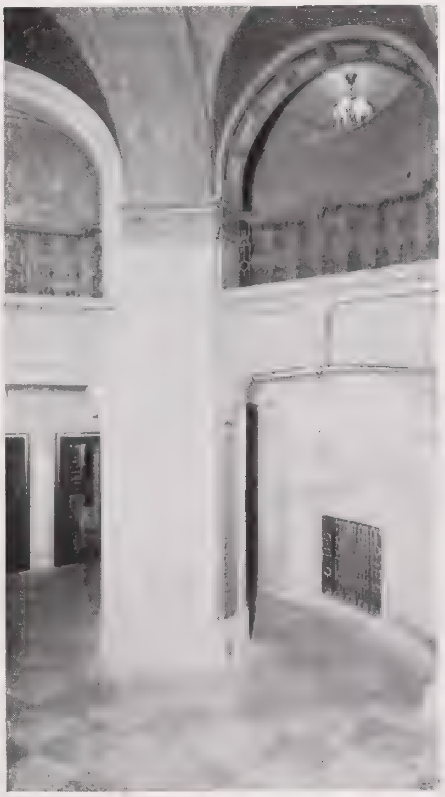
THE opening on December 29, 1927, of the Riviera theatre, the new A. H. Blank-Publix house at Waterloo, Iowa, proved that 200 seats and standing room facilities of rather ample proportions were inadequate to care for more than a portion of the crowd of local residents bent upon attending an opening of a new de luxe house.

The Riviera is an atmospheric type of house, and occupies a site which has been vacant for some time but which formerly accommodated the buildings of the Waterloo & Cedar Falls Union Mill company.

Theodore Stark & Company, general contractors, Cedar Rapids, had charge of the construction of the Riviera. C. M. Fox, art representative of Balaban & Katz in Chicago, is responsible for the choice of furnishings.

The sculptural work, climaxed by the stupendous, pieced arch confronting the auditorium, represents the achievement of the Brioschi-Minuti company. Under the direct supervision of T. J. Minuti, in charge of the organization's designing department, the sculptors have effected triumphs favorably comparing with any similar works exhibited in the state, critics claim.

Angelo Contini deserves praise for his creations as head architectural sculptor of the division. From the head busts of Mozart and Beethoven to the two figures surmounting the stage opening the molding work is his personal achievement.



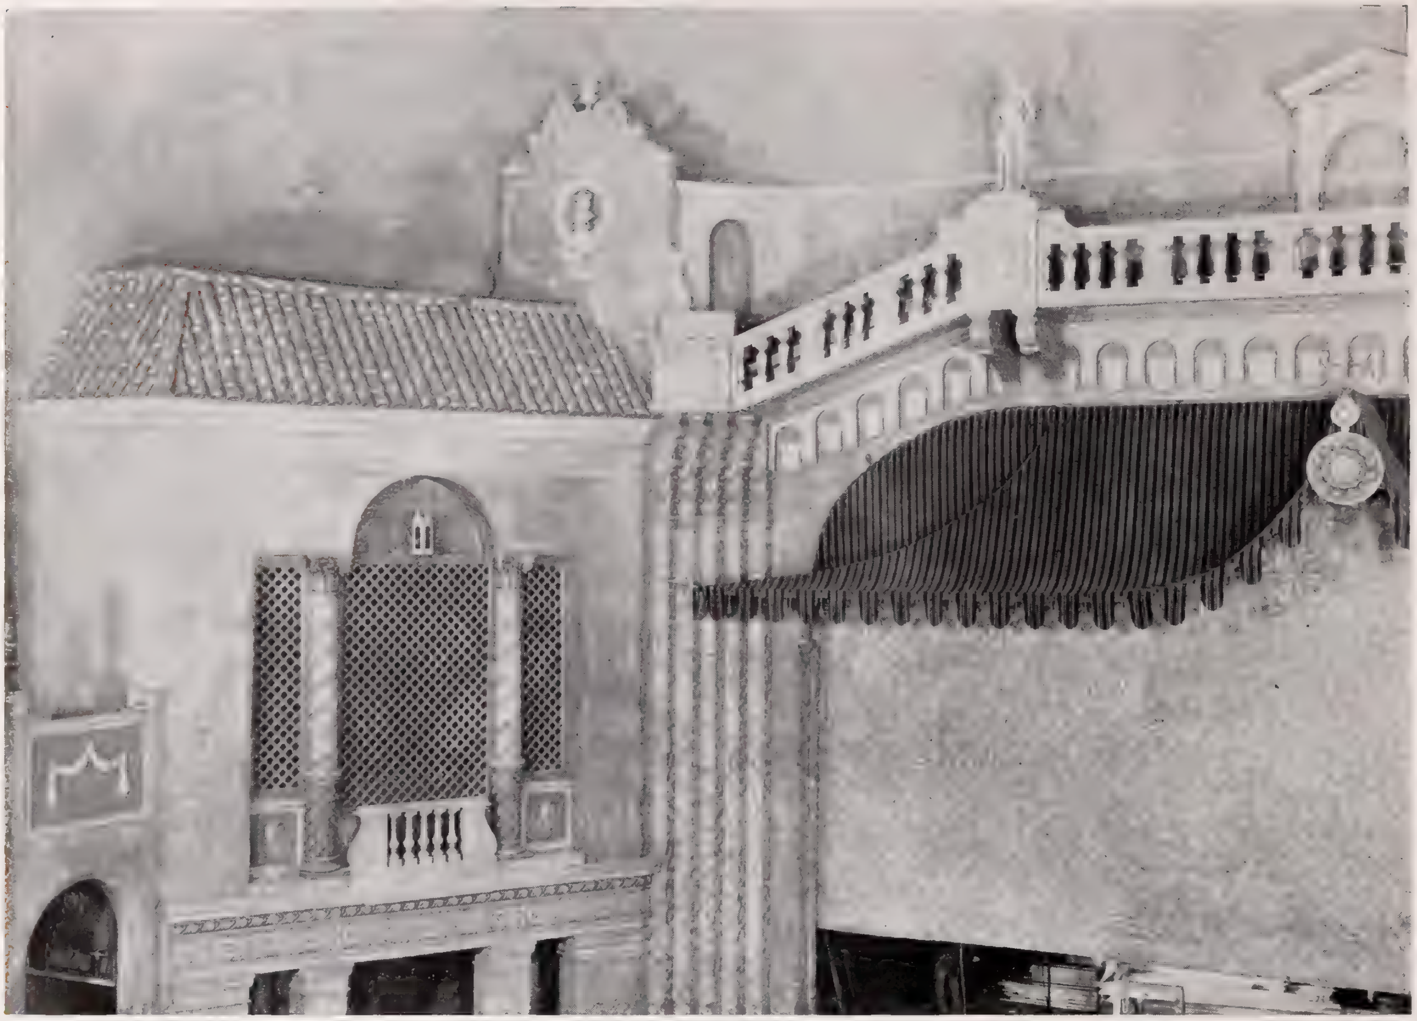
On the right, a section of the inner foyer, a rotunda with entrances to orchestra floor and stairways to the balcony.

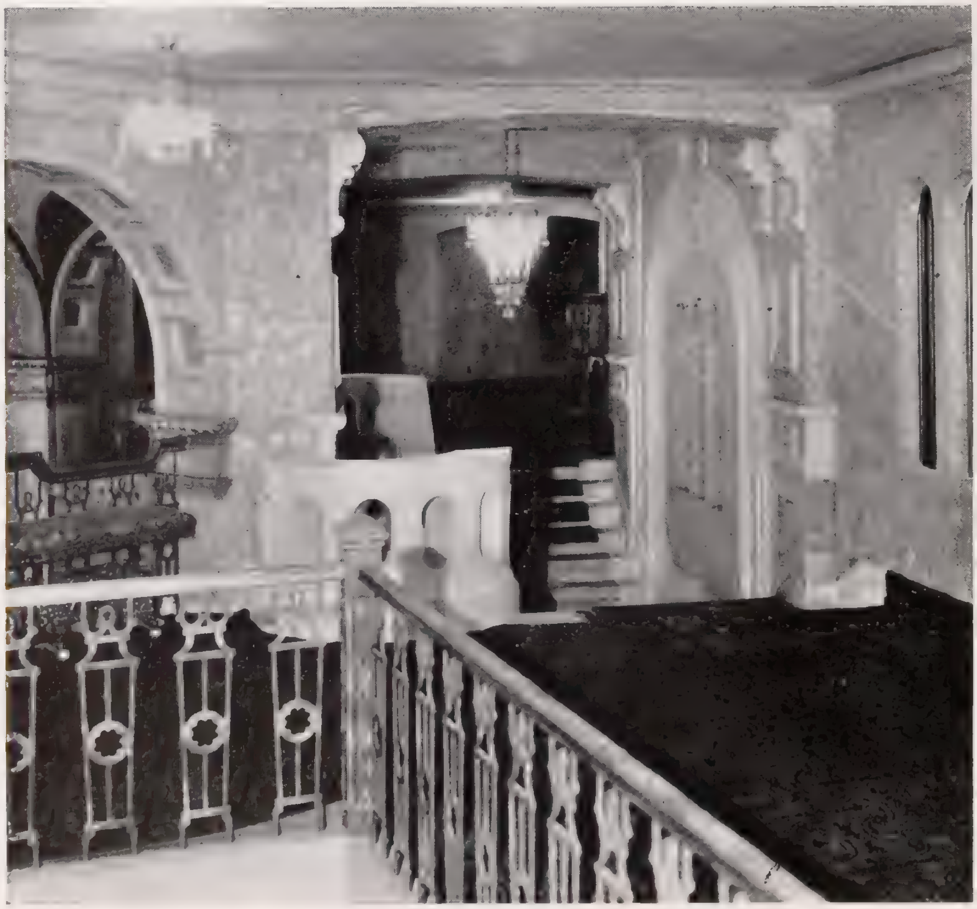
The delicately carved originals of the symbolic music and drama statues were chiseled from stone by David McBrairdy, a local resident. Seven days of painstaking labor was necessitated for each masterpiece.

In the auditorium the patron finds a colorful scene transporting him to an environment of story-book romance.

A blue canopy of flickering stars above your head; yellow, weather-beaten walls of a Venetian garden of long ago looming in silhouette against the darknesses of the recesses; in the dim perspective a graceful opening surmounted by a balustrade, with two figures, one personifying drama, the other music, peering down from each side. The strains of a magnificent organ swelling and retreating at will.

The Riviera theatre stage is a marvel of modern theatrical development—with its scores of steel battens, especially moulded from imported Swedish steel; with its gorgeous, velvet and silken and silver cloth drapes and flats and all of the technical phrases used to differentiate the masses of detail.





A close-up view of the proscenium arch and sidewall treatment. The auditorium reproduces a Venetian garden, achieving the out-of-door effect which has gained such wide popularity in the modern picture theatres in this country.

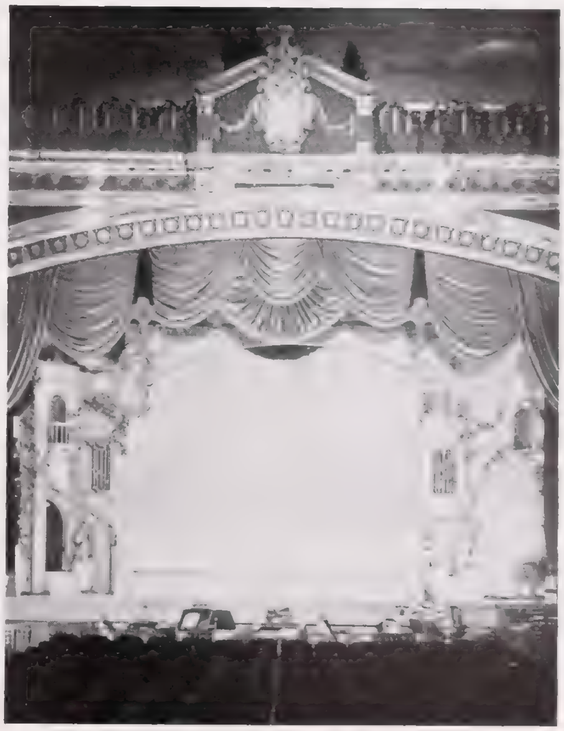
A HANDSOME ADDITION TO BROOKLYN'S ARRAY OF COMMUNITY HOUSES



The Fortway Theatre at Brooklyn, N. Y., is an atmospheric house designed by Charles A. Sandblom, architect of New York, and with interior decorations and furnishings by the Novelty Scenic Studios of New York. The house has a seating capacity of 1,900.

The photo of the auditorium at the top and and close-up view of the proscenium wall above, reveal the interesting manner in which the architect has adopted a combination of Italian and Viennese designs to the atmospheric style of playhouse.

On the right is a view of the stage, showing proscenium arch of the Fortway Theatre, a strictly modern type of house of the de luxe style.

Home Television Sets a Demonstrated Reality

ON Friday, January 13, a group of newspaper writers gathered in a darkened room at the General Electric Company's radio laboratories in Schenectady and witnessed a demonstration of a new scientific wonder, radio transmission of television. They saw as well as heard the radio announcer, located in another part of the building, thus observing in actual operation another human conquest of space.

Reports of the demonstration, relating how a vision as well as the voice of an announcer was transmitted by radio and was picked up by a device encased in a cabinet somewhat resembling a phonograph, spread across the country in the written descriptions for newspapers. "Motion pictures in the home" was one of the lines which figured importantly in the stories, and popular speculation ran to visions of a day when the movie fan would do his theatregoing at home.

The radio transmission of Television, developed by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, consulting engineer of the Radio Corporation of America and the General Electric Company, in conjunction with "home television sets" is an actuality. As a matter of fact, one engineer has been quoted to the effect that "If the public wants pictures by radio today we can send them through space, but the quality would be about equal to the broadcast concerts back in 1922. We want to improve the quality and amplify the apparatus a little more before making the sets available to everybody."

The transmission of motion picture films by means of a radio television, however, is a matter for future development. No demonstration of the transmission of motion pictures was made on the occasion of the visit of newspaper writers at the Schenectady plant. However, Dr. Alexanderson has found that such transmission is possible.

The Nerve System of the Large Theatre

Brain and Arms of Showmanship In Phone Link

By CARL J. BEGEMANN

Sid Grauman in his office at the Chinese theatre, Hollywood

[Editor's Note.—Among the many mechanical and electrical devices adapted by technicians to the special needs of the modern picture theatre is the communication system developed by engineers of the Dictograph Company with the assistance of leading showmen. This article by Mr. Begemann describes the practical working of the system in its application to the large presentation theatre as a means of co-ordinating the various technical and artistic elements combined in the elaborate presentations at these houses. In a less elaborate manner this communication system is also applied to the more modest demands of the smaller theatre, with equal success as a conserver of the manager's time and an agent for accomplishing smoother operations of house routine and program presentations. Any information that may be desired regarding this latter type of installation, we will be glod to furnish to all who will address their questions to The Showman, at the office of Motion Picture News, 729 Seventh Ave., New York City.]

GRAUMAN'S Chinese Theatre, the latest achievement of Sid Grauman, impresario and theatre-builder extraordinary, embodies many innovations, both in structure and management. In discussing with the writer the management problem so large a theatre presents, Mr. Grauman said: "The most important problem in the management of a theatre, is, of course, a perfect performance. All units contributing to the audience's entertainment must operate with clocklike precision. There must be no breaks in the program.

"There are several methods of synchronizing these various units of the theatre to assure a smooth performance. The most efficient aid I have in this work is the Dictograph, an interior telephone system.

"The Dictograph Products Corporation, which makes this equipment, had several of its engineers spend a good part of a year in studying theatre communication problems. In working out the application of their product to the theatre, I had the pleasure of being a consultant and several of my suggestions are now a standard feature of the Theatre Dictograph."

At this juncture, Mr. Grauman was interrupted by a gentle click, not much louder than the tap of a pencil. His stage manager was calling him on the Dictograph. He pressed a key on a walnut finished telephone cabinet. In a moment, he was conversing freely regarding a change in the schedule of productions.

"This little cabinet with its twenty keys gives me a complete control and immediate access to any part of my theatre. It tells me who is calling before I answer; it leaves a memorandum of calls which come in while I am out of the room; it gives me a preferential call throughout the system by a special right-of-way circuit which precludes the possibility of a busy line. This right-of-way feature is exclusive with Dictograph.

"I should like to have Mr. Reed, the manager of the theatre, take you around."

The writer was very much impressed

BACKSTAGE

Within easy reach of the electrician stationed at the lighting control board is a Dictograph instrument through which instructions may be communicated to him from any point in the theatre with Mr. Grauman's method of introduction. He threw five keys and when all parties were on line, he made a general statement to the effect that he was about to send me on a trip through the theatre with Mr. Reed and requested them to extend all courtesies. In one minute and with one operation he accomplished what would take ten minutes and five operations with a standard telephone. Quite a time saver, this Dictograph Master Station.

Mr. Reed was a very pleasant young man, who has made exceptional progress in theatre management. Pointing to the Master Station on his desk, he said: "This is identical to Mr. Grauman's in all ways except that it connects to different points. This key, for example, is wired to a bank of microphones in the footlights and whenever I wish to hear how the stage performance is getting along, I throw in this key and the loudspeaker brings in the music, dialogue, shuffling dancer's feet, noisy scene shifting; in fact, whatever sound is prevalent on the stage at the time.

"This key," pointing to another, "is wired to a microphone concealed in the paneling of the lobby and by throwing in the key I can hear what our patrons say about the show as they leave. We usually do this on an opening night and often get some real valuable information as to the reception of our program. Sometimes we make changes, based on the comment we have received by this method."

We left Mr. Reed's office and ascended to the projection room, under the roof. The booth was equipped with spotlights, a stereopticon, and three projectors. On either side of each projector was a small Dictograph substation. Mr. Reed explained that these four instruments were wired in multiple and that an incoming call could be received on any one of them, making it unnecessary for the operator to change his position. He does not have to leave the projector he is operating but can answer from the instrument next to the machine in use.

At the orchestra leader's stand was a small Dictograph Substation. Mr. Reed explained that every now and then emergency calls must be made between the conductor and the stage, and occasionally the projection room. To gain time for scene shifting, etc., the stage manager may request him to prolong his overture.

"Infrequent as these occasions may be," said Mr. Reed, "we must have telephone facilities to reach the conductor. With the usual telephone he could only be called by some sound signal. This device indicates an incoming call by a light signal. Do you see this little red lamp next to the white one? It lights up whenever a call comes in. The audience is never distracted by extraneous sounds in the midst of an overture or ballet music."

We then walked to the right end of the platform, to the organ console. The organist was already at his post, tuning his instrument for the afternoon performance.

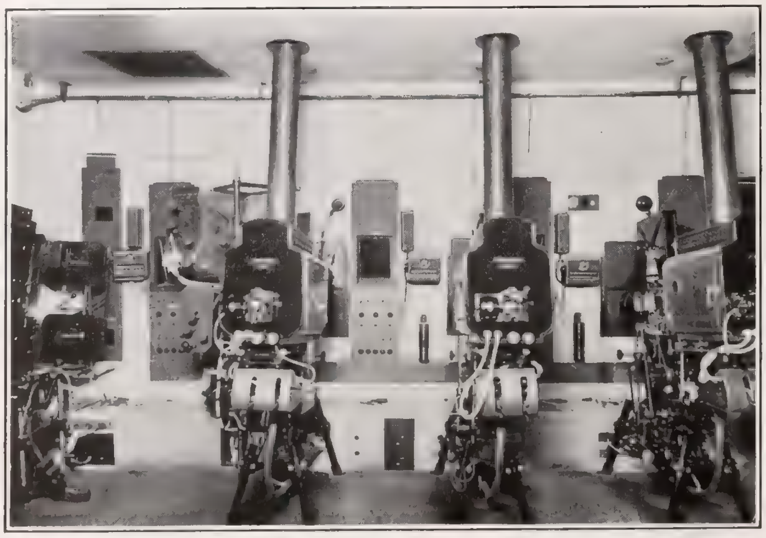
The organist, seated at the console, ran his fingers over the keyboard. Noticing one which was apparently off tune, he waited until the acoustic had subsided and then pressed a key on his Dictograph substation. "Please make number 8A a bit finer," he said, when he made this connection. In a few minutes there was a buzz on his instrument and he received a call from the tuner in the left to try the same key again.

"The interior of that organ chamber is pretty large. It runs from the floor right up to the ceiling and the adjusting must be done on several floor levels. The sound made by one of the pipes reaches such volume in the confines of the loft that it is impossible for the tuner himself to hear the result of his adjustment. In theatres not equipped with a Dictograph system, it is necessary for the tuner to come out of the loft to hear.

"In six conveniently located spots throughout the organ loft, there are located telephone jacks which are wired in multiple to this substation on my console. The tuner is equipped with a headset and breast transmitter which are attached to a long cord terminating in a plug. By pushing this plug in the nearest jack, he automatically buzzes me and when I lift my receiver we are connected on a regular telephone line. When I call him, a light appears simultaneously on each of the six floor levels, where it is visible from any position in the chamber."

We went to the main lobby, where Mr. Reed pointed to a flush type Dictograph substation. He told me that this was used to get in touch with the head usher. "The policy of this theatre is not to sell more admissions than there are seats available," he said, "and from this instrument the head usher calls from the box office and makes reports regarding the seats available."

After summing up the various innovations he had shown me, he said, "Don't carry away with you the impression that the Theatre Dictograph can only be applied to a massive entertainment enterprise like the Chinese Theatre. Smaller houses throughout the country have been using Dictograph before the era of the large motion picture theatre began."



IN THE BOOTH

On either side of each projector there is a small substation. These four instruments are wired in multiple and incoming calls may be received on any one of them making it unnecessary for the operator to leave the projector to receive or transmit a call

Theatre Building Business Map

Including Analysis of Key City Attendance Averages

Above Average Business	▲ AA	⬜	Very light new construction
Average Business	A	▨	Light new construction
Under Average Business	UA ▼	🟧	Moderately heavy construction
		🟥	Heavy new construction

The map of the United States shown here is divided into seven territories, with colored shading indicating the division of new proposed theatre building as represented for the period from December 15th to January 15th. This new construction is represented in valuation of dollars and cents rather than number of projects.

The shading is in four densities; solid, which represents the greatest value of proposed theatres; heavy stipple, which is second in valuation of new construction; medium, which areas represent conservative building; and the very light areas, where the investment in new theatre projects is very light. The information used in compiling the statistics visualized by the map was obtained through several reliable sources, and the map is to be considered as very nearly accurate in representing comparative theatre building activities in various sections of the country.

The circles shown on the map are located in key cities and illustrate averages of theatre attendance during the three months' period from December 15th to January 15th. The diagrams indicate the relative attendance at the better theatres in these cities during the period covered. These are given by "averages," with symbols to indicate "Above Average" and "Under Average" box office returns. The term "average" as applied in this survey indicates satisfactory box office returns, based upon theatre expectancies, which, in turn, are governed by past earnings under similar or nearly similar conditions.

These attendance statistics were compiled from an analysis of the Key City Reports, published weekly in Motion Picture News, and other sources of information gathered by this publication.

IN this issue of the Showman we are only enabled to analyze the first fifteen days of 1928 building and therefore the trend is not as clearly indicated as will be shown in our future issues. However, even for so short a period as we are analyzing, the new theatre projects announced are heavy. For the whole of the United States calls for 47 projects, an investment of $13,055,000 and 68,704 seats.

As was shown in our annual prediction for building for 1928 (see Jan., 1928 showman) the North Atlantic states are taking the lead. During the first fifteen days of January, the North Atlantic states show a program of $5,310,000 to cover the cost of constructing 19 projects, with seating capacities of 29,004. In this section of the country there has been announced one theatre costing over a million dollars and one between $500,000 and a million.

Next in rank in building comes the West Coast where $3,050,000 will be invested for 8 projects with a seating capacity of 13,600. In this territory, there is also one project calling for over a million dollar investment and one between $500,000 and a million.

The Middle states, where ordinarily has been the heaviest building, this time takes third place. In this section of the country 8 new projects were announced during the first fifteen days of January, calling for an investment of $2,515,000 for the seating capacity of 11,800. One theatre costing over a million dollars is included.

New England has been continuously showing greater activity in theatre building. In this report our analysis shows an investment of $965,000 for the building of 4 new theatres with a total seating capacity of 5,300. One project is to cost over $500,000.

South Eastern states are also active where $790,000 will be invested in 4 new projects, calling for a seating capacity of 5,100.

SOUTH WESTERN territory will invest $425,000 in 4 new projects with a seating capacity of 3,900.

For the first time since we have been analysing theatre building one complete territory reports no new projected building, namely, the Western.

The average theatre called for in the projects announced up to January 15th of this month, has a seating capacity of 1,462 with an investment of $277,750, giving the average cost per seat $290. These figures analyzed by territory are:

West Coast—$381,250, average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 1,700 and $225, average cost per seat.

Middle States—$314,375, average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 1,475 and $128, average cost per seat.

North Atlantic—$279,475, average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 1,526 and $184, average cost per seat.

New England—$241,250 average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 1,325 and $182, average cost per seat.

South Eastern—$179,500, average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 1,275 and $155, average cost per seat.

South Western—$106,250, average cost per theatre with an average seating capacity of 975 and $109, average cost per seat.

The individual state calling for the heaviest investment is Pennsylvania, where 12 projects will be built costing $3,935,000 and having a seating capacity of 19,804.

Other states that call for heavy investments are: California, six projects costing $2,050,000 and having a seating capacity of 9,100.

New York; four projects costing $1,000,000, and having a seating capacity of 6,700.

Ohio, two projects costing $1,500,000 and having a seating capacity of 4,000.

Oregon, two projects costing $1,000,000 and having a seating capacity of 4,500.

Massachusetts, four projects costing $965,000 and having a seating capacity of 5,300.

As is customary at this time of the year, many of the leading financial and business organizations make predictions for the prosperity and building of this country for the ensuing year. It is encouraging to record that in every instance an optimistic note was sounded for 1928 which tends to dispel any of the fears which were prevalent in some quarters, that 1928 would not continue to enjoy 1927 prosperity.

* * * *

A table printed in The Architectural Record gives comparative building costs in the various large cities in the country. These figures range from 100 down to 72. The costing of building in a few of the more important cities are:

New York City*	100	Kansas City	83
Pittsburgh	97	San Francisco	81
Cleveland	96	New Orleans	80
Chicago	89	Seattle	79
Boston	87	Los Angeles	77
Philadelphia	87	Minneapolis	75
Buffalo	85	Atlanta	74
Detroit	84

* New York City is taken as 100 because it has the highest cost.

These indexed numbers were compiled by the F. W. Dodge Corp. as of March, 1927. There may have been some change in these figures, though probably of not sufficient magnitude to effect the relative positions of these cities.

A BUSINESS stimulant peculiar to theatres everywhere figures as the prime factor for the uniformly fine attendance averages recorded on the current map. Since it deals with the period from December fifteenth to January fifteenth, the Christmas holidays came midway between this arbitrarily set "season" and they account for fine records of box offices generally.

The pre-Xmas shopping season, which cut deeply into theatre receipts, seemed especially severe in 1927. If the actual loss to the theatres on that account was greater than in former years, then the holiday increases, which started with the evening shows on Christmas Eve, were proportionately greater in 1927, for the net results all around, according to all the information available, were up to and beyond expectations at a majority of the picture houses in the so-called Key Cities.

This flood-tide was not without its demonstrations of the current of theatre conditions. For one thing it showed that the trend noticeable for some time, that the smaller theatres are losing ground in the face of big theatre competition, shows no signs of abating. In many sections the small houses in the outlying districts and suburban towns in close proximity to metropolitan centers felt the pinch particularly during the days when the holiday rush was on at the large cinemas, offering elaborate bills and the added attractions which go with sumptuous accommodations, the super service features and the bigger crowds, which always attract more crowds of the buying public.

ON the other hand, the newer theatres built along modern lines, found much encouragement in the brisk business which responded to their advertising and their shows during the holiday season. If nothing else it demonstrates that the public is still capable of being influenced into a mood to attend picture shows in the "old fashioned way" and that the price of admission is apparently available for theatregoing when the people make up their mind that they want to go.

Special Christmas and New Year's eve midnight performances swelled the profits at a great many of the houses, this form of added effort being used widely and intelligently by the showmen this year.

A comparison of this with last month's map shows first that all cities rate at average or better for the period covered in the current report, while there were three cities at "under average" marks on the previous map. Eleven theatre centers are "above average" on the present map as compared to only two reaching that peak during the period covered by the January map shown in the previous issue of THE SHOWMAN.

A feature worth noting, because it is highly encouraging for the future, is the fact that among the pictures which helped to mark up good records at the box offices, even after the New Year, include some highly impressive works, and if they are representative of what the Hollywood studios can and will do with more or less consistency there should be no occasion for weeping and gnashing of teeth over the condition of the industry.

AMONG the titles which are found in the reports which served as a basis for this record of attendance averages for the past month we find the following:

"The Circus," Charlie Chaplin's newest work; "Sorrell and Son," the screen version of an outstanding novel and a picture which has some fine records to its credit; "Love," the Gilbert-Garbo co-starring vehicle; "The Jazz Singer," with its Vitaphone effects to convey the vocal talents as well as the mimicry of Al Jolson; "Sadie Thompson," which many regard as Gloria Swanson's finest work in a long while; "Shepherd of the Hills," with its attractions as a screen adaptation of a Harold Bell Wright novel; "The Student Prince," the Lubitsch production which had a run on Broadway as a two-a-day attraction.

That is an impressive list of titles, but the roster of pictures with reputations for attracting the public because of a star or the power of the story is not complete with that. Not when you consider that this January list includes Mary Pickford's "My Best Girl"; Greta Garbo in "The Divine Woman"; "Wild Geese," the Tiffany production which has proved a popular attraction at many houses over the country; Adolphe Menjou in "Serenade"; "Gentlement Prefer Blondes"; Colleen Moore's "Her Wild Oat"; "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," and Will Rogers in "The Texas Steer."

Emotional Reactions to Color Guide Schemes of Decorative Lighting

Theatre Illumination Especially Demands Study of Rules Governing Subject

By A. S. Turner

Edison Lamp Works of General Electric Co.

THE psychology of color is an interesting subject about which there has always been much speculation; more speculation, unfortunately, than actual investigation. Yet it is a subject that from an economic standpoint is deserving of careful investigation, for it is important to all of us to know how people will react to the use of color. This knowledge is perhaps most important of all to any form of the theatrical industry. In advertising, color, when properly used, is of great value in attracting people to the theatre and in creating in them the proper mood to heighten to the greatest extent the effect of the play or moving picture. Color is significant in the matter of theatre decorations, as well, for the mood of the audience is affected subtly by its surroundings.

The psychology of color is not a static thing; it is cumulative, growing all the time. There are, however, certain basic physiological reactions that govern the psychology of color, and in order properly to understand that subject it is necessary to keep in mind some of the fundamental facts in the process of vision.

The action of the eye in seeing has often been compared to that of the camera in the taking of a photograph. The two processes are indeed similar up to the point where the image is formed upon the retina of the eye. But before one actually sees an object, impulses must be sent from the retina to the visual center of the brain. The optic nerve which carries the impulses enters the eye at the retina and spreads out in a myriad of nerve fibres all over the surface of the retina. The ends of these nerve fibres are of two kinds, rods and cones, so named because of their respective shapes. The cones may be found in all portions of the retina; whereas the rods are more numerous along the outer edge, the central portion of the retina being composed entirely of cones.

The cones are the active organs for color vision and for white vision under high intensities. The rods are incapable of supporting color vision, and register simple light sensations only. Under very low intensities of light, such as are experienced at dusk or twilight, the rods alone are functioning and for this reason we cannot distinguish colors—objects appear in different shades of gray. This sensation of the fading out of colors as night draws on is a common experience.

After having a bright lighted street and entering a dimly lighted interior such as a moving picture theatre, we are at first unable to see things about us. In a few moments we are aware that things which we could not see at first gradually become distinguishable. This is due to the fact that in the high intensity of light in the street the cones were functioning, but when we come into the darkness of the theatre the cones cease to function and rod vision begins. It takes a few moments for the sensibility of the rods to become sufficient to receive the light stimulus. This is known as dark adaptation and because of this inability to see upon first entering the theatre it is advisable to have some dim illumination for the safety and convenience of the patrons.

THIS process of adaptation is not confined soley to the rods but is also characteristic of the cones. Upon leaving a dark interior such as a theatre and going out into the bright sunlight one is at first blinded but gradually becomes "used to" the bright illumination and the objects are seen distinctly. If one remains in a colored lighted room, such as in the yellowish light of most artificial illuminants, by degrees the color seems to bleach out so that the light appears white.

Just as it takes a little time for sense organs (such as the rods and cones) to start to function, so it takes them a little time to cease functioning. If one gazes for a moment at a bright light source such as the sun and then turns away, the image will not instantly disappear but will persist for a while. This is known as an "after-image." When the image is the same as the main sensation it is known as a "postive after-image." There is also what is known as a "negative after-image." This may be experienced by looking steadily at a black-and-white or colored figure for as long as fifteen or twenty seconds, and then directing the eyes upon a medium gray background. In a few moments a sensation develops in which black takes the place of white and white of black, while for each color the complementary color appears; for example, where blue appeared in the original, the image would be yellow. Exposing the retina for some time to light of a certain color adapts the retina to the color, bleaches that color sensation, and subtracts that color from the gray or neutral at which the eyes are then directed, and gray or white minus a color gives the complementary color.

Everyone has experienced the phenomenon of contrast. If you take two pieces of the same gray paper and place one on a black background and the other on a white, the piece on the black will look much brighter than the piece on the white. Again—a bright light which would be exceedingly glaring in a dark room could be looked at with comfort in the sunlight. This fact is due to the contrast with the background.

Now that we have examined somewhat the physiological makeup of the visual system and how it works, we are better prepared to consider some of the purely psychological effects of color.

The color which is the most interesting and which has undergone most investigation is red. Red is what Havelock Ellis calls the "emotional tone." It has had a rich history and is the oldest color ever mentioned. This is probably due to the fact that red ochre was the first dye to be used and was extensively employed by the primitive men of Australia. Words for the color at the red end of the spectrum made a very early appearance. Latin is rich in synonyms for red and yellow but poor in synonyms for green and blue.

Red has been symbolical of joyous emotion—associated with yellow and occasionally green, it is the "fortunate" or "sacred" color. In two countries, far apart from each other—France and Madagascar—scarlet has been the color of royalty. Practically all other colors have in some part of the world been used to represent mourning, but red nowhere.

KIRKHOFF, the chemist, called red the aristocrat of colors. A brilliant scarlet gives the sensation which is readily associated with the blare of a trumpet. Another interesting thing about red is that it is the color which is most easily recognized by idiots. Red is the most recognizable of all colors and may be made out at a distance more easily than blue or green.

Red is the most primitive of colors—algae at the greatest sea-depths are red—possibly protoplasm at first responded to rays of light of long wave length only. The perception of color at the red end of the spectrum was the first to be acquired; there has been an evolution in the development of perceptibility of colors. This fact is strengthened by the fact that there is a development of perceptibility of colors in children. During the first few days after birth an infant shuns the light; about the fourteenth day he ceases to have this fear and begins to enjoy light, being quieted when brought into a bright light and crying when taken from it. Between the fifteenth week and eighteenth month, children show signs of distinguishing white, black, and gray objects. Not until after the eighteenth month does the child begin to perceive colors. The order in

Prevention,

The whole story of SENTRY SAFETY CONTROL is summed up in the old maxim, "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

There used to be a reason for fires in projection rooms — ignorance of how to prevent them.

There is no such reason today. It is well-nigh criminally negligent to have even a momentary blaze nowadays.

And always remember, every fire, no matter how slight, contains the threat of a terrible holocaust.

The danger of film fire in a theatre equipped with SENTRY SAFETY CONTROL is zero. Responsibility for patrons' safety, as well as good business sense, dictates its use.

Film Process Designed to Improve Projection

DOUBLE action and simplicity of operation characterize the processing machine used for the application of Liquefied Film Wax by the Rex Film Renovator Manufacturing Company's method for the elimination of sticking and buckling due to brittle sprocket holes and the removal of emulsion deposits which blur and haze projected images.

Investigations of the causes of projector fires invariably lead back to the ancient difficulty of sticking and buckling film, which is generally caused by weakened sprocket holes resulting from the drying out of film. Another cause, though not so frequent and more easily controlled by the projectionist, is the accumulation of gelatin which forms on the gate of the machine and which causes a friction that retards the passage of the film.

Any process designed to facilitate the passage of the film in the projector and prevent print deterioration from drying out, naturally takes its place as means of fire prevention. For this reason the company which developed this process of applying Liquefied Film Wax, points out the value of the system as means of avoiding the difficulties which cause projector fires.

The durability of a film is automatically enhanced by a process which prevents the brittleness that attacks prints which have been in use for some time. The combination of deterioration and wear produces the condition which is the bane of the distributor and the projectionist, to say nothing of the theatre man and his patrons.

Still another feature of vital importance is the cleaning process which the Rex company's machine provides for in the same operation. The liquid used for the lubricating of the film acts as a dissolving agent on oil and grease spots which collect on the print and which are ruinous to the results on the screen irrespective of how perfect the projection conditions are. The oil spots are removed by blotting the film surface with absorbing paper, which is applied and removed by mechanical operation of the machine which applies the lubricant.

Minusa Co. Develops Steel Frame for Picture Screen

THE Minusa Cine Screen Co., of St. Louis, has perfected a special all steel frame for motion picture screens. There has always been a great need for a frame of this type and it was only after months of careful research and experiment that the Minusa Company was able to offer this new specialty to the exhibitor trade.

With the general change in the entertainment program of most theatres, especially the larger ones, it is necessary to have the installation of the screen one in which it can be easily flown. No lag screws or bolts protrude from the rear of this new frame, thereby eliminating the fouling against other scenery when the screen is being raised or lowered, and making it perfectly adapted for flying. It is light in weight, yet rigid, compact in construction and easily assembled.

The frame itself is built of special rolled steel, braced at each corner with tubular braces. A steel strip, one inch wide, clamps the screen securely to the frame, this strip being bolted with short brass bolts and nuts. The use of brass bolts and nuts not only makes tacking unnecessary but eliminates any rust or corrosion. The frame is reinforced in the rear by a steel band, through which is placed a row of brass wing tension screws for tightening up the screen in the frame. By the use of the wing tension screws the screen can be tightened and any wrinkles removed by merely making a few turns by hand.

Standardized extensions of various lengths are attachable to each side of the frame for the use of drapes, maskings or scenery. Extensions of various lengths may also be attached at the bottom of the frame in order to regulate the distance the screen is to rest above the stage floor.

Typhoon Fan Co. Issues Book on Ventilation

THE progress of ventilating systems from the practical as well as the mechanical standpoint is forcibly stated in the book on ventilation recently issued by the Typhoon Fan Company of New York, well known in the motion picture theatre field for its installations in the motion picture houses throughout the country.

The book, handsomely designed and executed with fine taste and the best materials of the printing craft, tells an impressive story of the advance which artificial ventilation has made within a comparatively short time. The point that these systems have become almost a commonplace, in demand wherever modern building and equipping methods are applied to the construction of public gathering places, is not told with the printed word. It is the collection of photographs of theatres, hotels, clubs, restaurants, temples, churches, homes, factories and shops, which drive home the fact that ventilating systems are as much a part of the modern fine building as are foundations and roofs.

The reproductions, incidentally, are a compliment to the architects and engineers engaged in the upbuilding of America's communities. The publication includes a catalog section which graphically illustrates the Typhoon Systems and products, with photos, diagrams and descriptive matter written clear-cut, understandable language combining to give the reader a thorough comprehension of the "what, how and why" of the Typhoon ventilation system.

A Book on Camera Craft for Amateur Movie Makers

THE several moderate-priced camera and projector outfits in the 16 m/m size have created a host of amateur movie makers and as hobbies are often ridden harder than vocations, there is widespread demand for information and instruction on the finer points of motion picture photography and projection from the amateur's standpoint. One of the newest contributions is a book "Amateur Movie Craft" written by James R. Cameron, well known in the industry as the author of works on motion picture projection, and published by the Cameron Publishing Co., Inc., of New York.

Inaugurate Friday Openings At Boston Metropolitan

THE Metropolitan theatre, Boston, inaugurates another change this week when it again advances its weekly openings, moving them ahead to Friday instead of Saturday. The Metropolitan was the first to open its programs Sunday and then, when others followed, it advanced the opening to Saturday. It is claimed that by advancing another day, vaudeville teams will be able to make other cities after playing Boston with greater ease; also that by obtaining a Saturday morning review in the press, business will be stimulated for the Saturday matinee and Sunday shows.

It is the general belief among exhibitors that the Metropolitan's step is a wise one which will not only benefit the Metropolitan but will also benefit the other first-run houses which start their programs on Saturdays.

The Carrier System of Air Conditioning

THE public favor of a theatre depends not only upon the quality of entertainment but upon the comfort of the patrons. Air conditioning is the most vital asset to be considered in the modern theatre. Especially is this true since people have learned to recognize immediately the health giving comfort of Carrier Conditioned Theatres.

Quite naturally the first to adopt Carrier equipment for air conditioning were the large elaborate theatres of the country. The same complete system has now been made available for the fine small theatres, for the neighborhood house and the village theatre of 900 or more seats. The same refreshing Carrier atmosphere which greets the patrons of the great new Paramount and the Roxy in New York, offers inviting comfort in the Capitol Theatre in Shamokin, Pa., and in the Clinton and Eastern Theatres operated by James Enterprises in Columbus, Ohio.

The same ideally comfortable conditions are automatically maintained every day in the year. In the Winter the air is warmed and humidified to the scientifically healthful condition. In the Summer the simple, safe compact Carrier Centrifugal Refrigeration unit operates with the same system to cool and dehumidify the air which is diffused throughout the house without draughts.

The design and construction of each Carrier System is an engineering problem carefully worked to meet the needs of each theatre, large or small. The whole is backed by the guarantee of results which Carrier has attached to every contract during 25 years in the specialized field of air conditioning.

OPERATORS of Theatre Chains, Owners of Individual Theatres, and theatre Architects are invited to investigate the new adaptation of the Carrier Patented System to the Conditioning of Small Theatres. Write for the book, "Theatre Cooling and Conditioning". There is yet time for us to prepare your theatres for next summer. Ask for a visit from one of our engineers.

Applying the Mat Service Plan to Movie Theatres

THE ad mat service built along lines which long have been a well patronized and widely recognized aid to retailers in nearly all lines of business at last has found its application in the motion picture theatre field. At this time a mat service is novel only through its application to a business in which it previously had not existed, and now that such an enterprise has been introduced and after a short period of only four months attains a wide circulation, there are to be heard many comments of surprise that a service such as is being offered by the Theatre Ad Mat Service, Inc., of Uniontown, Pa., was not started years ago.

Possibly one of the deterrents to the establishment of a mat service has been the press book, provided by distributors, and the ad mats supplied through exchanges. But the press books, while used to a great extent by the theatre men, never really have "made good" to the complete satisfaction of exhibitors generally. The reasons for this failure of the press books will not be gone into again—not here at least. But those shortcomings charged against press books are to a large degree compensated by the service which the Uniontown company has brought forth.

The service has had a remarkable growth since its inception last November which is evidence enough that the need was there and that the company's methods in supplying the wanted material follows practical lines.

We reproduce on this page some sample ideas which are offered in mat form by the Theatre Ad Mat Service in the issue for February. These are merely a comparative few of the mat layouts which the subscribers to the service receive for the current month. As a matter of fact there are some 200 ideas nicluded in the February service.

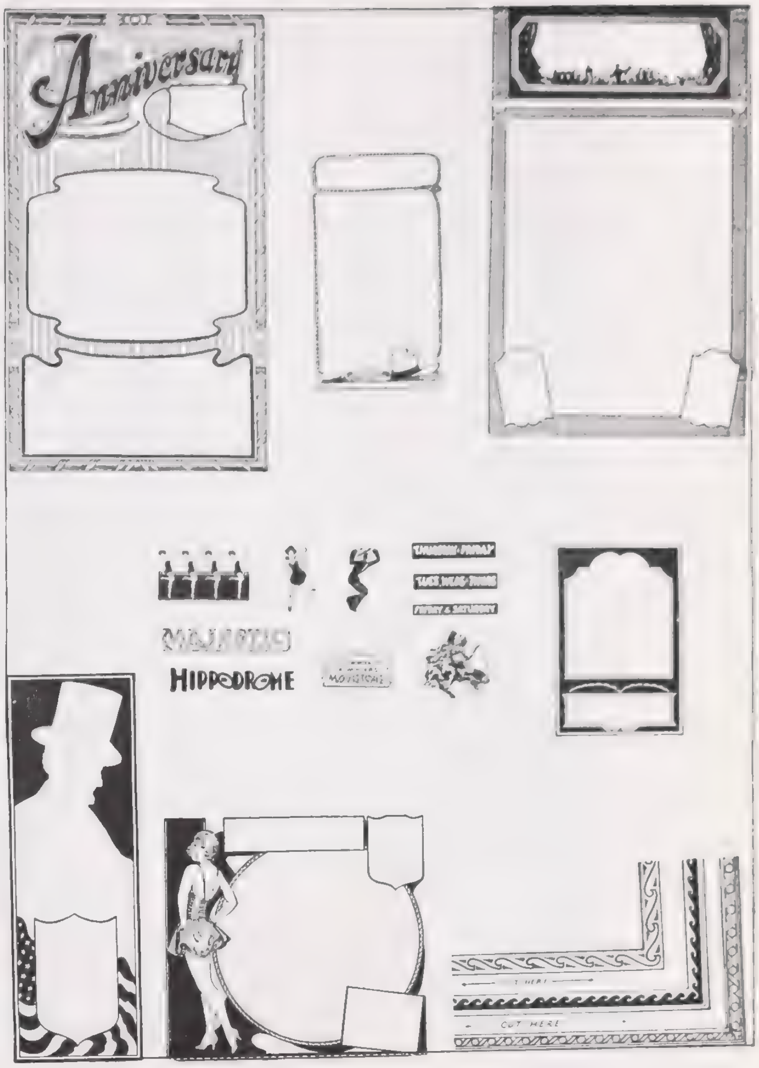
The company issues a supply of mats each month, which are mailed to the subscriber along with a manual containing reproductions of each mat, name slug, border design, etc., included in the issue. The material covers mat designs for program illustrations, occasionally a window card design, and material for hand bills, as well as newspaper layouts, though of course the emphasis is on the latter.

The service, of course, is made exclusive to one theatre in a town. The company has a plan which provides two different services, but the distinction is simply to differentiate between the large theatre in a town with a daily paper and the house located where there is only a weekly or semi-weekly newspaper. Consequently the service must be restricted to one theatre in a town.

Offhand, the impression might be that a service of this type would appeal mainly to the smaller theatre, independently operated and that there would be less interest in it on the part of chain theatres. But the rather surprising thing is that the Theatre Ad Mat Service numbers among its subscribers an imposing list of circuits, the majority of which maintain their own advertising staffs.

The layouts are gotten up in mat form. The user simply selects the layout he thinks suitable to the feature or the show he is to advertise and inserts his copy in the spaces or mortises provided for that purpose, and sends it to his newspaper.

This method, naturally, takes much of the worry over creating layout ideas off the theatre man's shoulders. He has the samples before him and selects according to his judgment and the appropriation regulating the size he is to use for a given insertion, and thus can concentrate on the copy he will use to sell his show.



A few of the layout ideas furnished in mat form by the Theatre Ad Mat Service in the February manual are shown in the layout at the right

Remote Control Consoles Developed by Organists for Novelty Numbers

ERNEST H. HUNT, organist at Loew's State theatre, Cleveland, has invented, made and demonstrated the success of a small portable console which he calls a Phantom Organ. This Phantom organ has been used by Hunt in various instances as a distinct organ novelty and as a special number on the program. It is small enough to be carried to any part of the house and can be played without the audience being able to detect the source of the music. The main organ is apparently playing by itself with no one at the console, while the organ tones are being created by the organist, who is hidden from view.

This is how the Phantom organ is made: It is small. Small enough to rest on a man's knee, being about 30 inches long and 14 inches wide. It contains just three octaves. Two methods of operation are possible, says Hunt. One is to connect by cable to the relay. Another is to run the cable directly from it to the contacts in the console. The Phantom organ can be placed anywhere in the theatre, its location depending only on the length of the cable used. Hunt says that he has been most successful by using an extra length of cable and connecting it directly with the relays of the main organ.

The attachment has five pistons, which, says Hunt, give five changes of registration, according to the desires of the organist.

Hunt has demonstrated the use of the Phantom organ twice, and both times in a completely different manner. The first time it was put to use, Hunt occupied an

Having Right Extinguisher in the Right Place Reduces Fire Hazards

Fact That Not All Fires Are Alike Is Much Misunderstood Though Highly Important

EACH fire that starts during a theatre performance represents a potential panic. Even a blaze, which would be of minor significance elsewhere, may be sufficient to change a well behaved audience into a struggling wild-eyed mob. On this account, more care and thoroughness is applied to work in reducing fire hazards in theatres than in other occupancy.

It is not the purpose of this article to point out the causes of fires in theatres, the fire losses, or the need of every scientific and practical modern device for extinguishing and preventing fire, and a force trained and taught to anticipate such danger and to minimize it should it occur. Rather, it will strive to acquaint the readers with the somewhat misunderstood fact that fires are not all alike nor are all fire extinguishers.

If you were to ask your fire chief or a fire insurance agent how to put out an electrical fire—an ordinary fire—an inflammable liquid fire, his answer will show that a first-aid method effective on one kind of fire may prove useless on another kind. Which explains why so many fires gain destructive headway.

There are many different kinds of fires and for each of them there is an extinguisher which is the most effective. Only the right extinguisher in the right place will give sure protection. Hundreds of unfortunate instances may be cited where people placed faith in extinguishing equipment that was not adequate for the property they supposedly safeguarded. Misapplication can be made with almost any type of fire extinguishing equipment; yet each type will put out fire under the particular conditions under which it can be effective.

There are only two ways to extinguish fire. One by cooling the burning material down below its burning point, and the other by excluding oxygen from the material so as to smother the fire. Most extinguishing devices that discharge water or a soda solution are effective on ordinary fires, they cannot be properly recommended for extra-hazardous fires. Hence, the "cooling" method is effective on fires in certain kinds of materials but not effective on others. The "smothering" method, however, is effective on fires in practically all kinds of materials and therefore has a wider application in fire control than the "cooling" principle.

The former method, which is effective on both ordinary and extra hazardous fires, has been brought to a high degree of efficiency in the development of extinguishing agents designed for practical use over a wide range of conditions, such as are encountered in a motion picture theatre. In this connection Firefoam, generated by Foamite apparatus, may be cited as an illustration.

All forms of Foamite Protection (whether portable, stationary or motorized) extinguish and control fire by the "smothering" process, by cutting off the air necessary to combustion with an airtight, heat-resisting layer of tough, durable Firefoam bubbles containing carbon dioxide gas. These bubbles result from a chemical reaction produced by the mixture of Foamite "A" solution and Foamite"B" solution, the latter employing Firefoam Liquid Stabilizer. The stabilizer gives permanence to the foam and prevents the carbon dioxide gas (generated by mixing the "A" and "B" solutions) from escaping uselessly.

The stream from the portable apparatus with which this blanket is applied to a burning surface is discharged under self-generated pressure and is expanded eight times the volume of the chemical solutions employed. In other words, a Foamite 2½-gallon Extinguisher discharges about 20 gallons of Firefoam.

THE SMOTHERING PROCESS

Illustrating the heat resisting qualities of Firefoam. The temperature of the Bunsen burner flame is 1800, yet the hand covered with the extinguishing agent feels no heat.

The substance covers and clings to burning surfaces whether liquid or solid, vertical or horizontal. It floats on liquids, however volatile. The draught of the fire will not carry it away, thus it prevents reignition and reflash.

Firefoam has a lesser wetting effect than cooling agents. It puts the fire out with minimum damage to property since there is none of the soaking and dripping of water or liquid chemicals. After the fire is out, it dries and may be brushed or washed away. It will not injure fabrics which water alone will not damage, and it is not injurious to the skin.

Modern fire extinguishing devices that are correctly designed to embody any one of the principles or methods perfected by the science of fire protection are "approved" and labeled by the Underwriters' Laboratories, a national institution maintained by the National Board of Fire Underwriters for the examination and testing of appliances bearing on fire hazards. But it is highly important to know that there are several different kinds ofUnderwriters' "approval," for fire extinguishers, and that each one definitely indicates the type or class of fire for which the extinguisher is effective.

For all practical purposes, the Underwriters' Laboratories have classified incipient fires into three general classes, known as Class "A," Class "B," and Class "C" fires. Briefly, Class "A" fires may be defined as incipient fires in ordinary combustible materials; Class "B" fires as those of inflammable liquids, greases, etc.; and Class "C" fires as those in electrical equipment.

The Underwriters' rating "A-1" on an extinguisher means that one such extinguisher is considered a unit of protection for Class "A" fires. The letter "A" signifies the class of fire against which the extinguisher is effective; the absence of the letters "B" and "C" is a warning that the device cannot be expected to give suitable protection for Class "B" or Class "C" fires. The numeral "1" means that one such extinguisher makes a unit of protection. An "A-2" rating signifies that two such extinguishers are required to make up a unit of protection against Class "A" fires. Similarly the "B-2 C-2" ratings on an extinguisher mean that two such extinguishers are necessary to make up a unit of

Variety of Screen Surfaces Decrease With Increasing Size of Theatres

Modern Designs Elminating Problems of Reflection Angles

THE increased size of the modern motion picture theatre is directly responsible for a simplification in the variety of screen surfaces now being offered to theatres. No longer is it considered necessary when selecting the screen to wade through a mass of detailed calculations in an effort to determine whether a screen suitable for covering a viewing angle of 30 degrees, or one covering an angle of 40 degrees, should be used.

Conditions have changed rapidly and design of present day theatres is radically different from that employed only six or seven years ago. The proportion of depth to width in the newer theatres has been greatly reduced, so much so, in fact that, frequently, the width of the seating area almost equals its length. The Roxy theatre in New York is an example of such design and it can be considered as representing the extreme because the length of the auditorium is approximately 1¼ times the width.

The average new theatre seems to strike a mean between this extreme and the other as typified by the fast-dying "shooting gallery" where the proportion of length to width often went as high as 3 to 1. While no specific information is available to serve as a guide, a fair average for the new class of motion picture theatre, in this respect, would be between 1½ to 1 and 1¾ to 1.

The changed proportions of the modern theatre is one reason for the enforced simplifications of screen surfaces. Another one is the limitation placed on the number of balconies in these new houses. A replacement of new theatres for old has been rapidly going on for the past few years and with this replacement has come the single balcony large house. True, these balconies are sometimes so deep as to place the last row of seats on a level comparable to that which would have resulted had the particular theatre had two short balconies instead. Still, a decided lessening of the angle projection has, in general, resulted.

This matter of the projection angle is just as important as the proportions of the theatre, for upon it depends the ultimate distribution of the reflected light with any given screen surface.

The essential characteristics of a good screen for picture imaging are as follows:

1. Registration.
2. Reflective Properties.
3. Distribution of Light.

These items are not necessarily listed in the order of their importance because limitations in the optical system of the projector may alter the relative importance of the various items.

As an example, before the introduction of the high intensity arc as a light source for motion picture projection the second and third items, which have to do with the efficiency of reflection and the manner in which the light is distributed by the screen, were considered as being most important, as far as concerned the large theatre. The light sources then available were strictly limited in the matter of illuminating power so that those conditions were favored which were likely to result in brighter pictures.

The abundance of light which became available through the use of the high intensity arc made it possible to devote more attention to the quality of registration and it no longer was so necessary to consider efficiency except as this item affected operating expenses.

CLEAR definition is realy the first requirement of any screen surface used for the imaging of projected pictures. A motion picture screen can be likened unto a radio receiving set in that it intercepts the projected beam of light which, to put it crudely, contains the picture ingredients, and converts these ingredients into a recagnizable reproduction of the original film picture.

The quality of a picture shown upon a motion picture screen can never be any better than the photograph of which the screen picture is the image. This, for the same reason that the quality of reception by a radio receiver can never be any better than the original audition by the broadcaster.

The quality of reproduction by a motion picture screen, assuming that the projection lens does its part, depends upon the registration characteristics of the screen and since this quality is of paramount importance, the item of registration should be first considered when selecting a screen surface.

Good registration is just as necessary to perfect projection as is the use of a high grade projection lens. It does little good to buy expensive lenses if the screen upon which these lenses throw their image is incapable of recording the fine detail transmitted by the lenses.

It has been the custom, in past years, to sacrifice the registration qualities of screens to a great extent in order that the reflection efficiency and distribution characteristics might be favored.

The limitations of the available light sources and optical systems, it was pointed out above, was responsible for this practice. It was necessary there to conserve light and since metallic surfaces are excellent reflectors in this respect, a large percentage of the screens used were of the metallized surface type. These screens are highly efficient but their distribution characteristics are rather confined to a relatively small angle, in spite of the fact that some control over their light distribution is possible by changing the degree of fineness of the finished surface.

Thus, a coarse surfaced metallized screen will distribute its light over a narrow angle, whereas a fine surfaced screen of the same type will spread its reflected light to cover a wider angle. These screens, however, being of the reflector type partake of the properties of a mirror in that light striking at an angle to the screen surface will be reflected at the same angle, reversed, at which incoming light strikes the surface.

In a motion picture theatre which has a high balcony, the effect of such a screen would be to reflect the projected light beam downward, so as to largely favor the front half of the lower floor seating area.

In such cases, the high efficiency of the metallic screen is largely wasted for the reason that its usefulness is confined to a limited portion of the theatre, leaving the remainder of the seats in a worse condition than if a more diffusing type of screen, which favored all seats equally, had been used.

IF THE theatre is quite wide (proportion of depth to width being about 1¾ to 1) more trouble is encountered because the side seats are considerably off the center-line of the screen and the fade-away of the screen at large angles is great.

A non-metallic, flat surface is the thing required and many of the new theatres, in which the conditions are as described above, are using such screens.

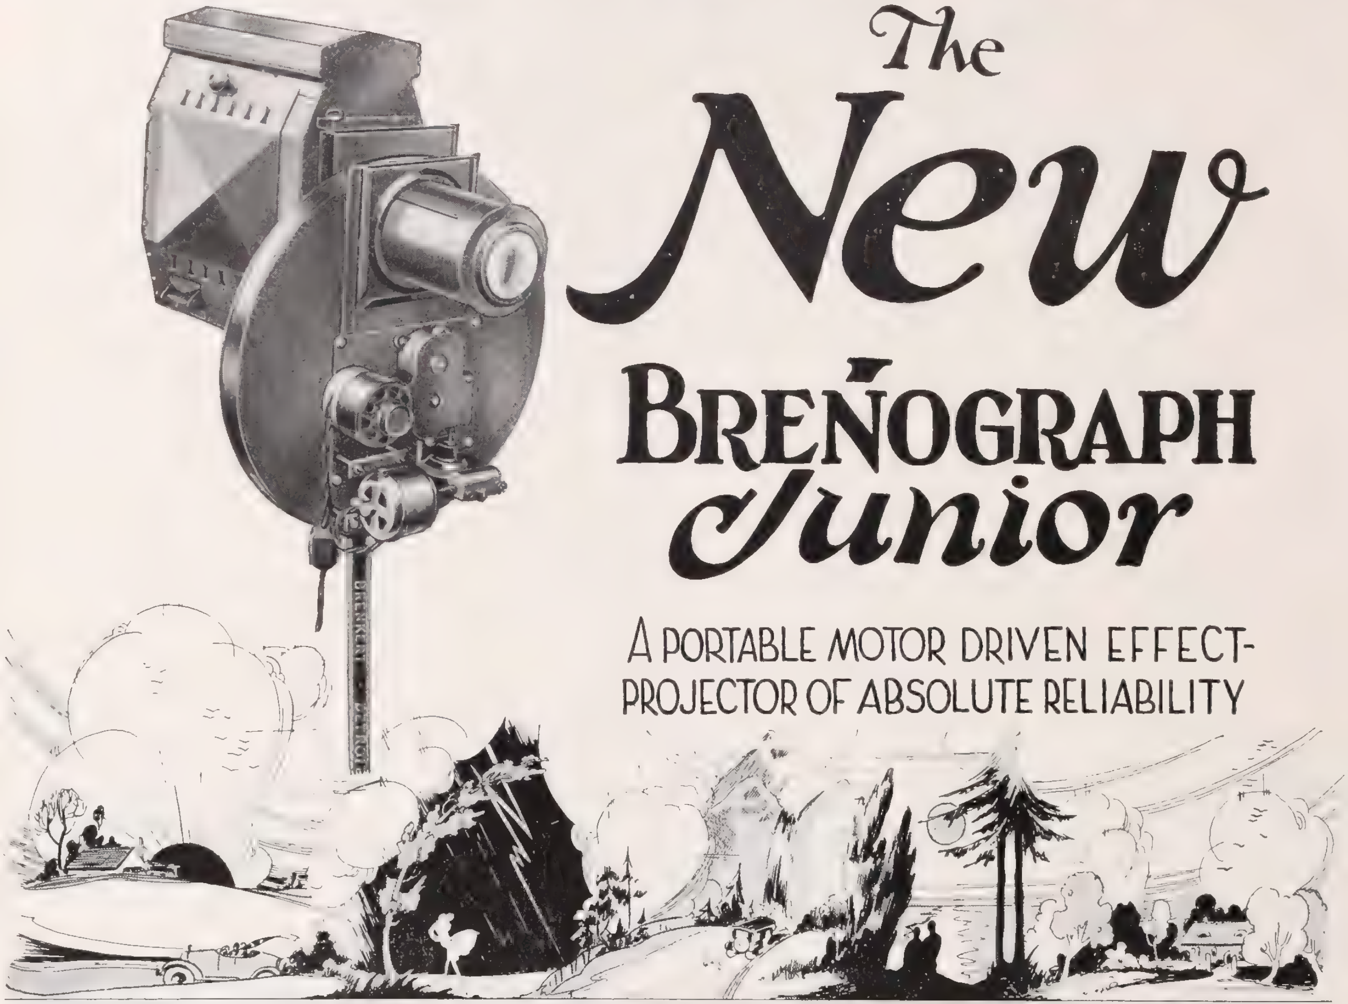
The use of high amperage, high intensity arcs in combination with metallic surfaced screens may lead to what may be described as "screen flare." It is really in the nature of screen dazzle and is caused by the use of too much light.

Metallic surfaced screens are excellent when properly used, as they are highly efficient and a certain limited control is possible over their distribution characteristics. They should not, however, be used indiscriminately in all types of theatres and especially in those where the width forms an appreciable percentage of the length and where the projection angle is large.

However, many smaller theatres are and will continue to use the reflector type of screen as being the one best suited for their requirements.

Brenkert Announces The New

BREÑOGRAPH Junior



A PORTABLE MOTOR DRIVEN EFFECT-PROJECTOR OF ABSOLUTE RELIABILITY

Brings all Outdoors into Your Theatre

The subtle charm of the atmospheric theatre rests largely in its ability to create the impression of out-of-doors, beneath nocturnal skies.

To complete this illusion, a canopy of clouds moving across a field of twinkling stars, forms an essential part of the setting.

The Brenograph Junior produces these cloud effects most realistically and with the least amount of trouble. With this simple, inexpensive machine, every theatre can add the atmospheric effects now looked for by theatre patrons.

The Brenograph Junior, equipped wih a short pedestal, occupies a space measuring only 30 x 30 x 24 inches. This permits easy concealment in any part of the theatre, increasing the illusion.

The Brenograph Junior is furnished with electric motor-driven effects and can be controlled from any part of the house by means of a switch. The motor-driven mechanism is the result of long experimentation and is absolutely reliable for all conditions. It is noiseless, has a wide range of speeds, and will start under full load at reduced speeds.

Theatre-Street Car Tie-up Campaign in Kansas City

If the success of the first few days can be accepted as a barometer, a Kansas City exhibitor has worked out a scheme to "break up" bridge parties and radio cricles in private homes at night.

The attendance at most first run downtown theatres in Kansas City has been good at matinees, but the evening business has suffered noticeably of late. In fact, it has become a problem for most of the large theatres which are under heavy operating expense. The sheer exploitation of good pictures and even a reduction in prices have failed to stimulate the night business to any great extent. Radios in the homes and bridge parties were blamed by many of the exhibitors. Then it was that Samuel Carver, manager of the Liberty theatre, a first run downtown house, effected a tie-up with the Kansas City Public Service Company, which operates all street car lines, through Fred G. Buffe, vice-president.

Kansas City's amusement facilities are excellent and each week the theatres offer fine attractions.

Why not make it a habit to take the family to a theatre several evenings a week? You'll all enjoy it immensely.

Make the evening doubly pleasant by using the street cars or buses, thus eliminating accident hazard and parking expense.

Service is excellent throughout the evening—and there are far more seats than passengers.

The Liberty Theatre at 1104 Main Street is furnishing every street car patron who attends that theatre after 6 00 p m. with two free street car tickets The street car operators have been supplied with coupons which will be delivered upon request, entitling you to receive free street car tickets from the Liberty Theatre. We call this unusual offer to your attention so that you can take advantage thereof if you so desire.

KANSAS CITY
PUBLIC SERVICE COMPANY

AD URGES THEATREGOING

Above is reproduced one of the newspaper ads used in the Kansas City campaign of the Public Service Company to create a greater use of street cars during evening hours by urging people to attend the picture shows.

In an advertising campaign, costing several thousand dollars, the announcement was made that the Liberty theatre would refund round trip street car fares with each adult ticket purchased. The street car company was supplied with coupons, which were delivered upon request, entitling the holder to receive a refund of his fare at the theatre. The coupons, however, must be presented at the box office after 6 o'clock in the evening. In view of the fact that the Liberty's price of admission was 15 cents higher than a large rival theatre, the coupon plan virtually was nothing more than a reduction in price equal to the rival house, but the stunt proved "good copy" for daily newspapers and the theatre benefited greatly from the large advertisements which the street car company ran in daily newspapers.

"This is a 'give-away' age," said Mr. Carver. "To merely reduce the admission prices would be accepted with passing notice and few persons a week later would actually remember that prices at the Liberty had been reduced. The admission, in fact, has not been reduced. The price remains at 50 cents to all those who do not present coupons. The big part of any downtown theatre's patronage comes from the residential sections of a city at night. Exhibitors have got to do something to rout persons out of their homes and away from the radios and bridge parties at night. The motor car is doing the theatres, as well as the street car company, no good. Then why do not the theatre and the street car company make an ideal twosome for a tie-up? The plan has been under way only a few days and it is impossible yet to determine its real value, but there has been an increase in night attendance and we are receiving hundreds of coupons. I firmly believe the solution of meager night attendance in Kansas City at downtown motion picture theatres has been solved."

upper box, entirely unseen by the audience. A singer was placed at the big console. The singer sang, at the same time went through the motions of playing his own accompaniment on the organ. Hunt really was playing the accompaniment on his attachment. At the end of the first verse of the song, the singer faced the audience from the organ bench, apparently deserting the organ, and sang the second verse of the song facing the audience. The music continued on the organ, even though the singer had his back to the console. The audience was completely mystified. Great interest was aroused. A wave of "how did he do it?" swept through the auditorium. But Hunt kept his secret. He kept the audience mystified, and from his hidden perch in the upper box, enjoyed the reaction to the novelty.

The second time Hunt used the Phantom organ he used it on the stage. A drop curtain was used on the stage, with a sky center on which song slides were thrown. The Phantom organ was built on a 16 foot platform behind this drop. Two holes were cut in the drop curtain at either side of the stage. These holes were covered with scrim and painted so as to escape observation. After the introduction by slides of this novelty, the head and shoulders of Hunt were shown at the right side of the stage by means of a baby spot behind the drop on the platform. The light was then extinguished and the platform was shifted to the opposite side and, at a suitable time, Hunt was seen on that side of the stage. The audience was again mystified and, being mystified, was interested. The drop curtain had a mountain scene painted on it. So it appeared as if the organist was playing on the top of a snow-capped mountain. The possibilities of producing extraordinary effects with this portable organ are limitless. Hunt has any number of plans in process of execution, adding just that touch which gives individuality to a program.

Tom Terry, who presides over the organ at Loew's State theatre, St. Louis, recently perfected a miniature organ console that may be attached to any size of organ, according to a report from that city. It is said that Terry spent ten months' spare time in designing and building this device. Fifty-five thousand feet of wire are used in making the necessary connections.

Terry is credited with being one of the first organists to play a complete vaudeville performance, his instrument serving as the full orchestra. When Loew's State opened a little more than three years ago Terry was engaged as organist—and he still has the same job.

Announce Winners in West Coast "Way Better" Drive

Winners of the three months' "Way Better Than Last Year" Drive, the organization competition contest among managers of West Coast Theatres, Inc., have just been announced by Harold B. Franklin, president.

The Grand Prize of $500, given to the theatre making the highest percentage of improvement during the three-months' period over the preceding three months' was split between two theatre managers, who were tied for that honor. Harry L. Hart, manager of the San Diego West Coast houses, and N. O. Turner, manager of the Stockton houses were the two who shared the prize.

In the Los Angeles division the following won the prizes: The California Theatre, Pomona, F. T. Thomas, manager, $250; the Paramount theatre, Hollywood, George Russell, manager, $150. Bard's Adams theatre, Los Angeles, $100.

In the San Francisco division Herman Kersken, manager of the Mission theatre, San Jose, won the first prize of $250. George Sharp, manager of the Liberty theatre, Fresno, took second prize of $150. C. L. Laws, manager of the U. C. theatre, Berkeley, took third place with a prize of $100.

In Seattle-Portland division the prizes were distributed as follows: W. S. Perutz, United Artists theatre, Seattle, first, $250; H. B. Sabottka, Capitol, Yakima, Washington, second, $150; Will Steege, Grand theatre, Great Falls, Mont., third, $100.

Watch Our 1928 Stages!

Stages that move forward, backward, upward, downward—and all in sections—these are the stages around which the elaborate presentations of our new theatres will be built.

There isn't much room left for improvement in theatre architecture nor decorations.

But watch our 1928 stages!

Peter Clark introduced the new era in stage construction. It was Peter Clark's ingenuity and knowledge of stagecraft that made possible those super stages of the Capitol, Roxy, Paramount, Ziegfeld, the Uptown and new Fox, Washington, D. C.

It has been Peter Clark stages—designed and equipped from footlights to back wall—that have proved the marvel of theatres for a quarter century.

And now we're ready for 1928—for an unprecedented demand for Peter Clark stages in every type of theatre, whether the de luxe palace or small house.

Flickerless Dimming—no play or backlash, no overlapping of contacts. 110 distinct steps.

HUNDREDS of thousands of dollars are spent to make a modern theater architecturally beautiful. Is not such an investment wasted if allowed to remain hidden by a blanket of darkness? Is it not the soft changing hues of scientific illumination that makes the investment in architectural beauty pay dividends at the box office window?

Experienced showmen, such as the Publix Chain managers, know the importance of correct lighting—and they use C-H Simplicity Dimmers because their investment in beautiful interiors must pay dividends without interruption.

Your theater, too, regardless of the seating capacity or decorative scheme, can profitably employ C-H Dimmers. They are so easily adaptable and so efficient in operation that the cost is soon forgotten—repaid in added profits.

Talk over this improvement with your architect or electrician. And in the meantime start a thorough investigation by writing for the booklet, "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater".

Emotional Reactions to Color Must Be Considered in Planning Decorative Lighting Schemes

which the child begins to perceive the colors is red, green, yellow, orange, blue and violet.

We are most sensitive to red. Dr. George Harley, in order to cure an injury of the retina of his eye, caused by overwork at the microscope, spent nine months in absolute total and uninterrupted darkness. When he emerged he was unable to appreciate distance by the eye and lost his power to recognize colors for a while; when his color perception began to return, red was the first color to appear.

Extensive investigations have proved that the majority of males state blue to be their favorite color, whereas women in the majority choose red. There is an old proverb which reads "Women and mackerel are caught by red." We are all familiar with the use of red for fish bait.

Red is the color of fire, passion, and war. Many animals are repelled or thrown into a violent rage by red; the most common example of this is the exciting of a bull by the use of red. There is a theory that the terrorizing effect of red is due to the fact that it is the color of blood. The effects of colors are due primarily to the associations which they arouse.

Yellow, which is closely linked with orange, is the color of gay festivity and revel. The golden harvest has made it the color of feasting and dance. It is the color of action, of light, and of warmth. Aurora, the goddess of dawn, is clothed in saffron robes. The golden hue stands for glory and power.

On the other hand, when associated with sickness and disease yellow becomes the symbol of quarantine. In the pages of history we find that yellow has stood for jealousy, envy, cowardice, and treachery—Judas has frequently been painted in garments of yellow. Even today we frequently hear of the coward as being "yellow."

In France, during the sixteenth century, the doors of traitors and felons were daubed in yellow. In Spain, heretics were enjoined to wear a yellow cross as a penance.

Green, the color in which the vast expanse of grass and trees are arrayed, is the most restful of colors, and is good for the eyes. Tired eyes may be revived by gazing at a soft green background.

The ancient custom of presenting the olive branch to the winner has made green the color of victory. Associated with the spring of the year, green has represented youth and innocence, vigor, life, plenty, faith, and hope. The custom of laying branches of evergreen on the graves of the dead shows green as the color representative of immortality and memory.

The Cold Colors

Blue is what is known as a "cold" color. It gives more or less the sensation of chill, which is in contrast with the warmth of red. Furthermore, blue gives the impression of space and distance; this is probably due to the blue effect obtained by gazing into uninterrupted space such as the sky. Green mountains in the far distance appear blue. Blue stands for dignity and is soothing. Travelers all testify as to the restfulness of the Mediterranean blue. Blue stands also for loneliness and despondency. It is a common expression for one to say he "feels blue." Again, blue symbolizes truth and fidelity as exemplified by the phrase "true-blue." The bluebird has long been the symbol of good-luck.

Purple, with slightly more red than blue, has long been the emblem of royalty. Homer frequently refers to the royal purple. The reason for purple becoming the color of royalty is because originally that particular dye was very expensive.

Pink, rose, amethyst, and violet all belong to the purple family. The colors amethyst and violet have symbolized passion, love, truth, suffering, and martyrdom. Rose and pink signify beauty, love, health, and hope.

White has long been symbolical of light, peace, purity, chastity, innocence, truth, and modesty. When associated with physical weakness it stands for femininity, infirmity, and delicacy. The white flag stands for truce or surrender, while the "white feather" denotes timidity. White is the color of cleanliness.

Just as black is usually considered the opposite of white, so are the associations in general the opposite. Black denotes gloom, dread, darkness, death and woes. It is the universal symbol of mourning. The black flag of piracy was an ominous sign of terror and ruthlessness. Black denotes the lack of hope; as "things look black."

Black also serves to inspire the imagination. In the darkness of night we are led to fancy and romance; we are more sensitive to suggestion, and particularly susceptible to fright.

The associations connected with gray are combinations of those connected with black and white. It is the color of age, piety, penance, humility, sadness, and aged discretion. It is the color of quiet and sobriety.

Some of these color associations that have been mentioned are of first importance; others possess a significance that is more remote. No manager or advertiser, however, who plans to use color as means of attraction and the creation of the proper mood can afford to ignore these associations. They are an indication of what, consciously or unconsciously, colors mean to the very people who make up the moving picture audience.

As can be seen from the various significances possessed by each color, the effect of the color depends upon the object or feeling with which it is associated. If it is used in the wrong connection it may defeat its own purpose. Propertly used, however, it is very effective.

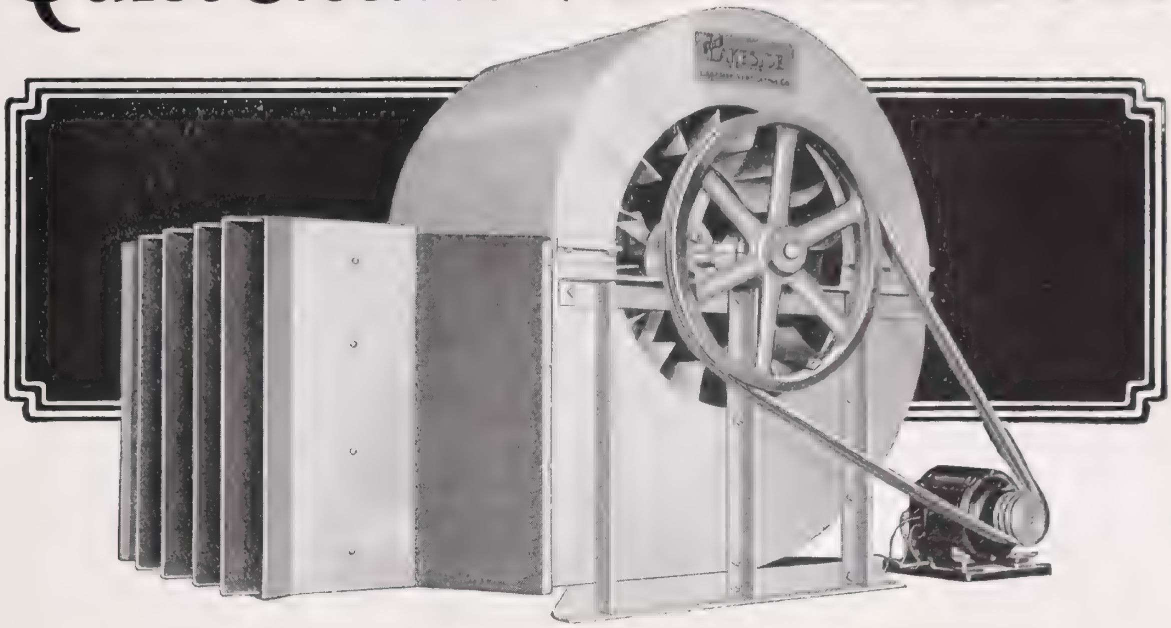
Lakeside

Quiet Electric VENTILATOR



Draws Capacity Houses Even During the Hot Summer Months

Good Ventilation Makes Good Business—It Pays to Keep Your Patrons Cool and Comfortable

You can fill your empty seats—increase your box office receipts—and draw crowds of steady patrons by equipping your theatre with a Lakeside Quiet Electric Ventilator. Its low price—easy installation—simplicity and low cost of operation make it a profitable investment that pays big dividends in increased receipts.

The Lakeside is equipped with a specially designed Four-Way Air Deflector and sends a powerful current of draftless, deflected air to every corner of the theatre that forces out the stale, devitalized air and completely changes all the air in the theatre every few minutes. so that it is always flooded with fresh, pure, healthful, outdoor air. This cooling current of fresh outside air—powerful but absolutely draftless—will please your audiences and bring their steady patronage.

The Lakeside comes ready for installation. It requires no tearing down of walls or ripping up of floors. It is so compact that it fits into a very small space. It can be disassembled to move through small door openings, and installed satisfactorily in many places where it is impossible to install any other type of ventilating system. Lakeside Ventilators are easy to operate—and trouble free.

The Lakeside costs much less than many of the complicated cooling and ventilating systems on the market, yet is remarkably efficient and is guaranteed to give satisfactory results. It is very inexpensive to operate and must "make good" in actual service because it is backed by a reliable guarantee. Lakeside Ventilators are made in different sizes to meet every requirement.

Home Television Sets Demonstrated by Inventor at General Electric Laboratories

Thus far the television transmissions have shown the head and shoulders of a subject. Greater difficulty would be experienced if the entire figure were transmitted, particularly in achieving such definition of line as would be necessary to make easy identification of the object possible. Consequently it will be some little while before the public will see moving objects or motion pictures by radio, particularly in home type receiving sets.

Dr. Alexanderson also applies his invention to the transmission of photographs by radio, and conducted a demonstration in New York on Thursday, January 26, when a picture of Mayor Walker was broadcast from station WEAF and picked up by receiving sets located in the studio and at the home of Dr. A. N. Goldsmith in New York. The photoradio equipment is attached to the set in much the same manner as a loud speaker. The picture registers on regular bromide photographic paper and is 4⅛ inches wide by 8 inches long. Among the important potential uses for photographic transmission by this means, some motion picture men pointed out, will be in connection with motion picture news reel subjects. The news reel producers spend large sums for rapid transportation of films showing news events, an enterprise in which the aeroplane has been employed wherever possible, but which will be outdistanced, as to speed and reliability, with the perfection on a commercial basis of photoradio transmission.

Inventor Describes Apparatus

In the course of his remarks to newspaper men who witnessed the Schenectady demonstration of radio television, Dr. Alexander said:

"Before we could think seriously of television broadcasting we had to convince ourselves that a television receiver could be simplified to the point where it could be made available in the home of the average man. In order to test out the practicability of a television receiver for the home we constructed a model receiver of the greatest possible simplicty and distributed several duplicates of it in some homes in Schenectady.

"Television receivers may be worked out in a variety of ways, according to well-known principles. The first choice to be made was to select the source of light. This choice was soon narrowed down to two alternatives. The light control developed by Professor Karolus of Leipsig and the Neon Lamp, developed by D. McFarlan Moore of the Edison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company. Tests of these two sources of light for television soon convinced us that each has its own distinct field of usefulness. When a large volume of light is needed for projection on a screen the Karolus system is preferable. The work on television which I described in a paper last year was built around the idea of using the Karolus light control for projecting television images on a large screen.

"An enlarged and improved lamp of the first type was one of the important elements used in the demonstration of television by Dr. Ives of the Bell Laboratories last April "Returning to the design of the television receiver, we had the choice between three well known systems—the mirror drum, the disc with lenses and the disc with holes. Our conclusion was that while the mirror drum and the lens disc may have certain advantages for television production on a larger scale we decided that from the point of view of television in the home a hole is more economical than a lens and 48 holes are more so than 48 lenses.

"Whenever television has been discussed in the past three has always been some pessimist who has wound up the discussion by asking how are you going to synchronize? The answer has always been that we will have a sycnhronous motor and transmit a special synchronizing wave or synchronize to the picture frequency or to a tuning fork. But all these devices mean higher cost, special amplifiers, and more things that may get out of order. We, therefore, simply decided to leave out all this complication. We took a standard electric motor made for household use and are manipulating its speed by an electric hand control. With a little practice and coordination between the eye and the hand it is possible to hold the picture in the field of vision as easily as one steers his car on the middle of the road. In special cases when the transmitting and receiving system are on the same power network the machines may be operated by 60 cycle motors.

"Experimental television programs will be continued to be broadcast from a laboratory transmitter on a wavelength of 37.8 meters with the accompanying voice transmission on the regular 379.5 meters of WGY. As soon as it is found that the range can be extended the television transmitter will be transferred to the high power short wave experimental station at South Schenectady. A new transmitter is being built for this purpose so that the voice and the television can be radiated simultaneously by two transmitters.

"We feel that the inauguration of this new development will be the starting point of practical and popular television. The transmission is the expensive part of such an undertaking and we feel that it is our privilege to provide it."

SATURDAY NIGHT!

Where Will You Put the Cash?

THE bank is closed, not to be opened until Monday morning. But the cash you take in now—where will you put it? A York Burglary Chest will solve that problem permanently.

Made by the makers of the world's most respected vaults, the York Burglary Chest combines the protection of a sturdy vault with the economy of small size.

Send for the interesting new booklet that tells about this real protection for your cash. It costs nothing and there is no obligation.

This booklet tells you all about the York Burglary Chest for Theatres. Send for your copy.

1. Curtain Shutter Control. Opens and closes the curtain shutter in front of the lens. from black-out or a mere slit to full opening.
2. Iris Shutter Control: A partial turn of the handle opens the iris shutter from a pin-point to full opening, or vice versa.
3. Color Frame Control: Separate lever for each color frame, and each lever keyed to correspond with the color frame it controls. A quarter turn of the lever throws the desired color in or out of position in front of the lens; and each color is visible to the operator as the color frame is moved into position.
4. Focusing Control: Positions are with respect to the lens; moves horizontally; thumb nut locks it in place.
5. Arc Control: Varies the distance between the carbons; permits accurate and smooth adjustments of the arc.
6. Handle: For control of direction of the light beam—hood is perfectly balanced, swings easily and "follows" readily.
7. Wing Lock: Holds hood securely at desired angle. Long leverage permits easy and speedy adjustments.

EVENHEETERS

The Correct Method of Organ Chamber Heating.

Architects are realizing more and more the necessity of organ chamber heating and consequently many are specifying Evenheeters in their equipment specifications. They have found that this method of organ chamber heating is the correct one; the only one that gives satisfactory results.

You too, Mr. Architect, will find that Evenheeters are the best organ protection you can obtain. You will find them reliable and serviceable too. And you will find, after they've been in use, that organ maintenance dwindles to a minimum and all—the theatre owner, the organist and yourself will be pleased with Evenheeter operation.

Too all architects we ask an opportunity of explaining why nationally known architects as Walter Ahlschlager, Rapp & Rapp and Eberson & Eberson endorse and specify Evenheeters for organ chambers.

Air Washing— Now a part of the SUPREME Cooling System

A wonderful new feature of the Supreme Cooling System—washed air. Now any theatre can have the summer-time attraction that only the biggest theatres have been able to afford—namely, positive cooling by washed air!

The Supreme Cooling System, noted for dependability, now washes and positively cools the air. The effect is amazing; the cost is small. It is destined to revolutionize theatre cooling.

"Washed Air" means Bigger Profits for You

People will patronize a cool theatre in summer. The Supreme System is the answer. It will keep your theatre positively cool and breezy—yet is sold at a price that even the smallest theatres can afford.

The New Feature. Illustrated above, the Supreme Turbo Air-Washing Unit, electrically operated. It creates a perfect, foggy water-spray through which the air must pass before entering the cooling blower.

This unit can be installed with cooling systems now in use.

Phantom view of the big New Supreme all-steel Cooling Blower, showing the multiblade steel wheel which forces air into your theatre at such high velocity that all the air is changed 30 to 60 times an hour.

Roxy Statistics Indicate Efficiency of Staff

STATISTICS for the closing of the year reveal some interesting data on the handling of the crowds at the Roxy Theatre and the general conduct of the house staff. For the week ending December 30, 1927, there were 156,218 paid admissions.

Out of this tremendous audience the management received only two complaints from patrons who claimed that discourtesy was shown on the part of attaches. Investigation of these complaints showed instances of irritability on the part of the patron rather than any discourtesy on the part of the usher.

A reciprocal compliment is paid by the management of the Roxy to the audiences. Since the opening of the house almost 5,000,000 have passed through its doors. And not once in the history of the theatre has it been found necessary to eject a single patron.

The surest and most satisfactory way to ascertain just what type of equipment will best protect your particular risks is to consult organizations who offer complete fire protection service. There is such a company that manufactures all standard types of chemical fire appliances and can therefore speak with authority and without prejudice. Being experts on all kinds of fires and having practical experience in the whole field of controlling fires scientifically they can analyze your needs and adapt exactly the right protection to the right place.

Sharpness of Image

Good definition in the screen image requires first, a good lens and second, that the operator keep the lens adjusted for focus. Either is useless without the other.

The best lens is the one which, under otherwise equal conditions, produces the sharpest boundary lines and the highest degree of contrast between black and white areas on the screen.

The degree of excellence attained in these respects depends equally upon the skill of the designer of the lens and of the workmen who make it. The designer must eliminate certain defects in lens performance, generally known as aberrations, concerning which more will follow in this space next month.

After the designer has determined upon a satisfactory construction, the glass maker must deliver glass of the required optical properties, free from color, striae, etc. The lens makers must grind to exact curvature and polish slowly and painstakingly, using materials and methods learned only by long experience to be best adapted to the production of that most delicate of manufactured products—a perfectly polished optical surface.

Congressman Warns Producers To "Clean House"

Representative Celler, Co-Introducer of Brookhart Bill, Says Otherwise the Measure Will Pass in Whole or in Part

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

Washington Correspondent, Motion Picture News

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The Brookhart block booking bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Celler of New York. The same measure, but with some of the text eliminated, was introduced January 13 by Representative Cannon of Missouri.

"While I realize that portions of the bill may be harsh and involve Congress in matters concerning which it should have no jurisdiction," said Congressman Celler in discussing his measure, "nevertheless, I offer it to renew discussion concerning the unfair trade practices and monopolistic tendencies of film producers.

"I thoroughly sympathize with the independent theatre exhibitors in their difficulties with the producers. Blind and block booking, to my mind, is outrageous. The producers have grown so powerful that it is essential that Congress intervene to protect the independent exhibitors. Undoubtedly, the producers have unfairly discriminated in favor of houses, wholly or in part in their control. When they force block booking upon the independent exhibitors, they are in the position of one who buys a cat in a bag. In consideration of obtaining one good picture, at times they are forced to purchase a block of trash. The public have suffered too long from inane and vapid films. Block booking is responsible for this. I, personally, like the movies. I do not relish, however, seeing twenty films before I can view a good one. Too often pictures have no rime or reason for existing. We see a lot of pudgy, pasty movie stars 'doing their stuff' in a silly, ridiculous story.

"The Federal Trade Commission has called attention to the misconduct of film producers and has condemned and declared illegal 'block booking.' Despite the order of the Commission, these producers still maintain their monopolies and their illegal systems of marketing their products.

"Unless they clean house, I propose to do all in my power to place them under a reasonable and constructive accountability to governmental agencies. They have the means at their command to help and not hinder independent exhibitors. They should unscramble their many monopolistic holdings. They must give the exhibitor the right to free choice of purchasing films. They must permit real competition. Too long have they coerced and intimidated exhibitors and public alike. Unless they take warning, the bill that Senator Brookhart and I sponsor will pass, if not in whole, at least in part."

Brookhart Bill Battle is On

Northwest and New England Exhibitor Organizations Join Campaign; N. Y. Congressional Group for Measure

THE battle over the Brookhart Bill went forward in full swing this week, with definite moves by producer-distributors against it, and continuance of campaign by independent exhibitor organizations in favor of it.

Machinery was put in motion by producer-distributors to fight the bill by petitions from salesmen, exchange managers and affiliated exhibitors.

P. J. Wood, business manager of the Ohio M. P. T. O., in favor of the bill, sent out a letter to exhibitors in his state, charging that petitions were being circulated by film companies for exhibitors to sign against the measure. These petitions, said Wood, were addressed to Congressmen and Senators and were being circulated by the Hays organization.

He urged that exhibitors sign no petitions until they first consulted the Ohio M. P. T. O. headquarters.

W. A. Steffes, president of the Northwest M. P. T. O., with headquarters in Minneapolis, declared that, no matter what action was taken at the Chicago Contract Conference, he would refuse to abandon his campaign for the Brookhart Bill.

The Northwest unit, through its executive committee, has authorized Steffes to "spare no expense or effort" to bring about the passage of the bill. The organization will post 100,000 one-sheets. 2,000 twenty-fours and 50,000 window cards. Four minute speakers are being engaged.

The New England M. P. T. O. has voted official endorsement of the Brookhart Bill and has begun an active campaign to secure its passage.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City, one of the organizations most active in support of the bill, made public last week a number of letters from New York Democratic representatives in Congress.

Senator Royal S. Copeland declared his support for the bill could be counted upon, and similar expressions were received from the following Congressmen: John J. Boylan, George W. Lindsay, Emanuel Celler, Samuel Dickstein, D. J. O'Connell, Andrew L. Somers, Anthony J. Griffin, Loring M. Black, Jr. and John J. Kindred.

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, is strongly in favor of the Brookhart bill and is doing everything in his power to support it, to the extent of enclosing favorable propaganda in all mail sent out from his office. "The Brookhart bill is the sole salvation of this industry," said Charnas. "It is the only hope of the independent producer as giving him an incentive to make good pictures with a reasonable chance of its getting first run exhibition."

Fred Desberg, general manager of Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., has made the statement that he is opposed to the Brookhart bill. Desberg contends that the motion picture industry is strong enough to stand on its own feet and work out its own salvation without outside interference.

Dept. of Justice Is Reluctant to Discuss Film Probe

THOUGH the Department of Justice is reported to have sent agents to Hollywood to secure information regarding motion picture production activities, none of the officials of the department will discuss any references to a probe of the industry.

For several months past agents are reported to have been working at various parts of the United States on different angles of picture production, distribution and exhibition. At Chicago they are said to have studied the recent difficulties between operators and exhibitors. They are also said to have delved closely into affairs in New York and on the West Coast, but nothing in the way of a probe is admitted.

It is said in Washington the Department of Justice does not look with favor on the Brookhart bill, which would take from the department duties they think they should perform, and turn them over to the Federal Trade Commission.

German Chains Combine

Huge Merger Brings Together Phoebus, Emelka and Oliver Under Von Lustig Control

A MERGER just completed in Germany brings together three important theatre chains into one of the greatest circuits in that country. In fact it is second only to Ufa. Emelka, the well known South German chain, has acquired all of the shares of Phoebus and has also taken an interest in the Oliver Circuit.

In view of a very recent shifting of share majorities Emelka is now virtually controlled by Herr von Lustig, prominent Austro-German banker, who was also responsible for the financing of First National's German production organization, Deutsche Film Union (Defu). As von Lustig also holds a large interest in Oliver he has virtual control of these amalgamated chains.

The Emelka circuit comprises about forty theatres, mainly in the provinces. The Phoebus circuit comprises some thirty-odd of the finest first run German houses. The houses under control of the Oliver circuit brings the number in the new combine close to the one hundred mark.

Although numerically not quite as extensive as the Ufa chain, the von Lustig group can lay claim to considerably higher value, as far as the modern standard and the size of the theatres are concentrated, as well as their very important position as key theatres.

According to advices from Germany this latest deal is considered by far the most important ever transacted in the German exhibiting field. It is significant that in addition to the dominance of von Lustig in the newly-formed theatrical holding company one of the principal shareholders is the J. B. Farbenindustrie, the vast German industrial trust, which controls Agfa, and which is also a large shareholder in Ufa.

Principal Will Expand

Nation-Wide Circuit of Small Town Theatres Planned At Atlantic City Session

A GREAT circuit of theatres in small towns that will eventually cover the entire country, is the object of a new policy of expansion decided on at a three-day session of the directors of Principal Theatres Corporation of America at Atlantic City, according to announcement made in New York by Sol Lesser, president of the corporation.

The board of directors, which were in session Jan. 20, 21 and 22, appointed as general manager of the company Joseph Skirboll, until recently European representative of First National, and approved plans for the immediate acquisition of six theatres as the first step in the new expansion.

Mr. Skirboll leaves New York late this week for Los Angeles, where he will organize his staff before starting on a trip that will take him all over the United States to conduct negotiations for additional theatres. It is estimated that the period of expansion now started will last four or five years, and that at the end of this period the company will be operating about one thousand houses, none to be in a town of more than 15,000 population. It is the company's definite policy to operate only in these small towns, such as those in which are located the twenty-eight theatres now operated by Principal.

The board of directors also approved the issuance of 75,000 shares of stock in addition to the 250,000 shares now outstanding, all of which has already been subscribed for by the present owners of the corporation.

Besides Mr. Lesser, the directors who attended the meeting at Atlantic City, included Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, vice-president; Harry Schwalbe of Philadelphia, secretary; Samuel Scattergood of Philadelphia, treasurer; Mike Rosenberg of Los Angeles, and Charles Seegal of Philadelphia. Nathan Burkan, the company's counsel, was also present.

Principal will build new theatres only in towns where there is not already a house or houses adequate for the situation, according to Mr. Lesser, who also stated that Principal would follow a straight pictures policy in the Principal chain of theatres. The present policy of showing pictures from all the leading distributing organizations will be continued.

Principal's activities in the eastern part of the country will be in charge of Col. Levy, one of the most active of the company's organizers and directors, who is affiliated with Principal in the thirty houses he operates in small towns in Kentucky.

Dover Exhibitors Arrested for Showing Fight Films

Although exhibitors at Dover, Ohio, opened their houses for business for the eighth consecutive Sunday, they were not arrested on this charge. They were, however, arrested for exhibiting pictures of the Tunney-Dempsey fight, recently legalized in Ohio. Mayor Groh and Safety Director Earl A. Nist say they do not consider these pictures suitable for Sunday entertainment, and personally caused the arrest. This proceeding, which constitutes a distinction without a difference, is looked upon as sort of a veiled protection for the exhibitors.

Mayor Groh is, by inference at least, in favor of Sunday movies, but the church element is vigorously fighting the issue and bringing every possible pressure to bear to have Sunday shows banned. The nature of the latest arrest will probably satisfy the anti-Sunday faction.

Sheedy, Exhibitor, Dead at Age of 63

Michael Sheedy, one of the best known old time motion picture exhibitors in New England and once owner of a big chain of theatres, died recently at his home in Malba, Long Island, N. Y., at the age of 63 years. He retired from active business three years ago. He was formerly a member of the firm of Sheedy & Collins and later organized the Sheedy Amusement Co. His largest theatres were in Worcester, Providence, Buffalo, Lowell, Fall River and Haverhill and he controlled theatres in many smaller New England cities.

Loew's Inc. Buys Nelson Mansion Furnishings

The furniture, furnishings and contents of Oak Hall, Kansas City, the mansion of the late William R. Nelson, founder of the Kansas City Star, were bought in a lump purchase by Loew's Inc., of New York for $90,000, the furnishings to be used in Loew theatres over the country. The acceptance and confirmation of the Loew offer had the effect of at once halting the sale of the articles to individuals, as that process of selling was just under way. Mr. Nelson's will had left his home and contents to the city for the establishment of an art gallery.

Dividend Is Declared on Loew's Inc. Stock

A quarterly dividend of $1.62½ per share has been declared on the outstanding $6.50 cumulative preferred stock of Loew's Incorporated, payable February 15, 1928, to stockholders on record at the close of business on February 1, 1928.

T.O.C.C. in United Front At Brookhart Bill Rally

Government Control Argument Called Propaganda—Pettijohn, in Debate With Exhibitors, Attacks Measure as Federal Regulation

PRESENTING a solid front in favor of the Brookhart Bill, the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York City held a rally at the Hotel Astor on January 27, and followed it up with telegrams to all the exhibitor organizations in the country urging support of the measure.

C. C. Pettijohn, of the Hays organization, present by invitation, condemned the Brookhart Bill as meaning Federal control of the industry, but declared that "any theatre owner has the right to bid for pictures with anyone." He described the allocation question as one of the industry's problems and added that there was "legitimate cause for complaint."

Mr. Pettijohn declared, however, that this and all other problems should be settled inside the industry.

Most of the debate at the rally was taken up with the question as to whether or not the bill means Federal control. R. F. Woodhull, President of the M. P. T. O. A. pointed to the danger of Government regulation. This contention was strenuously denied by Leo Brecher and other speakers.

A telegram was read from Senator Brookhart denying that he favors Governmental control of the picture industry.

Arthur Hirsch, chairman of the campaign committee on the Brookhart Bill, presided, and made the introductory speech, in which he traced the efforts of the T. O. C. C. on arbitration and arbitrary allocation of product. He said Will H. Hays had cooperated and offered to do all in his power to relieve the situation, but feared that Hays had lost his power with his membership in the matter as the deliberations had resolved themselves into sub-committees with distributor members refusing to meet as Hays suggested.

During this period, Hirsch said, the T. O. C. C. opposed outside interference and were laughed at by the very powers who now make this their propaganda basis.

With regard to the Trade Practice Conference of last Fall, Hirsch said that it had not proven very productive and that as a result, exhibitors are now taking their fight to Congress. He then proceeded to outline the Brookhart Bill, and, praising its provisions, said the organization is pledged to work for its passage. He called upon every one present to roll up his sleeves and do all in his power to aid the measure.

Seek Contract Amendments

Harry Suchman, one of the arbitration experts of the T. O. C. C., suggested the unit rule of voting by the exhibitor committee with the seventh arbitrator to be named as first order of business at the Chicago meeting. This was advocated so that the seventh arbitrator might attend all sessions and thus prevent delay.

Among the amendments sought to the contract are; prohibition in the warranty clause of adding or eliminating clauses not sanctioned by the contract committee; starting protection from last day of run; rewriting of playdate clause to force distributors to set dates where exhibitors hold up subsequent runs; to make exchange responsible to injured exhibitor for all delays; making laboratory costs basis of payment for destroyed films; prohibiting substitutions without the exhibitors consent; relieving exhibitor from obligation when distributor agrees to assignment of contract killing of accessory clause; making contract binding as soon as signed by distributor representative; limiting release of a distributor from obligation to deliver a picture to powers beyond his control; giving the exhibitor the right to cancel a picture roadshowed for any length of time and to cancel pictures in equal number to pictures roadshowed.

A number of amendments were also advocated in the arbitration agreement. Among these was the elimination of concerted action and the $500 deposit demanded by distributors where an exhibitor does not abide by a decision. Another was to increase the boards to seven members with the seventh member to be present at all sessions. A third provided for the removal of the clause permitting the local film board to name exhibitor arbitrators in case the local exhibitor organization fails to do so, and the establishment of a system of taxation on contracts, or a percentage on cases heard, to enable the exhibitors to bear a share of the cost of arbitration.

Brecher Sounds Keynote

"Any statement that the Brookhart bill constitutes Federal control of the industry is false and misleading," Leo Brecher, declared in the keynote speech from the exhibitor organization's standpoint. His address in part follows:

"Six months ago we met in this place to discuss the most pressing problems in our business, and, if possible, to find a remedy. The outstanding problem was the question of obtaining product for the operation of our theatres on a basis that would give us a degree of security for our investments, and an assurance that our right to develop in this business will not be hampered by unfair conditions that have grown up in this business.

"Out of the discussions, the following resolution was developed:

> Resolved that negotiations be initiated through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to give the independent theatre owner a fair opportunity to play first runs on equal terms with producer-owned circuit theatres; and be it further
> Resolved that, if these negotiations fail to bring the desired result, legal steps be taken to accomplish this result.

"This resolution was adopted not without dissenting arguments but the arguments were all on the question of procedure, namely, those that were opposed to the resolution were opposed not to the demand that we were proposing to make, but to the idea of attempting to improve our conditions by negotiating with the Hays organization. Events have proved that those who were opposed to negotiate with Hays were right. Mr. Hays was generous enough in the matter of conferences and expressions of good will. A great deal of time was wasted only to find out that the opposition had no desire to do the right thing, and that Mr. Hays possessed no authority in any matter of real importance in the business.

"At the Trade Practice Conference, we again proposed our resolution and tried to convince the opposition of the justice of our demands.

"On the 10th of December, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce issued a statement once again appealing to our opponents to correct the evils that are rapidly strangling this business, and with this appeal we also issued a warning to the effect that if the industry does not take steps to adjust the evils, some higher force will take the matter out of the hands of the industry and adjust it. Perhaps. What was the response? Not a ripple. Nothing but the echo of our own voice coming back to us from far and wide, from our own, from independent exhibitors suffering under the same abuses, pleading for the same remedies.

"Then, as if in answer to our prayer for relief, the industry was startled by news of the introduction of a bill in the United States Senate. A bill introduced by a man whose interest in the motion picture is not on your account or mine, but on account of the millions of the American public who attend the motion picture theatres throughout the length and breadth of this nation. A man who is interested in this fight because it is a fight for justice. A man who is pledged to stay in this fight until it is won. A fighter who has the courage and the determination to win—Senator Smith W. Brookhart.

Response of Industry

"Now, what was the industry's response to the introduction of the Brookhart Bill? For several days there was a strange avalanche of communication from so-called independent exhibitor leaders in various parts of the country, extolling to the skies as the savior of the motion picture industry, Mr. Will Hays. Was there any expression on the Brookhart bill from producers, distributors, as individuals or as members of the Brookhart's Telegram to T. O. C. C.

THE following telegram, dated Washington, January 25, was sent to the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City, by Senator Smith W. Brookhart, and read at the T. O. C. C. rally:

"Blind booking, block booking and discrimination in favor of the theatres controlled by the producers' comcombination are the three evils that threaten the life of the motion picture industry. My bill removes these three evils and it does nothing more. Those interested in the combination have quoted me as favoring Government control of the motion picture industry. This claim is utterly without foundation. The Government will control only the evils that threaten the industry and it does that for every industry in the United States. I regret exceedingly that I cannot be at your luncheon, but trust you will perfect an organization that will mean success for this charter of liberty for independent exhibitors in the motion picture industry."

The T. O. C. C. also made public a letter from the Senator to Sol Raives, president of the exhibitors organization. It read:

"I have your letter of the 11th, and think you are going after this matter in the right way. I fully realize that you have very strong and powerful opponents who, no doubt, will do everything they possibly can to defeat this bill. However, I feel that if the fight is staged along the lines you are planning, that there is no question but what we will win. I am in this fight to a finish and you can count on me doing everything I possibly can to secure the enactment of this bill into law."

Hays organization? Was there any expression on the Brookhart bill from the Hays organization or from Mr. Hays as an individual? Not a word. What did this silence indicate? Was it indifference or was it contempt? Perhaps the answer will come later. So much for the response from the producers and distributors, but what of the response from independent exhibitors throughout the country, and what of the response from the public? Senator Brookhart has been deluged with communications from independent exhibitors from all parts of the country, both from individuals and organizations favoring the bill and offering every form of cooperation for its successful passage. An astounding response has been received from the public, from individuals in every station of life, and from representatives of organizations interested in the motion picture as a commodity in which the public has a vital interest.

"Is exhibitor opinion unanimously in favor of the Brookhart bill? Nearly, but not quite. Here and there comes a whisper of opposition like a single hiss in the dark, and on what is this opposition to the Brookhart bill based?

"One states to beware of Federal regulation of the motion picture industry. Another, more daring and original, states that the evils which the Brookhart bill seeks to remedy are real, and must be done away with if the industry is to survive, but—and here is the originality of the objection—beware of federal control of the motion picture industry. A national leader for whom personally we have great regard but who unfortunately is not financially interested in the exhibition business to a considerable extent, if at all, states that the Brookhart bill would be alright if only—and here is a new angle of objection—if only it did not provide machinery for its enforcement, because that would mean that dreaded thing—government control.

"Now, whence comes this wisdom of the small and widely scattered minority group? It is strangely uniform in its outgivings, though the language used may be somewhat different in each case. Can we help wondering whether this wisdom is not gathered at a common source?

"Perhaps the answer to this question is provided by a statement issued within the last two days by Mr. Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the Hays organization. He is quoted, speaking of the bill, as follows:

" 'This will surely provide for government control and that to take this out would remove its strength.'

"Note carefully that Mr. Pettijohn does not say that Senator Brookhart has said this. He merely says that Senator Brookhart is quoted as saying that this bill will surely provide for government control. Who quoted the Senator? On whom does Mr. Pettijohn rely that the Senator has been quoted correctly? Did he try to verify the quotation? Of course not! But we have! We asked Senator Brookhart whether he ever expressed himself as quoted, and the Senator characterized the quotation as untrue and misleading.

"To raise an issue of government control is merely an attempt to throw dust in your eyes, and blind you so that they can continue undisturbed in their campaign to monopolize the industry. Mr. Pettijohn further says:

" 'The issue is now clean-cut and everybody in the business understands its meaning and purport. The question now plainly is:

" 'Are you in favor of government control of the motion picture business or against it?'

"He says the issue now is clear. Well, it has been clear till he raised his little cloud of dust. But I have lately asked some exhibitors the question in Mr. Pettijohn's own words: 'Are you in favor of government control of the motion picture business?' and here is the answer I got: 'We would sooner be regulated in our business by the United States government than be put out of business by the gang that is trying to grab it all for themselves.'

"What does the bill provide that gives these gentlemen the notion that it spells government control?

"Section seven of the bill provides that the Federal Trade Commission is to make suitable rules and regulations for giving effect to the provisions hereof. This means that the Federal Trade Commission is to see that the provisions against compulsory block booking, blind booking and inequitable allocation of product are enforced.

"Is this government control? Then the law requiring a policeman to lock up a man for picking your pockets is also government control.

"Government control would mean regulation of the kind of pictures to be made, the number of them or the prices at which they are to be sold—and is there anything of that sort provided in this bill?

"The bill merely says:

" 'Thou shalt not steal!' And then it provides a policeman to see that the commandment is carried out!"

Pettijohn Attacks Bill

C. C. Pettijohn, after declaring that seventy per cent of the nation's exhibitors, (figured on seating capacity), were opposed to the Brookhart bill, warned against the peril of a government regulated industry. He suggested it would be much more preferable if exhibitors would get together with producers and distributors and solve their own problems within the industry. He declared that ninety per cent of the producers and distributors opposed the measure. Among other things, he said film rentals would be increased from ten per cent to three hundred per cent if the proposed Brookhart bill becomes a law, and that small producers would be forced out of business. Pettijohn gave it as his opinion that it was not impossible to solve the industry's problems within the industry

Pettijohn recalled the time eleven years ago when as counsel of the independent exhibitors he drew the wrath of the organization because of the opinion he gave on the music tax. He advocated then that all that was left to do was to pay the license fee and secure repeal of the law. He said he would give the same opinion today.

"You have paid the tax and still are working for the repeal of the law," he said. He then pointed to the fact that five years ago the exhibitors asked and received a uniform contract, and later obtained equal representation in settling disputes, through the offices of the Hays organization. "Thirty thousand cases have been settled in three years by arbitration, with only twenty-seven appeals to the courts," he said, "and still you tell me we can't settle our problems."

With regard to the passage of the Brookhart bill, Pettijohn further said it would eliminate every $5, $7.50, $10, $12.50 and $15 account in the United States that was more than ten miles removed from an exchange center. "Not only will you tear the hide off the small exhibitor, but the small producer as well," he continued.

FORMER Gov. Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Hays organization, defending block booking in his speech at the annual luncheon of the National Board of Review, described it as the same thing as subscribing to the Saturday Evening Post for a year in advance.

The only difference being, Governor, as we see it, that one does not have to subscribe to 52 issues of the Satevepost in order to get one, two, or three that he may want. You simply walk to the nearest newsstand and buy the individual copy.

Mr. Lorimer does not attempt to force you to take all, or get none. And, in order to enable you to find out whether or not you wish to buy any given issue, The Post takes big space frequently in the newspapers to tell what the issue is all about.

Looks to us as if the argument should be turned around the other way.

WILLIAM LE BARON, vice president of F B O in charge of production, returned to the coast early in the week after having spent several weeks going over the well developed plans for the use of the Radio Corporation of America and General Electric Company method of sound reproduction and synchronization with pictures. He will organize a unit immediately to devote its entire time to sound and sight synchronization.

Mr. Le Baron predicts an entirely new technique in the making of motion pictures as a result of these synchronizing devices. He foresees the problem of synchronizing his audience with the whole scheme of things. That is, according to his contention, the sound must be so regulated to the picture as to keep the audience at proper distances from the screen at all times. Voices must be louder when a closeup is shown and must be heard at a distance in a long shot, etc.

The motion picture producer, up to now, according to Mr. Le Baron, has had his audience in his hand to move them about as he pleased for closeups, medium and long shots. The legitimate stage producer has to play to a stationary audience. Synchronized sound and sight pictures will now have to strike a happy medium between the two. This is only one of the many problems Mr. Le Baron will experiment with in the next few months.

STILL on the subject of the Brookhart Bill—as who is not?—we are in receipt of this telegram from William A. Dillon, of Ithaca, well-known upstate exhibitor:

"The Brookhart Bill is either the first or the last warning. Its failure to pass now means only temporary relief. The permanent defeat of such measures can only be brought about by proper adjustment within our ranks. The future of the industry as a whole should be deemed more valuable than the profits of a year or the selfishness of a few individuals. Harmony defeats all enemies. Let's write a new show business at Chicago and save the industry."

And this telegram from George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City:

"Am opposed to Brookhart Bill or any other bill seeking Federal regulation of film industry on general principle that exhibitors should settle differences among themselves. Am in favor of modified block booking, involving, say, option on additional fifty per cent of product to be signed up following screening."

THE month of February has been closely related to the development of the motion picture projector, according to Jean A. LeRoy, one of the pioneer inventors of this industry's mechanical apparatus.

Thirty-four years ago during February, 1894, Eberhard Schneider began construction in a shop in the Krupp's works on his projector which was later known as the "Wonderscope." In February, 1895, Schneider put the finishing touches on this machine at the Fulton machine shop in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Again going back to the year 1894 and the month of February, on the third day to be exact, the first motion picture to be screened in this country, says Mr. Le Roy, was presented to an audience of twenty-five or more people in a room at Number 16 Beekman street, New York City. Peep-box Kinetoscope film was used in the demonstration. Jean A. Le Roy, assisted by Robert Golden, the latter now a cameraman, were responsible for the projector used and the finished product was the result of reconstruction work begun in December, 1893, in Brower's Shop, corner of John and Dutch streets. It took a little over an entire year to perfect the projector to the point where these two pioneers were satisfied with its performance.

This Le Roy-Golden motion picture projector, LeRoy claims, was the "Grand-daddy" of them all, employing such vital parts as are now incorporated in the modern projector—i.e. the top feed sprocket, loop in the film, aperture plate and gate, the intermittent advancing member and take-up sprocket. This particular machine was in use until July 6, 1897.

They gave queer names to projectors back in the '90's. Another inventor, Elias B. Dunn, better known in past years as the "New York Weather Prophet," in 1897 built his "Excellograph" at 88 Maiden Lane, New York City. Dunn completed twenty of these projectors which found distribution in the United States, England and France.

Another strange name for a projector was the "Eidoloscope," produced by Eugene Lauste, a Frenchman at one time associated with Thomas Edison. With Woodville Latham, the "Eidoloscope" was enabled to appear on the market and gave public exhibitions of motion pictures in New York City for about a year. According to Le Roy, this particular projector was an important element to be reckoned with in subsequent law-suits instituted by the Motion Picture Patents Company in endeavors to sustain the Edison claims.

Now that roadshows are much the vogue in this industry, it may be news to some that the first motion picture roadshow was held at the Clinton, New Jersey, Opera House, February 22, 1895. A handbill in the possession of Mr. LeRoy announces that the "Cinematographe Novelty Co., presents LeRoy's Marvelous Cinematographe, Showing Wonderful and Astounding Pictures in Life Motion—Once Seen Never To Be Forgotten." Vaudeville artists of that time and 100 views of New York City were included in the bill at the admission of 15, 25 and 35 cents.

Another interesting development of the present day, the talking movie, Mr. LeRoy claims, was first presented by C. H. Oxenham who conducted a phonograph record exchange on Halsey Street, Brooklyn. Oxenham made a motor driven projector called the "Kineostoptican" and with the film at his disposal the results were all that could be looked for at that period of development.

AS the result of a series of scientific tests made at the Embassy Theatre in New York during the week it is reasonable enough to suppose that in the near future there will be a general switching of gentlemen's preference for blondes to brunettes. Contrary to the prevalent belief the brunette gets the kick of a mule out of a kiss, while the blonde's reaction by comparison is like unto the kick of a Shetland pony.

The test was arranged by the publicity department of M-G-M and the experiment conducted by Dr. William Marston, a lecturer on psychology at Columbia University. The delicate and up-to-the-minute instruments were applied to a number of Broadway's leading show girls of the decidedly blonde and brunette type as they sat entirely composed. And with instruments still applied some of the most ardent love scenes between Greta Garbo and John Gilbert from the pictures, "Flesh and the Devil" and "Love" were projected.

The resultant action on the blood pressure and the respiration of the subjects, according to the announcement made by Dr. Marston, were really amazing, with the brunettes winning by such a wide margin that it was really no contest. The record blood pressure fluctuation went to a brunette with a leap at the widest point from 88 to 136, while the best performance of the blondes reached a high mark of 128.

Some of the wise-crackers were skeptical of the authenticity of the blondes, while others prophesied that when Dr. Marston got to making his tests on subjects outside of the show girls his instruments would never be able to contain themselves.

The stunt got a lot of newspaper space in New York, with pictures, and a nation-wide story over press association wires, including the A. P.

THE William Fox-Wesco theatre deal has caused more than passing interest along Picture Row and among the exhibitors of St. Louis, Mo., and vicinity because of the possibilities of the gigantic transaction in this section of the country.

For some weeks it has been known that Skouras Brothers and the powers that be in the Wesco and allied organizations have been discussing some big business and an official announcement or two of more than purely local interest have been anticipated for some weeks past.

One proposition, as has been known, was the proposed management of the Saxe Circuit in Milwaukee and Wisconsin by Skouras Brothers Enterprises for the account of the Wesco organization, which recently acquired control of the Wisconsin theatre chain.

A second deal, so it is said, involved the Skouras Brothers first runs on St. Louis and its allied string of houses, the St. Louis Amusement Company holdings.

Naturally no official pronouncements have been made in this direction, due principally to the absence from St. Louis of Mr. Spyros Skouras, the directing head of the local amusement chain. But along Picture Row one does not have to travel far to get most any sort of an angle to the what will or may happen among our theatres.

One angle of the contemplated Wesco Skouras deal, it was said, involved the taking over of the Missouri, Ambassador and Grand Central theatres on the basis of complete ownership rather than on a mere lease arrangement. It is said that this was the real underlying motive for the recent rearrangement of the financial structure of the Skouras organization involving the purchase from Famous Players-Lasky of the Missouri theatre and office building at Grand Boulevard and Lucas Avenue.

While that financing project did not affect, apparently, the Skouras-Paramount community of interests in the operation of the Ambassador and Missouri theatres, it is regarded in some inner motion picture circles as greatly strengthening the hand of the Fox organization in these parts, especially if the reported probable deal between Wesco and the Skouras chain may be accepted at face value.

REPORTS from a Hollywood scout: D. W. Griffith is to direct Lupe Velez, of "Gaucho" fame, in a new version of D. W.'s great success, "The Battle of the Sexes." . . . Jack Mulhall, so it is said, will be made a star by First National. . . . If rumors now current are substantiated, there will be many new faces at the head of some Hollywood studios. Several prominent executives are said to be slated for the axe. . . . "La Paiva," which D. W. Griffith planned to make with Estelle Taylor in the lead, is to serve as a starring vehicle for Gloria Swanson. . . . Miss Swanson was scheduled to make "The Last of Mrs. Cheney," but now Griffith is to make it.

A SEARCH for new faces is the business which Harry Rapf, associate producer at the M-G-M studios at Culver City, is mixing with his vacation in New York—Mr. Rapf's first visit to the east in four years.

The producer, he says, is more interested in getting new faces, new personalities for the screen, than neither the theatre men or the public. For, he says, the producer cannot hope to continue to make pictures that will appeal without a steady supply of new material in all branches of studio work—acting, writing and directing.

Mr. Rapf is visiting night clubs—he discovered Joan Crawford at a New York supper club where she was a dancer—as well as theatres, and making screen tests of likely candidates for the screen. Among the young women who have appeared before the test camera is a girl whose present occupation is that of secretary for a New York stock broker.

He deplores the difficulties which beset the producer in locating and properly developing likely talent for acting and writing. The writer offers an especially difficult probem, he points out.

Fox Acquires Long Lease on Shrine Theatre in Atlanta

WILLIAM FOX has launched his campaign for the extension of his theatre interests in the South. Through a contract signed this week he secures a twenty-one-year lease on the magnificent Shrine Theatre in Atlanta, Georgia, which will be built by the Shriners on Peachtree Street at Kimball, directly opposite the Georgian Terrace Hotel. The aggregate rental is reported as $3,000,000.

The new theatre is to cost $2,000,000, and will be financed by members of Yaarab Temple of the Shriners. Work on the building will be started within four weeks, and it is scheduled for completion within a year. Theatre men in Atlanta are questioning the outcome of the Fox invasion there, inasmuch as Atlanta is already over seated and the Fox house is located ten blocks from the center of the city. The new house will seat 5,000.

Fox has also acquired property in St. Louis on which will be erected a 5,000-seat house. The transaction was completed in the name of the Theatre Realty Company, a Fox subsidiary. The property has a frontage of 244 feet on the Westerly side of Grand Boulevard and 360 feet on the Southerly side of Washington Boulevard. The new theatre building is expected to be completed not later than September 1, 1928.

Ufa Distribution Deal

David Brill Heads New Corporation to Handle Product in Eastern Territory of U. S.

A NEW distributing corporation headed by David Brill has been formed to handle the distribution of Ufa product in the eastern part of the United States, according to information given out by Louis Nizer, of Phillips and Nizer, attorneys, representing Brill.

Negotiaitons for the Ufa distribution contract have been going on for some months and culminated with a five-year exclusive contract to distribute Ufa feature productions for the eastern territory. This territory includes New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, Rhode Island, Maine, Delaware, Virginia and the District of Columbia. The estimated rental value of the product involved is placed at $17,890,000.

Negotiations for the completion of the contract were carried on between Wynn Jones, president of the Ufa Films, Inc., in the United States, and Brill, who was represented by Nizer. Samuel Richter represented Jones as attorney.

David Brill, who is the guiding head of the distributing organization, has been New York manager of the Tiffany-Stahl exchange for the last year. His resignation was tendered with the organization of Brill, Inc., and takes effect February 11th.

Brill, Inc., will release up to September 1st, 1928, six Ufa productions whose titles are: "The Modern Du Barry," "Jealousy," "Two Brothers," "Dance Fever," "Streets of Algiers" and "The Hypocrite."

The Brill company will release for the season of 1928-29 twenty-six Ufa productions, the titles and casts of which will be announced at a later date. The new company is organizing exchanges in the various key cities of the eastern territory and its New York office will be located at 729 Seventh Avenue.

Leo Brecher, following Pettijohn, declared that the bill does not prohibit voluntary block booking, but prevents only coercive selling, and that Pettijohn had dodged the issue of arbitrary allocation. In defending the bill, he declared it did not mean Federal control and said exhibitors were ready to pay as much or more for product if given the opportunity to buy it on equal basis with their competitors. His contention was that the bill vests administration with the trade commission, which is analagous to a policeman in enforcement of the law.

Continuing, Beecher said: "Just as surely as you were warned that the trade commission would act unless certain conditions were remedied, so now I warn you that if the Brookhart bill is not passed you will get something far more serious. There will be Federal control of everything from number, type and cost of productions down to cost of admissions."

Reichenbach and Rembusch Speak

Harry Reichenbach was another strong advocate for the passage of the Brookhart bill. He urged exhibitors to get together and systematically campaign for the passage of the bill. He also outlined a plan to enlist public support through the newspapers and screens and by the use of speakers within the theatres.

Frank J. Rembusch, secretary of the unaffiliated exhibitor group, was another who urged support for the Brookhart bill. After telling of his experiences with an alleged boycott following an arbitration dispute in Indianapolis, he said: "It is awful that we have to go somewhere else to get help, but such a course has been forced upon exhibitors as a last resort." He expressed a willingness to fight the Brookhart bill if producers would put into writing a promise that would assure an open market.

R. F. Woodhull, after reiterating his opposition to Federal regulation, which, he said, the Brookhart bill provided, declared himself to be in entire accord to the bill, with that one exception. The practices hit by the bill are all wrong, he declared, when pointing out the opportunity of the contract committee to correct them. In conclusion he said he would never support anything which will put this great industry into the hands of a political committee.

Charles L. O'Reilly, former president of the T. O. C. C., asked support for the bill. He said that foreign pictures are improving and may soon mean competition on the American market. He argued that chain operators had a right to discount for volume buying, but not a right to buy at a discount to the exclusion of a competitor.

Sydney S. Cohen declared that results from questionnaires sent out by the Board of Trade and Commerce showed a majority of unaffiliated exhibitors in favor of the Brookhart Bill.

William Brandt, another former T. O. C. C. president, asked for a concerted drive for the passage of the bill. He said his interests in Brooklyn had been jeopardized in several ways and cited a case of the purchase of a "bootleg" theatre by a chain competitor, among other evils now existing.

New Theatre Circuit for New England, Is Report

A syndicate in Boston, represented by John J. Curley, a brother of former Mayor James Curley, has options on a site for a large motion picture theatre in Watertown, N. Y., according to J. W. Goodman, of that city. Mr. Goodman further states that the Watertown house will be one of a chain of theatres extending across Massachusetts, into New York State, and including Albany, Shenectady, Utica, Syracuse, Watertown, Canton and Potsdam. The chain will open in 1928.

Bronx Property Leased by Sydney S. Cohen

THE property now occupied by the Bronx Strand Theatre and adjoining open air theatre at 827-829 Westchester Avenue, Bronx, New York, has been leased by Sydney S. Cohen from the Afterglow Realty Company for an additional term of 21 years from the expiration of the present lease in 1930. The property is located directly at the Prospect Avenue subway station. Maurice Levy is president of the Afterglow Realty Company.

The theatre will be modernized and the seating capacity extended to 2,500 seats. Work will be started in the early summer and will be completed by fall, it is thought.

Admission Tax Tolls Dropped $3,000,000

A $3,000,000 drop in admission tax collections in 1927 is shown by figures just made public by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C., placing total receipts from this source for the year at $17,838,818 as compared with $20,900,775 in 1926. In making these figures public the bureau calls attention to the fact that the exemption from tax of admissions was increased from 50 to 75 cents effective March 29, 1926, indicating that the additional exemption cannot be held responsible for the $3,000,000 decline.

Approximately two-thirds of all the admission taxes collected in the country are paid in the states of New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania and California, receipts from those states in 1927 being as follows: New York, $6,985,248; Illinois, $2,150,153; Pennsylvania, $1,431,964; and California, $1,404,008.

Fox Chooses Title for News Cameraman Story

Fox Films has selected "The News Parade" as the title for a feature picture based on the adventures of a newsreel cameraman that David Butler will direct. Nick Stuart and Sally Phipps, the hero and heroine of the film, have left Los Angeles for New York for production work.

Butler has been in New York several days preparing for the new film, which will be his second effort in direction, his first being "The High School Hero." He is accompanied by William Conselman, supervisor and co-author of the new picture as well as "The High School Hero." After conferences with Truman H. Talley, chief director of Fox News, the script is pretty well in hand. Russell Muth, Fox News cameraman, has been assigned to act in an advisory capacity.

Strand, Humboldt, Iowa, Destroyed by Fire

The Strand theatre at Humboldt, Iowa, was another blaze added to Iowa's epidemic of destructive fires. On January 27 both the Strand and the Russell house were wiped out at an estimated loss of $50,000. The explosion of an oil stove behind the stage caused the fire.

At the time of the blaze the performance was in progress but the crowd departed immediately and orderly. A high wind made useless the endeavors of the firemen to get the flames under control. All that is left standing are the brick walls.

Mr. Russell formerly operated the Strand when it was known as the Opera House. Since then the house has been under lease.

Hearst News Service Will Get Russian News Shots

Contract for the exclusive delivery of all Russian newsreel shots has been consummated between the Hearst News Service, producing the M-G-M News, and the Sovkino, the official Russian Government film production agency. The agreement is already in operation.

Paramount Profits Big for Past 8 Years

Wall Street News Reveals Tremendous Business Done by Company in That Period

IN AN article reviewing the participation of Paramount in the developing of motion picture activities for the past eight years, the Wall Street News reveals the tremendous net profits of the company over that period. For the eight years from 1919 to 1928 the aggregate net profits are given as $43,141,000, an average of over $5,390,000 a year.

The article, referring to Paramount as the largest amusement institution in the world, places the present estimated assets of the company at $152,000,000 and cites the years 1925, 1926 and up to July 1927 as the period when the greatest amount of theatre acquisition and building took place. In that time the company added to its property account $81,287,000, of which $52,437,000 was contributed by stock subscription and subsidiary company financing.

According to the article the net profits of Paramount for 1927, after depreciation and taxes, including undistributed share earnings of Balaban & Katz, are estimated at $8,050,000, as against $5,600,000 in 1926, an increase of 44 per cent. The year was the greatest in the history of the company.

In part the Wall Street News article reads as follows:

"Since initiation of preferred dividends Paramount has always paid this distribution at the regular quarterly periods. The common stock since 1926 has been virtually on a $10 a share annual basis, with $2 cash being paid quarterly, while the $2 extra may be paid either in cash or stock at the option of directors. During the two years in which the extra was distributed, the disbursement was made in stock. Cash dividends at the rate of $8 a share annually have been paid regularly since 1919. In that year $5.50 a share was distributed to common stockholders, while in 1917 $10 a share was paid. The common stock has sold as high as 127½ in June of 1926, while it sold as low as 40 in 1920. The present price is around 114, while the high during 1927 was 115⅜ and the low 92.

"Until the recent refunding operation the company has had no funded indebtedness. Its present outstanding capitalization, after this plan is consummated, will consist of about 688,000 shares of no par value common stock, with no preferred. In addition it will have bond indebtedness of $16,000,000.

"After the present debenture financing has been completed, it is believed Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp. will have a ratio of current liabilities to current assets of about three to one, and there will be no bank loans outstanding. The latest available balance sheet as of July 2, 1927, shows (after giving effect to the sale of 98,263 additional common stock, the redemption of outstanding preferred, and sale of $16,000,000 debentures) that total current assets were $38,742,874. Current liabilities on this basis was $10,143,460, leaving a net working capital of $28,599,414."

Famous Players Canadian Has 18 Toronto Houses

With the addition of the Grover and Gerrard Theatres, Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, now has no less than 18 modern and attractive suburban houses in operation in the City of Toronto.

Labor Controversy in S. F. Halts Work on Fox St. Louis House

THE Fox interests have failed to break the strike that has retarded the construction of their big picture palace at Grand and Washington boulevards in St. Louis. Due to a labor controversy in San Francisco, that indirectly involves the Fox interest, the proposed theatre building program of that organization has been held up indefinitely.

In a letter read before the St. Louis Building Trades Council at its executive session held on the night of January 25 by Abraham M. Frumberg, local representative of Fox, D. G. Aronberg, president of Aronberg, Fried, Inc., of New York City, general contractors on the St. Louis Fox theatre and a similar project in Detroit, Mich., declared that he is powerless to grant the demand of the International Iron Workers Union with regard to the erection of steel work in the San Francisco building in which Fox has leased theatre space.

The San Francisco building is being erected by a subsidiary of the Bank of Italy and steel workers not affiliated with the international union are being used on that job. Fox has been powerless to interfere in the San Francisco dispute, but P. J. Morin of St. Louis, international president of the Iron Workers Union, nevertheless called off the steel workers on the St. Louis and Detroit jobs.

In his letter Aronberg declared that it is manifestly unfair to penalize Fox in St. Louis and Detroit for conditions on a structure in which he will be but a tenant, having nothing to do with construction.

Iowa Sunday Fight Hot

Exhibitors Gaining Upper Hand in Controversies With Blue Law Advocates

THE Sunday show fight is still on in Iowa. The mayor's veto was overridden at Cota, Iowa. The vote on the question has stood the same—four to one—since the question of Sunday shows was raised, but the mayor, and one councilman, a druggist, opposed the repeal of the ordinance prohibiting shows on Sunday.

W. P. Grossman, of the Palace theatre at Nevada, Iowa, has secured sufficient signatures to a petition requesting the calling of a special election on the proposition of Sunday shows, and the matter will be voted upon within a few days.

Legal battles in Villisca's blue law controversy over the opening of theatres on Sunday were ended with the passage of an iron-bound ordinance which prohibits Sunday shows.

Because Dr. F. J. Liken, owner of the theatre, was able to obtain an injunction restraining the city from interfering with him under an old ordinance, the city council passed a new ordinance. The council agreed to drop charges against Dr. Liken for operating his theatre recently on Sundays.

George Bronson, manager of a theatre at Tabor, Iowa, and Sherman Coffelt, movie machine operator, were fined $5 and costs for violating the Sunday movie ordinance. The belated charges were filed after two weeks of waiting and carried the signatures of Tom Tackett, O. E. Morehead and Sam Clark. Although Mayor Parkinson warned the offenders that the fine would be greater next time, Bronson announced that he would open his theatre again on the next Sunday.

Sutherland, Iowa, the last of the larger towns in the county to vote out the "blue" laws which prohibit the showing of motion pictures on Sunday, secured Sunday shows through a petition signed by two-thirds of the voters.

By a vote of 1218 to 600 the citizenry of Effingham, Ill., on January 27 routed the blue element of the community which sought to force the town's motion picture houses to remain closed on Sundays.

For twenty years Effingham was without Sunday movies. But recently an American City Council decided to dispense with this relic of the dark ages when they burned witches and put good housewives in the stocks in New England and voted to permit the shows to keep open every day in the week.

The controversy came to a head when the reform element caused the arrest of the proprietor of a theatre on a charge of violating the ancient Blue Law. Other business men protested and the Councilmen responded to the public demand.

Then the Blue Nosed contingent in Effingham got busy with referendum petitions, seeking to force the Councilmen to back up, but they called for a show down at the polls. The result was an overwhelming defeat for the narrow-minded church element.

Changes for Northwest

Liberty in Seattle Closed As First of Operation Alterations of West Coast Theatres

JUST prior to the beginning of the greatest period of expansion and change in the motion picture industry ever experienced in the Pacific Northwest territory, several important changes in the operation of leading West Coast Theatres, Inc., houses have been announced by Herschel Stuart, managing director of the circuit's Washington and Oregon theatres.

Spent $102,800,000 on 1927 Productions

AN outlay of $102,800,000 was spent during the 1926 - 27 production period in southern California alone, according to figures compiled and announced by Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists. This is an increase of about 25 per cent over the previous year's figures.

The amount of money invested in the motion picture industry in southern California is around $1,125,000,000, it is said, while the investment in films and film properties approximate $375,000,000, declares Mr. Schenck. Persons totaling 25,000 in addition to the thousands of extras are regularly employed and earn a payroll that amounts at the end of the year to approximately $100,000,000.

The first move in the new regime was the closing of the Liberty theatre in Seattle last week. This house, formerly the first United Artists Theatre in America, has been used during recent months for the smaller program attractions booked by West Coast.

Following this will come the opening of the magnificent new 4,000-seat Seattle theatre at Ninth Avenue and Pine Street, to be operated by West Coast Theatres in conjunction with Publix interests. The opening date was announced tentatively this week as being February 17, and announcement has just been made by Mr. Stuart to the effect that the house will be managed by Mr. Gus Eyssell, at present managing director of the Metropolitan theatre in Los Angeles. He will have as his assistant manager Bernard J. Hynes, at present assistant to James Q. Clemmer at the Fifth Avenue theatre in Seattle, who is also a former Metropolitan theatre man.

It is understood to be highly probable that the stage program for the opening week will be presented by a Publix unit to be brought to the Pacific Coast from the Middle West for the first time in the history of the Publix shows. This same unit also will probably appear at the opening of the new Portland theatre in Portland, Oregon. the West Coast-Publix house in that city which is expected to open early in March.

House policies, it is understood, will be somewhat as follows: The Seattle theatre will present the current program releases of the big producing companies, in conjunction with elaborate stage revues and musical features; the Fifth Avenue theatre will present the larger film attractions on a weekly change basis, with occasional large stage personalities and a large orchestra; and the United Artists theatre will continue its long run policy of United Artists and other companies' special productions

Universal Plans Feature of Maoris of South Seas

A feature motion picture built around the lives of the Maoris, the original inhabitants of New Zealand, will be made for Universal by Alexander Markey, explorer and writer, who will shortly leave for New Zealand with Wilfred Cline, cameraman; Lew Collins, assistant; and a script girl.

Markey is a former secretary of the Society of Fine Arts, and is also a lecturer and author. He is a brother-in-law of Bernarr Macfadden, the publisher. For the past nine months he has been at Universal City studying motion picture production. He has made a study of the Maoris. A story of these people has never, it is said, been attempted before. Markey's plans include filming of inhabitants of the Fiji and surrounding islands.

Pathe Shows 'Night Flyer' in Railroad Theatre Car

"The Night Flyer," a railroad melodrama produced by the De Mille studios and released by Pathe, was presented in a railroad theatre car last Wednesday afternoon before a group of motion picture critics. The production was screened in one of the Raymond-Whitcomb Land Cruises cars and it was announced that each land cruise had been equipped with a theatre car equipped to seat about 50. A cruise train left Wednesday night for Los Angeles, via New Orleans and the South West. It carried with it two programs of Pathe pictures.

Stern Baby Star Fully Recovered from Illness

Little Sunny McKeen, the Snookums of the "Newlyweds and Their Baby" comedy series, has been ill with pneumonia for the past four weeks, but is now well along towards complete recovery. He was taken ill early in January, it is said, after having suffered from exposure when on a holiday trip into the California mountains with his parents. After the middle of the month, however, he successfully passed the crisis, and since that time has been mending rapidly.

Pola Negri's Next to Be "Three Sinners"

The next Pola Negri vehicle for Paramount will be "Three Sinners," to be an adaptation of the German play recently purchased from Al Woods. The productions will have Rowland V. Lee at the megaphone and Clive Brook in the leading male role. Doris Anderson and Jean de Limur are now preparing the screen version of the play. Also in the cast will be Olga Baklanova.

De Mille Film Leads Studio Activities

"THE GODLESS GIRL," which Cecil B. De Mille is personally directing, is the principal picture now in the making at the De Mille studio. De Mille has had erected a five story structure representing a reform institution. In this building the other day he staged one of the climaxes of the production—a battle between over a hundred boys and girls.

Other production activities at the De Mille studio include those of Rupert Julian, who has just started "Walking Back"; and E. H. Griffith, occupied in the direction of "Hold 'Em, Yale." Three more stories are practically ready to go into production; one of these will be "The Last Cab."

The coming studio program will include "The Cop," "What Holds Men," to feature Leatrice Joy; "Tenth Avenue," in which Phyllis Haver and Victor Varconi will have the leads; and "Yellow Contrabrand," a Maloney western.

Other westerns are about to be filmed by Lester F. Scott, Jr., a new serial has been completed, and the Sennett studios are engaged in several new starring comedies.

Nine Short Subjects From Pathe February 12

The Pathe short subject program for the week of February 12 is made up of nine subjects, the principal ones of which are a Hal Roach comedy and a Will Rogers travel number. The complete list follows: "Everybody's Flying," an Aesop cartoon; "Pathe Review No. 7," "Topics of the Day No. 7," "The Mark of Crime," fifth chapter of the serial, "The Man Without a Face;" "Life Savers," a Rarebits issue; Nos. 16 and 17 of the Pathe News; and the Roach and Rogers numbers, "Flying Elephants" and "Over the Bounding Blue With Will Rogers," respectively.

In the Roach two-reeler are James Finlayson, Oliver Hardy, Stan Laurel, Viola Richard, Fay Lamphier, Dorothy Coburn and others; they worked under the direction of Frank Butler. Pathe Review No. 7 presents: "Wanderers of the White Wastes," "Foodless Food," "Fancy Feathers," and "Interesting People." The last is an interview with Milt Gross, creator of "Nize Baby."

Bessie Love Signed for "Broadway Daddies"

In Columbia Pictures' new picture, "Broadway Daddies," the leading feminine role will be played by Bessie Love, who has just signed a contract with Columbia. Miss Love, Columbia says, will have a role of a jazz dancer similar to the one she portrayed in "The Song and Dance Man" a few years ago.

First National Signs Doris Dawson, New "Find"

Doris Dawson, who has been in pictures for about a year and recently played leads in two-reel comedies, has been signed to a long term contract by First National, who long-term contract by First National.

Publix Managers Class

Fourth Session to Develop Theatre Executives Will Be Inaugurated This Spring

THE fourth class will be inaugurated this Spring by the Publix Theatres Corporation in its Managers Training School and it will be limited to twenty-five men. The majority of these will be men now in the employ of Publix, whose records and ability merit for them the opportunity of this special training at the expense of the corporation.

The first of these classes was organized in August, 1925, and since then three classes have graduated whose members are now engaged in theatre operation in practically every section of the country.

A special attempt will be made for the coming class to select members of Publix orchestras. It is felt that such men with musical training and background and a sense of showmanship developed by contact with theatres, can be effectively trained for managerial work in the Publix type of operation.

Publix announces hundreds of applications having been received from those who are not members of the corporation. A limited number of these will be selected. Preference will be given to men with theatre experience and with some knowledge of advertising, stagecraft and music. The age limits for members of the class are from twenty-five to thirty-five years.

Some of the sessions of the school will again be held at the New York Theatre Building. Regularly throughout the six months' course the men will be assigned to Publix Theatres in New York City and elsewhere to assist in the preparation and execution of the daily routine.

Harry Marx, director of Theatre Management, announces that John F. Barry, who organized and directed the Managers School since its inception, will again be its director.

Rossheim Stanley Chief

Former Treasurer of Company Is Named President to Succeed John J. McGuirk, Resigned

THE election of Irving D. Rossheim, former treasurer, as president of the Stanley Company of America, to succeed John J. McGuirk, who resigned the presidency to become chairman of the board of directors, took place at the board meeting held in Philadelphia on January 27th. Announcement was made that the gross earnings for 1927 were $37,060,024.75, and that dividends paid during the year were $3,181,089.75.

Mr. Rossheim takes over the executive position of the company for the remainder of the usual term of office, which does not expire for some months, Mr. McGuirk having been in office approximately one year.

Irving D. Rossheim, President of the Stanley Company of America

Mr. Rossheim has been identified with the Stanley Company for many years, and as treasurer instituted many changes which unified methods and resulted in immense savings to the company. He was associated with Wolf, Block, Schoor & Solis-Cohen in the practice of law and while there was active in the organization of the Stanley Company.

He was graduated from the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania in 1909, and was a member of the faculty of the institution until 1918. He is considered an authority on economics and corporation financing, subjects which he taught while in the university.

At the close of the meeting the treasurer submitted the financial report of the operations of the company for the year 1927, which will be shown in greater detail in the annual report to stockholders now in process of preparation. Tentative figures presented were as follows:

Gross receipts	$37,060,024.75
Operating expenses	31,574,303.51
Net before depreciation and U. S. taxes	$5,485,721.24
Less depreciation and U. S. taxes	2,250,484.62
Balance available for dividend	$3,235,336.62
Dividends paid for 1927 amounted	$3,181,089.75

Two of Industry's Heads in Irving Trust Posts

New Short Feature Type

E. W. Hammons Sees Radical Changes in Field With the Acquisition of Vocafilm

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., foresees a wide broadening of the short feature field as the result of the recent acquirement by the company of Vocafilm, by which pictures and sound are synchronized. He predicts the making of an entirely new type of short features and also the presentation with Vocafilm of condensed operas.

In discussing the company's future plans, Mr. Hammons said:

"It is planned in the near future to have some of our Educational comedies orchestrated and synchronized with special effects. This will give the theatre an opportunity to really give its short features the accompaniments they deserve. Those theatres not having Vocafilm, of course, will be able to use the same comedies without Vocafilm.

"Educational has also been considering the advisability of presenting operas and operettas in condensed form. It is our plan to bring the opera to those theatres employing Vocafilm at an extremely low figure by using to a large extent those artists either already being featured by Educational or immediately available to our company.

"In selecting operas, of course, we would choose only those best known to the public and most readily adapted to condensed form. One of our first choices would probably be 'The Mikado,' the Gilbert and Sullivan opera in which Lupino Lane, one of our outstanding comedy stars, played the role of KoKo when it was at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York City."

Relative to the part Vocafilm would play in relation to short features and the extent it would be used in shorter pictures, Mr. Hammons said:

"I cannot over-emphasize the importance of Vocafilm in the short feature field. Many theatres have overlooked suitable musical and sound accompaniment for their short features, giving all the best music to the longer feature productions. Other show houses have neglected the right sort of accompaniment for their short films simply because they could not afford it. With Vocafilm available at such a low cost we hope to change this. Comedies often are best adapted to musical accompaniment, and in many instances comedy productions are more readily synchronized than longer feature pictures."

Guilty of Bicycling, Is Fined $250

HAVING been judged guilty of bicycling "What Price Glory" by the arbitration board in Seattle, Walter Graham, an exhibitor of Shelton and Elma, was ordered to pay Fox Films, the producers and distributors of the war picture, the sum of $250.

In ignorance of the terms of contract, Graham's brother had played "What Price Glory" in Camp 2, in which district Graham was showing other pictures. This was in direct contradiction to Graham's contract, which specifically set down that he was to play the film in Shelton but not in Camp 2. Even though the offense, as was claimed, was not premeditated or intentional the board found him guilty of a technical case of bicycling, declaring the excuse insufficient.

March FBO's Include 4 Features and 6 Shorts

F B O Pictures, during March, will release 10 subjects, six of them shorts and the others features.

Leading off the program is the Ralph Ince production, "Chicago After Midnight," set for March 4. Ince and Jola Mendes, his wife, have the leads in this one. "The Little Buckaroo," featuring Buzz Barton, is the next feature for the month, having been programmed for the 11th. The other two features are "Freckles," starring Gene Stratton-Porter and John Fox and directed by Leo Meehan, set for the 21st, and "Beyond London's Lights," a melodrama with an all-English cast directed by Tom Terriss, to come on the 18th.

The shorts for the month include number seven of the Mickey McGuire kid comedies, starring Mickey Yule and scheduled for March 5; two Karnival comedies, presenting Al Cooke and produced by Larry Darmour; number seven of the Fat Men series—"Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Alexander and "Fatty" Ross—set for March 12, and two Newslaffs by Bill Nolan, to be released on March 5 and 19.

Six Shorts From M-G-M During February

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer regards one of its comedies co-starring Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy as its principal short subject offering for the month of February. It is titled "The Finishing Touch" and is one of a group that includes comedies from Charley Chase, Max Davidson, "Our Gang" and two Ufa Oddities reels.

The complete schedule for February follows:

"Dumb Daddies," February 4, starring Max Davidson, directed by Hal Yates, with support headed by Viola Richard, Spec O'Donnell and Thelma Hill; "Children of the Sun," February 11, one of the Ufa shorts which has the remains of the ancient civilizations of Central America as its subject; "Rainy Days," a new "Our Gang" comedy which Anthony Mack directed; "The Family Group," the Charley Chase two-reeler, directed by Fred Guiol and with Gertrude Astor, Ed Kennedy and Edna Marion in support; "Secrets of the Sea," another Ufa Oddities which concerns the study of deep sea life, and lastly, but not least, the Laurel-Hardy comedy, which also shows Dorothy Coburn and Ed Kennedy in support.

Paramount Releasing 15 Films During February

Seven features, four two-reelers and four cartoons comprise the schedule of releases coming out of the Paramount exchanges during February.

"The Secret Hour," Pola Negri's newest stellar vehicle, will be released on February 4. A Billy Dooley-Christie comedy, "Water Bugs," and an Inkwell cartoon, "Koko's Jerm Jam," will also be released. The other feature set for the 4th is "Under the Tonto Rim," a Zane Grey western.

Richard Dix is the star of "Sporting Goods," to be released on the 11th. Two two-reelers scheduled for the 11th also are a Jimmie Adams-Christie comedy, "Holy Mackerel," and a Krazy Kat cartoon, "Ice Boxed." "Doomsday," to be issued on February 18, is a vehicle for Florence Vidor. A Neal Burns-Christie comedy, "Just the Type," and another Inkwell cartoon, "Koko's Bath," are scheduled, too.

The Paramount-Christie special, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," will be released on February 18 also. It has a cast composed of W. C. Fields, Chester Conklin, Louise Fazenda and Mack Swain. "The Showdown," George Bancroft's initial starring effort, will be released on February 25. On the 25th are offered a two-reel novelty, "Adoration," and another Krazy Kat, "A Hunger Stroke." Bebe Daniels' latest, "Feel My Pulse," is to be released on the 25th.

"So This Is Love" Set by Columbia for February

"So This Is Love," officially set for February 6, is Columbia Pictures' first release for February.

Key City Reports

New York City

NOTHING much to shout about along Broadway last week with the exception of Jannings' new picture, "The Last Command," which did a hustling business at the Rialto. With this star's present popularity in New York City, all they have to do is to show one of his pictures and the folks flock to see it. And then Jannings gives as fine a performance as usual in this one.

They held Greta Garbo's "The Divine Woman" over for a second week at the Capitol and while no attendance records were shattered this time a pretty fair week's business was recorded. "The Student Prince" followed in at popular prices and it will probably be good for a couple of weeks. At the Roxy there was considerably more interest shown in "Sharpshooters" than the previous week's offering of "Come to My House," sending the house along to average business.

Capitalizing on the popularity of "Beau Geste," and having been advertized as a sequel to that picture (and many say it is not) the Paramount did a nice trade with "Beau Sabreur." The Beau Geste angle unquestionably helped as comment has it that the so-called sequel cannot compare with the former. The Colony had just another week with "Thanks for the Buggy Ride." It takes a prize winner to keep the cashier busy at the Colony's location even 'though the management is doing everything possible in the way of popularizing the house.

The Rivoli is giving "Gentlemen Prefer Blonde's" the house's customary three weeks' run but reports have it that the gross will not measure up to other three week stands at this house. "Sadie Thompson," the much clipped (in some sections of this country) Gloria Swanson film will come in at the end of this week. "The Circus" is finishing its guaranteed run of four weeks at the Strand and it must be said that this picture did a whale of a business for the Strand even though the last week's showed a gradual falling off. U. A. claims the second week for the "Circus" surpassed the second of the "Gold Rush," grossing $70,128, and taking in more than $150,000 in two weeks.

The Embassy is still doing a fair enough trade with "Love" and "Wings" continues to draw them into the Criterion. Aviation pictures are popular these days. Just how long "The Enemy," the sermon against war at the Astor, is going to stay is answered by some of the boys stating that it wont be long now. The same can be said for "Chicago" which is awaiting another picture. "Sunrise" is still at the Times Square and the newspaper ads are doing their best to convince the public that this picture is the last word in motion picture technique—and else.

"Simba," the Martin Johnson animal picture at the Earl Carroll, is doing a brisk business. The house claims to be sold out three weeks in advance and it is safe to say that the film is being well exploited among the many clubs and organizations, although it is at the same time just naturally pulling many in with a lobby display of interesting stills. Theatre parties and other drives are helping the Central along with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and this film has been registering very well of late. Griffith's new picture, "Drums of Love," is still worrying some of the local prophets but predictions are that the film will grow in popularity through word of mouth advertising. "The Jazz Singer" is still filling Warners Theatre.

Los Angeles

LAST Monday evening marked the opening of "The Dove" at the new United Artists' Theatre following a four week run of "My Best Girl." The picture has been playing to fairly good houses during the week.

'Fanchon and Marco's "Jungle Idea" easily captured first honors at the Met last week. The picture "Wife Savers" was rated as being mediocre so it only brought in average business.

"Lovelorn" at Loew's State scored a hit last week. Eddie Peabody in the stage offering, "Chicago," received an enthusiastic reception by audiences in his first appearance following his tour.

"A Hero for the Night" at the Boulevard did well. Gene Morgan presented his black and white minstrels. During the week there was presented on the stage each night a real hero with three universities furnishing the honored men.

"Wings" at the Biltmore has taken the town. Only in its second week, it has had many "repeaters" and is drawing splendid audiences with two shows daily, reserved seats and a top price of $2.00.

"Sunrise" at Carthay Circle has had a letdown in cash customers and plans are now being made for the opening of Fox' "Four Sons."

Since the opening of "The Jazz Singer" at the Criterion a month ago, capacity audiences at almost every performance have seen and heard the famous blackface comedian.

Chicago

WEATHER conditions again proved an adverse factor last week in Chicago, attendance being cut down by the extreme cold. Good week-end business, however, again proved a life saver.

A good advertising campaign sold "The Noose" and with this feature on the screen and an average stage show, the Chicago Theatre did fairly good business. "The Last Command" proved a drawing power at McVickers and "Helen of Troy" got away to a good start on its run at the Roosevelt. The Oriental had a week which was a little above the average with "The Divine Woman" as its feature and Paul Ash and his Gang in "Midnite Rambles." At United Artists Theatre "The Gaucho" continued to pull strongly, the successful inauguration of a Saturday Midnight Show policy adding to the box office total. "Sharpshooters' accounted for fair business at the Monroe and "The Jazz Singer" roadshowing at the Garrick had another good week.

Mystery held the screen at the Uptown, "The Gorilla" proving a popular attraction with Benny Kreuger and his orchestra providing the stage entertainment. "Silk Legs," Benny Meroff and his band and Vitaphone did average business at the Granada. This same feature also did a satisfactory business at the Marbro, where Charles Kaley and his band headed the stage program.

On the southside "The Valley of the Giants" was the feature at the Tivoli, where 'Frankie Masters and a big stage rounded out the program, business being fair. "French Dressing" on the screen, Roy Dietrich's band and Vitaphone played to average business at the Avalon, while the Capitol, with "The Fortune Hunter" as its feature attraction, backed up by the return of Al Short and his big orchestra, enjoyed good business.

Cleveland

SEVERAL things combined to make last week fall below the average of previous weeks. Two severe blizzards kept people home in the evening. And pre-inventory sales in the department stores drew the usual matinee audiences away from their usual channels.

The outstanding pictures of the week, so far as business was concerned were "East Side, West Side" and "Ham and Eggs at the Front." "East Side, West Side" was a decided hit at Keith's Palace theatre, where the ropes had to be put up to keep the auditorium from being filled to overflowing. "Hams and Eggs at the Front" proved to be such a good comedy success at the Cameo that it was held over a second week.

The other pictures just got by with average results. "West Point" was fairly successful at the Allen, where it was offered in conjunction with "Hightlights," Publix presentation act. "The Dove" at the Stillman was not the big success that was expected. Norma fans were disappointed in the slimness of her role, but enthusiastic over Noah Beery's work. It did well enough to justify being held another week. "French Dressing" at the State, a nice picture of domestic relations, did fair business.

"Gateway of the Moon" at Keith's East 105th St. theatre was not convincing enough to attract wide interest. Reade's Hippodrome had a pretty good week, better than usual, with Tom Mix in his latest picture, "Arizona Wildcat," which features an interesting polo game, and the usual Western background. The Park had a fair week with a first-run neighborhood run of "Love."

Legitimate theatre competition was only fair. They also reported a falling off of business.

Neighborhood motion picture theatres just held their own, on account of the continued severe weather.

Albany

DESPITE rather severe winter weather that prevailed during the greater part of last week, the first run houses in Albany reported satisfactory business.

At the Leland, "East Side, West Side" filled the house, the picture clicking from the start. The matinees were fairly good with more women present than expected by the house manager. George O'Brien, star of the feature, is popular in Albany. At the Clinton Square in Albany, "Two Girls Wanted" ran to good business, the newspaper advertisements featuring the fact that the star was also the featured player of "Seventh Heaven." At the Mark Ritz, "The Lovelorn" played to very fair business throughout the week, with matinees good, although with some little slipping when zero weather prevailed the latter part of the week.

"The Dove" at the Mark Strand ran to good business throughout the week, although there was nothing exceptional in the crowds and it required some building up through newspaper contests to fill the theatre. At Proctor's Grand, "The Wise Wife" did very well along with the regulation vaudeville bill. Neighborhood houses reported only fair business.

In Troy, "My Best Girl" did only fair at the Troy theatre, where it played for the whole week. At the Lincoln, "The Noose" panned out better the first half of the week, than "Topsy and Eva" during the last half.

Milwaukee

THE final checkup of the week's business in practically all down town theatres this week showed very satisfying results. Weather was clear, and not too cold, and helped business along considerably. The last few days of the week, when the weather was extremely cold, slowed up business somewhat, and kept this from being an unusually big week.

"The Jazz Singer" closed its fourth week at the Garden. Crowds could not be accommodated even in this fourth week and the manager has had to promise patrons a return of the picture. This is the first time in the history of Milwaukee first run houses that a picture has played such an extensive run. It is said to have broken house records during its stay at the Garden. "Man Crazy" was accorded fair patronage at the Wisconsin. "The City Gone Wild" did just fair business at the Alhambra. "East Side, West Side" at the Merrill was not very successful in bringing in patronage. "Wife Savers" at the Strand was exceedingly well attended. "Come to My House" at the Orpheum was a high light in a mediocre bill.

Patronage at the neighborhood theatres kept pace with the down town theatres in most cases. "Get Your Man" playing at the Garfield, Uptown and Tower drew good houses. "The Gay Defender" at the Oriental was very well attended. The new National theatre and the Milwaukee played "Two Arabian Knights" and succeeded in drawing good houses. Business at the National has been very gratifying and the owners are convinced that it will continue to be one of the more popular theatres in the outlying sections. "My Best Girl" brought in good business at the Venetian. "Swim, Girl, Swim" was the attraction at the Egyptian.

Seattle

THREE hold-over films and four new attractions kept theatre business hitting at a pretty good clip last week, with the palm for the greatest gross, considering capacity, going to John Hamrick's Blue Mouse Theatre. The attraction was "The Jazz Singer" in its third week at 50c and 75c admission prices, and the film kept the house packed for practically every performance. Gross reached about $15,000, which is considerable business for a house seating less than 1,000 persons.

Second in appeal came "The Private Life of Helen of Troy" at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. This film was generally well liked, although a bit too modern for many of the patrons. Its subtlety and satire got by with the wise audiences, however, and the film piled up a gross around $18,000. Fanchon-Marco's revue featuring Frank DeVoe and Coscia & Verdi was a strong stage attraction that helped business considerably. A very good week.

Then there was "Love" in its second week at the United Artists Theatre. The picture piled up about $16,000 the opening week, but business for the second seven days fell off to a rather noticeable extent. Averaging the two week run, however, gave a strong box office report and the engagement was considered decidedly successful.

At Pantages Theatre, "Seventh Heaven" played its third and final week to houses that were just average. The first two weeks were exceptionally big, but the third seven days hit the toboggan and gross was not good. This was the first film to play this house for more than two weeks, and a total check of the twenty-one day run showed decidedly good results for a fine film.

"The Irresistible Lover" was Manager Bob Bender's attraction at the Columbia Theatre, and it played to fair houses only. The picture was not particularly strong, and with its strong competition it checked up only a fair week's gross.

"San Francisco Nights" at the New Orpheum Theatre was only a mediocre attraction, although business was good. A strong vaudeville bill and hold-over films at competing film and vaudeville houses helped the Orpheum gross decidedly, and it was the best week at that house since the holiday season, which means a little better than average gross.

At the Embassy Theatre, "The Bells" and a popular stage revue put the week across to good gross, both the film and stage show being well liked. The closing of the Liberty Theatre made a slight difference in business at the other houses, but West Coast will profit by its closing.

"The Way of All Flesh" as a second run at the Egyptian Theatre in the suburbs was the big film of the week aside from the downtown houses, and business at the Egyptian was very good. Several re-issues have been used as double-feature bills in some of the neighborhood houses in an effort to build up business.

Pittsburgh

GLORIA SWANSON in "Sadie Thompson" was the main attraction of the picture houses, it playing at the Penn Theatre and doing a very good business, although it started off as a record breaker the end of the week and bad weather had a tendency to ease the business off. Nobody was fooled by the title and all knew that the story was none other than "Rain" but the censors cut so much from the last two reels the ending was very hazy. Gloria won lots of new fans and many more old ones back again with this effort.

"The Love Mart" with Billie Dove was at the Grand and did only fair. It might be said that Tuesday and Wednesday defied people to go out and all theatres suffered accordingly. The Aldine had a Columbia picture "Fashion Madness" with Claire Windsor in the lead but the draw was not there and business here was off.

At the Davis "Two Flaming Youths" with Conklin and Fields proved that these two comedians still have to be built up to be worth starring. "Old San Francisco" at the Olympic did better than usual due to a bolstering up of the advertising methods of this house. Conrad Veidt in "A Man's Past" at the Cameo, Universal's house, did about average. "Wolf Fang's" at the State was lost in the rush; The Harris, though, did well with "In a Moment of Temptation," a Laura Jean Libbey Story.

One of the outstanding points of the week was the fine and intensive campaign put on by the Penn Theatre for "The Student Prince," next week's feature.

Atlanta

ATLANTA theatre box-offices enjoyed a very substantial week with small difference between them.

The most exploited and heralded picture was "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Although the Howard had good houses with this long sung number, attendance did not reach the expectation of the management. However, those seeing the clever farce thoroughly enjoyed it.

Greta Garbo played before good houses in Loew's Grand with "The Divine Woman," and the Capitol with Dolores Del Rio in "The Gateway of the Moon" had an unusually good week. Miss Del Rio is one of Atlanta patrons' favorites.

Keith's Georgia enjoyed full houses with Esther Ralston in "Love and Learn," a delightful farce comedy. "American Beauty," with Billie Dove brought a better receipt for the Metropolitan than it has been having lately.

The Rialto had only fair houses with "The Opening Night," the first part of the week, and "Coney Island," the latter half.

A roadshow, "The Red Kimona," played at the Tudor to packed houses all week.

St. Louis

"THE JAZZ SINGER" went into its sixth consecutive week at the Grand Central Theatre, Grand boulevard at Lucas avenue, on January 28. The management reports that up to that time 175,000 persons paid to witness the innovation in entertainment.

The showing of "The Jazz Singer" at the Grand Central is excellent in view of the comparatively small seating capacity of the house. The rated capacity of the theatre is but 1,850 persons, so that if the 175,000 attendance for five weeks is approximately correct it means that the Vitaphone has been filling the house to capacity almost three times daily.

At the Ambassador, Seventh and Locust streets, "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" played to fairly good business for the week. It was supported by an excellent stage show.

The Missouri Theatre at Grand boulevard and Lucas avenue had on its screen "Wife Savers." It had an average week, everything considered.

The St. Louis Theatre at Grand and Delmar boulevard in conjunction with the usual Orpheum Circuit vaudeville showed "Silk Legs."

Coming downtown again we found Loew's State showing "The Student Prince"; the Orpheum with vaudeville had "The Wizard" and the Grand Opera House, the town's third vaudeville house, showed on its screen "Woman Wise."

Salt Lake City

A VERY good week was had as a whole by the Salt Lake downtown picture theatres. Weather conditions have been favorable with a few late snow storms through the week alternating with sunshine and clear, cold weather.

Attendance records were broken at the Pantages Theatre last week by the showing of "Seventh Heaven," which was received with great enthusiasm and which is to be held over for the following week, it was announced.

The Capitol has a very good week with "Two Flaming Youths" and the stage presentation, Fanchon and Marco's "Western Idea," which was arranged and presented in an exceptionally beautiful manner. Unusual merriment was caused at the Capitol by their comedy offering "Hats Off."

The American Theatre had good results from the stage success, "Alias The Deacon" with Jean Hersholt, June Marlowe and Ralph Graves. "Come to My House" with Olive Borden and Antonio Moreno was well received at the Victory with fairly large houses in attendance.

Constance Talmadge in "Breakfast at Sunrise" proved to be popular at the Paramount Empress Theatre.

"No Man's Law," featuring Rex, was a good drawing card at the Gem, as well as was Harry Langdon in "His First Flame." Crowded houses were the rule.

William Haines in "Spring Fever" was shown as a second run at the Rialto, to fair results.

Birmingham

BUSINESS in Birmingham theatres the past week was good. Pantages had a good week with "My Lady of Whims" with Clara Bow; the Ritz, with Movietone and "The Arizona Wildcat" with Tom Mix; the Temple had very good business with "Baby Mine," Karl Dane and Geo. K. Arthur, as did the Trianon, with "French Dressing." The Alabama did not fare as well as usual, with Gloria Swanson's "Sadie Thompson" (United Artists).

It is stated, by observers, that the closing of three theatres, one temporarily, has given remaining theatres a better chance to show a profit.

Minneapolis

SUB ZERO weather was the rule in Minneapolis last week, and that didn't help the box office any, but in spite of that the picture houses fared very well, principally because they had some very good attractions.

Charles Chaplin in "The Circus" enjoyed a fine second week at the Strand, and could almost have carried over for a third, but it was decided not to attempt it. William Haines in "West Point" proved a very popular attraction at the State, drawing consistently big crowds in spite of the weather. At the Garrick "The Shepherd of the Hills" was showing, and that meant that the Harold Bell Wright fans were turning out in full force. It was a good week, but not a spectacular one. "Tell It to Sweeney" did about the average business at the Lyric and Dolores Del Rio seemed to please the crowds at Pantages in "Gateway of the Moon." The Hennepin-Orpheum showed Patsy Ruth Miller in "South Sea Love" and the Seventh Street theatre pleased the Buck Jones fans with "Chain Lightning." "Ben Hur" was shown at the Grand at popular prices, and still showed its punch at the box office.

Neighborhood houses, as a general rule, enjoyed about the average business. Pictures shown included "Man, Woman and Sin" at the Lagoon, "The Woman on Trial" at the Loring and "The Big Parade" at the American.

There was plenty of competition for the week, with "The Beggars' Opera" at the Lyceum, "Blossom Time" at the Metropolitan, and "The Noose" at the Shubert.

Boston

WHILE reports coming in from outlying points indicate a somewhat spotty week, Boston has been favored with a second consecutive excellent week as a whole.
